The subject of this notice has been in the book and stationery business for a period of three years, having his headquarters at Auburn. Seeing that the demands of his trade were rapidly increasing he found it necessary to provide suitable quarters in a store room, where he could give his numerous patrons a better display of his goods, and attend to their wishes with more convenience. He consequently engaged the west side of the store room occupied by Mr. Stamets, millinery and fancy goods dealer, where be has opened up a fine assortment of goods and has so orderly arranged them, that they appear to a very good advantage.—He is rapidly filling up his side of the room with a choice selection of books and stationery, and has on hand a large supply of Trustees official books, records, teachers registers, black board material black board erasers, and has a fine supply of the various kinds of stationery, such as commercial note and other writing paper —also pens, envelopes, &c. Mr. H. makes a speciality of Wall Paper, and offers his goods as cheap as can be bought at any other store in Auburn. Give him a call.

C. C. Shaffer--Furniture Rooms.

This gentleman has been in the furniture business for twenty-five years—ten years of which he has devoted to this enterprise in Auburn. He has pursued the business with success and his large practical experience makes him fully acquainted with every department of the trade. He has recently erected one of the finest brick structures that fronts Main st., and occupies the ground floor of the building for his sale room. This room in dimensions is 70x22 feet, with a manufacturing department in the rear 47x20 ft making in all a double room on the ground floor, one hundred and seventeen feet in length. Mr. shaffer has stocked his room with a general assortment of furniture, differing in styles, qualities and finish, so that those possessing the most moderate means, and those desiring to get the best and most beautiful in design, finish and material, can find what they want in his ware rooms He also has in connection with his establishment a beautiful hearse just bought, and attends to calls both in the town and country. He also keeps a well selected stock of the various styles, sizes and qualities of coffins and caskets, and has increased his facilities for doing job work and repairing.

I. W Martin & Sons, Dealers in Groceries and Hardware.

These merchant citizens occupy the building known as "THE RED FRONT," opposite Court Square. The House has been established two years and has a fine run of custom. Their stock of groceries and provisions is full, and the assortment is choice and of excellent quality. The hardware department comprises a first class selection of shelf goods, and the firm keeps paints, oils, pressed tinware, farm bells and agricultural implements. This is a good place to trade, for the farmer, as in procuring their groceries he can also get, at the same place, his hardware. The firm have adopted the cash system, and are not obliged to charge two prices for their goods, so as to regain what has been lost by bad debts. In cheapness and in quality of goods, the firm defies competition. Don't forget the place, for you will get the full worth of your money by trading there.

One of the Largest and most Extensive Stave Factories of the Northwest—C. Daugnet & Co., Props.

This very extensive establishment is situated on the west side of the Ft. Wayne Jackson & Saginaw Railroad in the north west part of town, and the firm have on hand one of the largest stocks of flour barrels, staves and headings the writer has seen in a long time. The company keeps constantly employed about thirty-five hands, and they transport their stock to different parts of the country. It requires five thousand cords of bolts to stock their factory per annum, and they now have on hand not less than one million, four hundred thousand staves in their yard ready for the market, besides an extensive assortment of choice heading.—Their main building is 70x40 ft—their drying kiln is a solid brick 30x20 ft, and their drying shed is 30x24 ft. They also have a cooper shop 30x20, and employs a first class cooper for the manufacture of the different kinds of barrels. Their engine is a 20 horse power, and machinery of the first quality, consisting of a stave cutter, jointer and heading turner, and taken together is a full and complete set of all that is generally used to conduct a first class stave factory The firm was organized over three years ago and has been doing a prosperous business every since and find it necessary to run machinery night and day at times to meet the demands of the market. It requires a capital of $30,000 per annum to conduct the business of this factory.

Their yard occupies an area of two acres of ground, and this enterprising establishment when taken together is one of gigantic dimentions. The firm are among our trustworthy and most reliable citizens and are respected for their business qualities, as well as for their honesty and fair dealing.

Boot and Shoe House--D. C. Headley.

This gentleman came to Auburn the first of June last, from Steuben Co., and opened up a good stock of ready made boots and shoes of the various kinds, qualities and styles, on the east side of Main street first door south of the Auburn House.—His stock consists of coarse and fine boots Ladies gaiters, slippers of the different fashions, a fine selection of the different kinds of children's wear, and is made of good material. Mr. Headly has no drummer in the market, but superintends his store in person and always found ready to wait upon those who favor him with a call. He disposes of his goods for ready pay and on this account can afford to sell cheaper than those who have adopted the credit system. He intends to employ a few first-class journeymen this fall and manufacture work for his customers.—Those desirous of purchasing good work at reasonable prices for their fall and winter use will do well to remember this house, for Mr. Headley is putting his goods upon the market as cheap as the cheapest. His stock is general and his drawers shelves and store room, will not fail to present to your eye just the kind of boots and shoes you want for yourself, your wife or children.

Auburn Silver Cornet Band.

The use of musical instruments can be traced back to the first ages of our world's history, and if there is anything calculated to enliven and drown the monotony of life it is music, and how perfectly it is adapted to society in all its ramifications This popular band was organized Feb. 1873, and contains thirteen members and is advancing with a proficiency that is not only commendable but rather astonishing, for let it be borne in mind that this band has not been organized but about seven months, and in this short time have provided themselves with instruments costing $443, with uniform costing $450 and have expended for tuition and sheet music $250, making in all the sum of $1,143. The members are those of choice musical talent, and with a few more months practice will be among the best of the northwest. It is led by Mr. Joseph McKay, the other members being, F. Palmer, O. Shaffer, B. F. Culbertson, J. Abright, J. Speke, E. Coder, C. Brown, J. A. Smith, M. F Long, T. H. Leasure, H Wolf and C Moore. Favorable comments are made of this band by the press, whenever they discourse their excellent music, and it is ready to make arrangements for parties, pic-nics, excursions, &c., at reasonable rate of service.

Mr. Otto is an experienced mechanic and a fair dealer His custom is increasing and he warrants satisfaction in price and quality to all who favor him with their patronage.

Rainier and Headley's Additons.

These enterprising citizens have made a valuable addition to our town in the purchase of a certain tract of land lying in the north part of town, and have divided it up into lots. These lots extend from Carlin street north to Harrison street, and from Main east of Water street These lots are 41 in number 4 by 9 rods in length and width, and sold in prices raging from $100 to $225 per lot. Soil is of the very first quality, and the location is one of the most desirable parts of town Terms one third down, the ballance in one and two years with interest. Those desirous of procuring ground to build upon had better take a view of these lots before purchasing elsewhere.

S. U. Tarney.

This place of resort, retails groceries, confectionaries and produce, and a good assortment of selected meat for hotel purposes as well as for family use. The room is one of the coolest in town and is well regulated and neatly kept. Mr. Tarney is located opposite court square, west side, and one door north of Miller & Casebeer dry goods house, all kinds of green hides are purchased by Mr. Tarney and he pays cash for poultry.

M. E. Martin & Co.

The word, "Milliner," is derived from the name, "Milan." Millinery, for some centuries, was synonymous with fine dress goods of Milan manufacture. It is still the most fashionable city in Italy, and the center of the silk business. The millinery firm mentioned at the head of this article is one of the most extensive business houses of the kind we have visited in a long time, and we know of no place more enticing to the ladies, and more disastrous to the pockets, than a millinery establishment. Notwithstanding, we can point with pride to the stock of this enterprising firm, for it is not exceeded by any in our rival villages. They have successfully carried forward their business for a number of years, and we know of no House of the kind in our place that has a more extended patronage. A good and full line of goods is always kept on hand, and when the purchaser asks for any article that he or she may happen to want, they are at once supplied. The ladies who superintend the concern wait upon their patrons, are always found to be polite and attentive to the wants of those favoring them with their patronage. Dress goods of all grades are found upon their counters, tables and shelving, and no pains are spared to make their store attractive.

Mrs. Martin, the manager, is an experienced lady in her profession, having devoted her attention to it upwards of twenty years, fifteen years of which was spent in Ohio, and five years in our village. The goods of this firm, as we have stated, are of great variety and of the best and most fashionable quality, among which may be mentioned, fancy goods, ladies hats, ribbons, niches, cuffs, collars, handkerchiefs, a full and complete line of ladies underwear, piece goods of the different styles and qualities, towels, carpet binding, a full line of embroideries, readymade ladies suits, children's suits, fancy ties, and all kinds of dress trimmings. Particular attention is paid to stamping, and those wanting lace, sashes, hair goods, perfumery, etc., will be furnished with them at the very lowest prices. White goods of the different kinds, the firm makes a specialty, and, in fact, there is nothing wanting to make their stock all that is required for the accommodation of the public. Their goods are purchased of the best wholesale houses in the East and West, and when they have a full stock on hand it aggregates many thousands of dollars. They have engaged a lady of large experience, from the East, who is said to have acquired a high degree of skill in cutting, fitting, and manufacturing anything that belongs to the profession, and will enter upon the discharge of her duties the first of September. The firm are taking preparatory steps to move their place of business into the new brick building on the west side of Main street, now being in course of completion by Dr. J. H. Ford, and intend to purchase one of the finest stocks of millinery, dress and fancy goods ever brought to this market. They also intend to increase their facilities for conducting their business, and employ a full corps of firstclass help. The firm are too well known to require any commendatory remarks by the writer, farther than what he has already introduced.

I. M. Thomas, Plaining Mills and Manufacturing Establishment.

These mills are new, and so constructed that the material used and the machinery employed is remarkably illustrative of both genius and order.

Instead of the almost interminable sawing and planeing by hand, and the slow process involved by the use of the draw knife, machinery almost automatic complete the operation desired, in an exceedingly short period of time, and with a degree of accuracy and finish that the most experienced workman may vainly hope to rival. We are led to this vein of thought by our recent visit to the mills belonging to the gentleman whose name heads this brief notice. His engine is a sixteen horse power, and the machinery contained is of the first quality. The turning lath, surfacer, the universal wood worker, and the sawing machines, all alike run with an eveness rarely seen. The building, as we have already mentioned, is new, and in dimensions is a structure 72x48 feet, one story high. All kinds of planeing and matching is done here, and all kinds of turning, mouldings, window sash and doors are manufactured. The proprietor has sent to market forty thousand feet of table legs since the first of last April. He keeps a full corps of workmen, and pays out a large amount of money for lumber. Mr. T. has been a resident nine years among us, and is doing a prosperous business.

Swineford House—S. C. Swineford and Bro. Proprietors.

This building is situated upon the southwest corner of Main and Ninth sts., and for the accommodation of business men presents superior advantages. It has a frontage on Main street of 45 feet, and on Ninth street a frontage of 86 feet, and a height of three stories. The office opens upon both streets, and behind the desk the traveler will find the courteous landlord, who will attend all his wants and answer all his inquiries. The house, when finished, will contain forty large and commodious rooms, consisting of parlors, sample rooms, etc. All the rooms of the house have high ceilings, are well furnished and neatly kept. The entrance to the dining room is from the hall, and the appearance of this room is very inviting, with the several tables covered with snow-white linen, the tastefully folded napkins artistically arranged in cut glass goblets, the cutlery and lady waitresses noiselessly gliding about, giving the finishing touch to the tables, preparatory to the advent of the hungry guests to partake of a meal which in point of variety, cooking and serving, is not excelled in this part of the country. The gentlemanly landlords have had considerable experience in the business, and are composed of good nature, accommodating dispositions and spare no pains to make their patrons feel as though they were at home. The writer has enjoyed the privilege of being a guest at this popular resort, for the past three weeks, and it is the unanimous verdict of those who have partaken of the hospitalities of mine host, that it is in every way respected as a fine stopping place. We are glad that the House has a large run of custom and that its patronage is increasing.

The Pioneer Hardware House of De Kalb County.

This old established House is so well known that it is unnecessary to give a sketch to any great length, of its early history. Its business has attained gigantic proportions and we may properly say is among the most extensive and best retail hardware Houses of the Northwest. It has been in successful operation for about a quarter of a century, and its retail trade and auxiliary departments aggregate from forty to fifty thousand dollars per annum.

This business house was inaugurated by Mr. J. D. Davis in 1850, who conducted the enterprise with ability until April, 1865, at which time, in consequence of poor health, disposed of the same to his brother, Mr. J. L. Davis, its present proprietor. Every appointment of the house is of the best class, and carries a complete line of goods incidental to the hardware trade, which, to enumerate in detail, would furnish matter for several entire pages of this paper. The original building occupied by Mr. J. D. Davis (now deceased) was a frame structure, and in January, 1868, was destroyed by fire. But the energetic proprietor commenced the removal of the debris from the grounds and to lay the foundation for a commodious two story brick structure, which, when completed, was among the best business buildings of our place, and considered an ornament to our town. In dimensions it is a double brick 80x44 ft., built of the best material, and situated on the southwest corner of Eighth and Main streets, and is in the business heart of town. In the course of a half hour's pleasant conversation with Mr. Davis the writer learned that his intention was to keep the best goods in his line to be had in the market, and to sell them at figures that realize him but a small margin of profit. He keeps a firstclass tinsmith, and manufactures from tin, sheet iron, and copper, and has on hand a large assortment of the Jewett & Root Buffalo stoves, which have been sold by this firm for twenty years.

As we said above, it would be superfluous to enumerate the different articles comprising the stock of this popular House; but a few classes of his goods may be mentioned, all of which may be relied upon as being firstclass: Agricultural implements (of which he has a great variety), material and trimmings for wagons, carriages, buggies and other vehicles, cabinet hardware, coffin trimmings, manufactured tin and copperware, nails, iron in the sheet and bar, blacksmith's tools, mechanical tools, cutlery, glass, putty, oils, paints, cordage, woodenware, etc., etc. Mr. Davis is also agent for the far famed Buffalo Scale Works, and Nicholson, Shephard & Co.'s vibrater, thresher and separators, for steam power, and is agent for Eckstein, Hill's & Co.'s celebrated Phoenix white lead, and is agent for the American Express Company, and does a foreign and commercial exchange business, and makes collections and issues drafts for the different parts of the country.

Mr. Davis is a good illustration of the general principle that effort, persistent and well directed, is sure to make its mark, and that success is quite as likely to come from good common sense, honestly employed, as it is to be the result of genius, great talent, or some specific act of heroism or daring. His business career is an exhibition of Poor Richard's maxim, "Honesty is the best policy." The sturdy farmer, the butcher, the housekeeper, or the mechanic or manufacturer, can obtain at his establishment any kind or style of goods in the hardware line. And the business of this House has been so systematically arranged that, among the almost endless number of goods that stock his store, the article has only to be mentioned, in order to be presented at once to the customer.

Mr. Davis is ably assisted by Mr. Albert Robbins, who gives earnest attention to the interests of the concern, and is familiarly acquainted with all the branches and details of this popular Hardware House. We would advise all who want anything in their line, to remember this pioneer establishment.

City Bakery, J. J. Wood and Watson Proprietors.

This establishment has only been opened to the public but about two weeks, and judging from its short experience, the firm will have to exert considerable activity to supply the multitudinous demands of their new customers. One would suppose, from their run of custom, that the people had been without bread for a long time, for every loaf is taken from this bakery within a short time after it comes from the oven, with a relish that would leave an impression that the purchaser had been passing through a bread famine. The firm have in connection with their bakery a large assortment of confectioneries, and a good assortment of groceries, woodenware, and notions, and intend to enlarge their stock as their custom demands. Their bakeries are choice and made of the finest grades of flour and purest sugars. Their experienced baker gives his fullest attention to compounding and preparing his breadstuffs, cookies, cakes, pies, etc., and when they are taken from the oven they are all that the purchaser can desire them to be. Parties can get their supplies at this bakery, and that which is genuine. This bakery is established a little south of the southeast corner of Ninth and Main sts., east side, and their place of business and implements used are alike new, and the arrangement of the storeroom presents an orderly and neat appearance.

S. Lauferty—Clothing.

This is one of the pioneer houses of the place, and to review this enterprising house, requires us to step back 26 years ago It had its origin with Messrs. Steifle & Wolf—it afterwards went into the hands of Aaron Wolf, and from him to its present popular proprietor, who has superintended the business of the house for the past ten years. The stock consists of Ready Made Clothing in large quantities and calculated for coarse or fine wear. Mr L. keeps also an excellent assortment of peice goods, and a merchant tailor experienced to cut and manufacture garments for customers. He also deals in produce and pays cash for grain and seed of all kinds. He has a fine stock of notions and trunks, and disposes of his goods cheap. His stand is opposite court square, west side.

David H. Murray.

The Democratic candidate for treasurer was born in Seneca county, Ohio, 1833, and is consequently 41 years of age. Mr. Murray has never been an aspirant for office, but has devoted his life to cultivate the soil. He has been a resident of Concord township for a number of years, and is highly respected by all who know him. As a democrat he has ever been true to the party and bears an excellent record and character in private life, is irreproachable. In his dealings with men, he has been regarded as strictly honest and upright In point of ability he is all that the citizens of DeKalb Co. could ask for, He possesses every qualification for the office for which he is nominated, and we hope the voters of the county will see to it, that he is elected by a large majority. We congratulate the voters of the county that they have nominated on their ticket such an excellent man, and they can rest assured that if Mr. Murray is elected treasurer of the county, that the responsibilities of the office will fall into the hands of an upright man.

Louis D. Britton.

Our candidate for Clerk of Courts is a resident of the north-west part of the county and one of our solid farmers. He has been representative in our State Legislature and discharged the duties of this honorable position ably and satisfactorily. At the Convention held at Auburn, August the 8th, he was made the choice of the party for the office of county clerk.—No one can doubt as to his ability to fill the office, and none can doubt but that he will do so acceptably if elected. Mr. Britton is popular among the voters of the county and will most likely be chosen by a good majority.

John Treesh.

This gentleman is the Democratic candidate for Sheriff, and he like Mr. Britton and Murray is a sturdy farmer and knows what it is to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. He is highly respected for his many good qualities, and having been a resident of the county for a number of years, is known by our people as being the man we need for the office. His uprightness, his ability and other favorable traits of character, speak largely in his favor and we shall expect to see Mr. Treesh ere long in full possession of the Sheriff's residence at Auburn

The Old Reliable Bakery—Baker Bros. Proprietors.

This bakery, situated on Eighth st., just west of Main, was the first established in this place, by Mr. Christ. Baker. Two years ago Charles Baker became a partner, and the establishment has since been greatly enlarged and improved. They keep groceries and provisions, and have a good restaurant connected therewith, at which a good meal can be had at a moderate price. They also keep a good supply of fresh bread, cakes, pies, etc., always on hand, and are prompt in waiting on their customers.

Railroads.

The Ft Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad completed in 1870, gives us a through connection to Saginaw on the lakes, to Detroit by way of the Mich. Central via Jackson and to Chicago and Toledo via of the Air Line. On the south we have direct connection to Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville and the south, via the Ft. Wayne Muncie & Cincinnati.

The D. E. R. & I. R. R. was completed to Butler last year, giving us a direct line to Toledo, and east by the way of the Air Line at Butler. On the west we have this line running through the Eel River Valley to Logansport, where work has commenced on the five miles necessary to connect the above road with the Crawfordsville and South Western, when there will be a direct line through to St. Louis.

The Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago railroad will be completed from Chicago junction on the old Sandusky road in Ohio to Chicago this fall. This when completed will doubtless be the greatest railroad line in the country opening up the west a new market by the most direct and shortest route to Baltimore. The iron is down some miles west of this place and regular trains will be put on the road from this place east on Sept. 15th. The iron will all be laid, and most of the road ballasted by Nov. 1st.

Explanatory.

It is the writer's design to present in this issue of the COURIER, the manufacturing interests, and retail business establishments of our thriving town and we have succeeded as the reader will observe, by looking at the heads of the articles contained in this paper. We have carried to the Sanctum Sanctorum a big statement of the cardinal features of the buisness enterprises and they no doubt will be read with no small degree of interest

The writer has obtained sufficent statistics to warrant him in saying that the disburments for goods, material, &c, with the receipts realized for merchandise, aggregates millions of dollars per annum. The readers no doubt may discover some errors and omissions, and it would be strange if there were none, but the writer's aim has been to be as faithful and accurate as our time and means would admit. The merchants mechanics, and manufactures can rest assured, that in this issue they manifest a spirit to keep pace with the times, and that rival villages cannot say of Auburn. Thou art weighed

For instance. Supposing we should say that a few of our subscribers were terribly in arrears for their paper, that we have waited patiently for them to come in and pay up, do you think it would have any effect on them? Supposing we should say that we cannot run a paper without money, that we have to pay cash for material and labor every week, do you think those in arrears would take any interest in the matter? We trust so, and hope to see them without delay pay up promptly. We cannot always strive with these slow poor pay subscribers, and there will be some disposition made of them before the new year commences, by which we can get our money.

A MAGNIFICENT ESTABLISHMENT.—The most beautiful extensive and handsomely arranged dry goods house in the west is that of Root & Co. heretofore known as the Hamilton building on Calhoun st. Ft. Wayne. The entire building from garret to cellar has been remodeled, and arranged for their special use in the dry goods trade and though not so large, it now reminds one of Stewart's celebrated retail house in New York. It is the width of nearly three store rooms, with basement and three stories, all finished in the highest style of architectural beauty. A circled counter occupies the center of the first floor, while in the floor above an oval opening has been made to correspond with the counter below, surrounded by banisters. The French plate windows are the largest in the city, and the exterior of the building presents a neat handsome appearance. The whole of the building will be filled with a mammoth stock of every grade of dry goods and will be occupied by the above popular firm on Sept. 5th at which time they announce their grand opening which will be one of the grandest ever given in the west.

Items for the Taxpayer.

When the democrats had control of the State from 1870 to '72, the tax levy for State purposes was placed at 5 cents on the one hundred dollars valuation. When they went out of power there was a balance in the Treasury of over $700,000.—The Republicans then came in and raised the levy from 5 to 15 cents, and increased the valuation 50 per cent, and then had to borrow money to pay for their extravagance. If you doubt this statement take the State Auditor's report during the time of these different administrations, and you will find we give the facts. And this simply shows that Democrats have run the State more honestly and economically than the Republicans. Vote for men who will not oppress you with high taxes these hard times, men who are pledged to reduce the State taxation to 5 cents as it was two years ago. Let the tax payer stand by his own interests in rebuking this extravagance by voting not to continue them in power. If the Democracy should come before the people with such a record as stares the Republicans in the face we wo'd oppose every one of them, and ask the people to defeat them at the polls.

From Our Special Correspondent.

FORT WAYNE, IND., Aug. 18, 1874.

Dear Courier—It has been some weeks since your orbs have glanced over my familiar chirography, or your readers wasted their time upon my correspondence to the COURIER. But since leaving New York, from whence my last epistles were forwarded, I have traveled much, finally settling down for the summer months in this delightful little inland city, where I find a genial and congenial society, and a people noble, generous and frank. A city of some 30,000 population, live, active, and wide-awake, intent on developing the plenteous resources around and about them, and making their place second to none in commercial importance in the Hoosier State. Six railroads doing a large, growing and largely remunerative business; several lines of street railway, connecting with the more remote quarters of the city and its beautiful suburbs; streets handsomely paved with Nicolson, or macadamized with screened gravel, and lighted [illegible] with gas of the new Underhill patent; their churches manufactories and public buildings of the very best and most substantial build, their community composed of thrifty mechanics, learned professional, and far-seeing judicious business men in all departments of trade and commerce; their free schools a credit to any city of thrice the size; a canal and two rivers, furnishing the motive power to hundreds of busy factories, and an agricultural district surrounding the city for many miles of good, tillable soil, with willing, earnest, enterprising Grangers to manipulate it. But there is a cloud hanging like a pall over this otherwise fortune-favored city, in the shape of an indebtedness of some three-quarters of a million, that necessarily augments taxation, making it exceedingly oppressive to the poorer classes, who, I find grumble much at the extravagance of the city in many of its departments. The Common Council as a body, however, I think are disposed to operate more economically than in the past, and are inclined to vote against any and all further expenditures of the people's money not actually and indispensably necessary. As a healthy and encouraging indication of this fact, their avowed disinclination to recklessly launch out into water works, fire alarm telegraphs, additional and unnecessary river bridges, together with other wild and crazy schemes, emanating principally in the busy and mischievous brains of would be enterprising enthusiasts, but who in a majority of instances, pay no taxes and have no real, pecuniary or personal interest in the city—nothing more than a town pride to put on metropolitan airs, before the place has had an opportunity to get out of her village swaddling clothes, without regard to future consequences. At present Fort Wayne is unable to even pay the interest upon her bonded debt at maturity, nor has she for the two years last past. But what care these enthusiastic non-taxpaying gentlemen, should the city drift into hopeless and irretrievable bankruptcy, it is all the same to their individual exchequers.

In my idle wanderings through the Court House I dropped into the Criminal Court room, where an interesting trial for rape was in progress before Judge Brackenridge. The accused a young man from the country, yclept John Frank, the prosecuting witness a Miss Boston, a good-looking, buxom young maiden, who patiently sat with down-cast eyes and blushing cheeks, replying as best she could to filthy interrogatories frequently uselessly propounded. I studied close the countenance of the villain on trial for this most heinous and unnatural crime, and tried to discover some black brand of hell upon that countenance. There may be extenuating circumstances pleaded for the thief, or in many cases the assassin, but he that would rudely break down and unlawfully pluck the unblown rose of young and innocent virginity, should, with his own hands, write down his condemnation in the blazon book of hell, and he that follows quick the warm and lecherous footsteps of him, [illegible] thus, scattereth his righteousness to the winds, and bare-backed should be whipped through space by saints condemned of heaven. Fort Wayne with all her churches, her philanthropic societies and organizations, her hospital and Women's Home, her Foundling Asylum and corrective institutions, is still run over by a most depraved and debauched class of male and female slush, being mostly, I am told, the surplus scum of Chicago, that semi-occasionally slop over into this once pure and virtuous city. Defunct young ones are frequently fished from canal, river or cess-pool, but no paternal ancestry are ever fished up by the starred guardians of the city, and the inhuman murderers go on from year to year unpunished, undiscovered and unknown, save by Him before whose tribunal they will eventually appear to answer to the charges on His record. Ah! let him beware that brings to life and light the sons and daughters of illegitimacy, for they are spared on earth to curse the weakness of their fathers, and damn the means by which they came to life. There is an hereafter, a purified world somewhere, to be reached by the deserving in futurity. This wicked world is not all for which He formed in man that portion of Himself, the soul, the living whole, for if this be the only world, if this be the breath and essence of the world I live in alone, I would be armed like a porcupine, only in place of quills I would have poisoned daggers, and my skin should be like the hide of the rhinoceros, with no feeling in my soul save that of a longing desire to injure and kill. But it is all right, for had I have died years since, I might have wished myself again on earth, while now, remove me from without this windy world and I shall cling with giant grasp unto the mystic folds of dread eternity. There must be an hereafter. But enough of this. Other cities, too, as large as this, have their proportionate calendar of crime, but as I am writing now of Fort Wayne, the reference to this dark record is but incidental to the story. Should I go to your thriving little city, as I expect to soon, and write up the place, with its social record, for the press of Fort Wayne or New York, would I find any cloudy spots on the moral horizon of Auburn upon which to paraphrase? does your mind recur to none among you who, in an ungarded moment have erred? or is your community pure and spotless, and thus at liberty to throw the first stone? If so, happy be you all. Cernit omnia deus vindex.

Fairs.

The Northern Indiana Agricultural Association holds its first fair at Fort Wayne commencing Sept. 7, 1874. We have been over the new grounds and find them handsomely adapted for fair purposes, and the arrangements being made are so varied and extensive, as to preclude the possibility of a failure upon the part of the association. All it needs to insure success is a fair appreciation and patronage of the public. The display in all departments promises to be a fine one, and we have no fear but that the several counties will be largely represented. The premium list is liberal and extensive, and competitors ought to be numerous. We have before us the premium list of the Cass county fair to be held at Logansport during the same week as the above. Were it not for this there would be a good attendance from this county. Cass County has the reputation of holding good fairs, and this one promises to be an improvement on all others. The Northeast Indiana fair at Waterloo, will not be held until the first week in October. Liberal premiums are offered and every arrangement will be made to improve on former efforts which so far have MARRIED—On Thursday, Aug. 20, 1874, by Rev. Dipple, at the residence of the bride's parents, Huntington, Ind., Mr. L. P. Vordermark and Miss Letta Bender.

We surrender, we capitulate. No use talking, we've been outflanked. The other morning we found a bundle on our table large enough to contain a baby, or a nitro-glycerine machine for our total destruction. We went to work carefully to examine the mystery, and found two bottles of wine, (for medical purposes) a bunch of cigars a huge pile of cake, and a card containing compliments of L. P. Vordermark and lady. A thousand thanks to you Louis and your handsome bride and our best wishes for a bright future.—We'll promise not to go on a bender with the wine, but keep it for future reference trusting that it will be like the chosen one each day, adding to its wealth and value.

THE RUMSELLER'S REFRAIN.

Go back to your homes, you are out of your place
In a public saloon; 'tis a shame and disgrace
For a woman to put herself thus in the way;
Go home to your closets, to weep and to pray!
We are respectable men, to the world be it known,
If the quarrelsome women will "let us alone!"

Go back to your parlors; work lamp-mats and lace;
Study etiquette, elegance, fashion and grace;
Don't bother your brains about justice and right;
Be passive and patient, and keep out of sight;
If rumsellers ruin your husbands and homes,
If your hearts break with sorrow, or turn into stone,
Our funds are invested; pray, "let us alone!"

Go back to your kitchens, strive early and late,
Economize, plan, spread the table and plate,
And if one cometh not, sit down quiet and wait;
Sit down in the shadow and bide the time's flight;
We will send him to you at the middle of night,
As the good fellows phrase it, delightfully tight.

He will curse you for waiting, and mock at your tears,
And sleep while you watch, till the slow dawn appears.
But don't get excited; there is naught you can say,
While our gilded temptations are spread in his way;
If your children should starve, or your poor brain be crazed,
The world need not pity, or look on amazed;
There's a refuge for you, and the almshouse for them;
But don't molest us, we're such peace-loving men!

We have called you all the harsh names we can think;
We lead your sons through the back stairway to drink;
We make jokes of your trials, and sneer unafraid
At your efforts to honor the law man has made.
We have mixtures unheard of, on low hidden shelves,
We will see that men drink them; you can't help yourselves;
You may bring in petitions, well worded and strong,
With a list of bold signers, both honored and long;
They bear no more weight than an idle street-song.
You can't oppose strength with a woman's weak moan;
"Business men are our friends; you must let us alone."

Go back to your homes, nurse your little ones there;
Set them holy examples; and as they bid fair,
The fondest of hopes your bosoms will burn;
And when from your fold to the great world they turn,
We will spread our fine meshes to snare their young feet,
We will gather them in from the store and the street;
We will bloat the bright face, and bring low the proud head,
And lay them before you, dishonored and dead;
But don't make a fuss; don't stir up a riot;
St. Paul bade the women of Corinth keep quiet,
And that, to great minds, is a good reason why
You should suffer in silence, and sit with calm eye
While your life's dearest ones of sheer drunkenness die;
Your words are as seeds cast on flintiest stone;
We have paid for our license, and "let us alone."

RESPONSE BY THE WOMEN OF MICHIGAN.

When the last door is shut, and the last bar is closed,
When the last petty fraud and deceit are exposed,
When the hideous head of the snake of the still
Is crushed to its death 'neath our heel, then we will.
When the good Lord shall whisper, "Your labors are done,"
When our spirits beyond the Still River have flown,
When the dust hides our faces, we'll let you alone!

SWEET ARAMINTA.

[From the Saturday Journal.]

Araminta Johnson is, without question, a lovely creature. She is just 20, of a middle height, and a blonde; she has a profusion of fair hair worn in coils, and thrown back to show to its fullest extent the broad, high forehead; her nose is aquiline; a rich, natural color glows upon her cheek, and her blue eyes seem to possess the peculiar faculty of being able to penetrate into one's innermost thoughts. At least such was the opinion I formed of Araminta when she came with her mamma for the first time to the fashionable church of St. Magnus-cum-Little-Benjamin, and the pew-opener ushered them to the pew immediately in front of that in which I sat.

They were new-comers to the neighborhood, and, being unprovided with the proper hymn-books, it was my supreme felicity to hand them those I possessed. Never shall I forget the glance with which my divinity favored me when, the service being over, she returned me the books. I fell desperately in love with the fair creature, and mentally vowed that the remainder of my life should be dedicated to her.

As fortune would have it, Araminta and her mamma decided upon occupying the pew into which they had at first been shown, and Sunday after Sunday my eyes drank of my beloved's beauty, while my ears were strained to catch the sound of that sweet voice, which joined in all the responses and with religious fervor caroled forth its songs of praise.

Araminta and her mamma being uppermost in my thoughts, I felt compelled to speak of them ere introducing myself. As the reader's intelligence will have noted, the writer of this narrative is at heart and by nature a poet—a lover of the beautiful and true; but a relentless fate has made him clerk to a stockbroker, and, as though that was not sufficient to drown the minstrel's song, he had been dubbed by his godfathers and godmothers Uriah.

Yes, Uriah Quick—such is the name I bear among my fellows; but neither they nor the world in general estimate the poetic ardor and lofty aspirations which lift me, eagle-like, above the common herd. Morning and midday I am grub-delving among Consols, New Threes, Turks, Reduced Italians, Peruvians, and other sordid substantialities; but, with the closing of the office door behind me, and the echo of my footsteps upon the pavement outside, I divest myself of worldly associations, and, extending my broad pinions, take my flight. Higher and higher soars my soul, as though 'twould reach the other pole; then, with a sigh that shows my dearth, it sinks again to vulgar earth. For a time I am lost to all that is passing around me, and not until I enter my humble lodging do I become aware that a scanty and hurried dinner necessitates my lingering over the fragrant Bohea.

Proud am I to say that the heavenly music which has swept my lyre has not been withheld from the breathing, struggling mass around me. To my credit be it said, that I have afforded the public an opportunity of listening to the sweetest harmonies mind ever conceived. Yes! I have been in print. My work had for its title "Mute Heart-burnings," which was at once catching and appropriate to the matter of the poems. With respect to the sale I was somewhat disappointed. Though more than two years have elapsed since the public outpouring of my muse, not more than twenty copies have been sold.

But enough has been said upon this subject. I am neither vain nor egotistic, and I shrink from the task of further personal description of myself and my attributes. To posterity I leave a legacy that some day or other will be considered priceless; and to that pleasant, happy time, when my soul—— But to resume.

Having fallen madly in love with Araminta, it was not long before I found an opportunity of being introduced to her and her mamma. I found that Mrs. Johnson was a widow who had moved in a far superior circle to that she now occupied, and that Araminta, her only child, was, through the eccentricity of a deceased uncle the happy possessor of £300 per annum, which, however, was to be taken from her and given, half to her mother and half to an asylum for disabled and homeless cats, should she wed without Mrs. J.'s consent. Oh, how I loved the fair heiress! How I sympathized with her under the trying circumstances in which she was placed! Naturally Mrs. Johnson would look with distaste upon every suitor. To inherit a fortune and then to lose it by the caprice of a mother! No, this must not be. Araminta should not risk such disappointment. I was the gallant knight to rescue her from thralldom; Araminta and her £300 per annum should be mine. Worldly wisdom told me that first of all I ought to conciliate the mamma. My soul despised artifice, but it was for her—for Araminta's sake. And the poor girl was grateful. In the presence of Mrs. Johnson I was cold and distant to my beloved, but I felt sure that Araminta saw through the ruse.

I had long been a frequent visitor at the little Canonbury villa ere I began to fear that in the pursuit of Araminta's affection I had a rival. At first I only heard of Mr. John Smith through Mrs. Johnson, who informed me that he was a most desirable young man to know, and that she hoped we should shortly become acquainted. Smith, it was said, was a handsome young fellow; Smith was an accomplished man, his vocal ability being something marvelous; Smith was well-to-do; Smith was of good family—in short, Smith was everything desirable, and my ears tired of his name ere I once set eyes upon him.

One night he accompanied my friends to church, and with disgusting impertinence placed himself next to Araminta. They shared the same hymn-book, and seemed to be on the most agreeable terms.

I could have struck my rival to the earth when, on issuing from the church, Araminta gave me a nod of recognition, and immediately took the proffered arm of Smith. But I was true to my purpose; I showed no spleen; I was resolved to conciliate Araminta's mamma, and I flattered myself that already she was beginning to regard me as a suitable son-in-law.

Steadily pursuing the plan I had formed in my mind, and of which I felt my charmer was cognizant, I offered my arm to Mrs. Johnson, and all the way from the church to the dwelling of my beloved we spoke of poetry and the arts. A very clever, appreciative woman is Mrs. Johnson. In stature there was scarcely an inch difference 'twixt her and her daughter, and when she spoke it seemed the very echo of Araminta's voice. Therefore, when I avoided looking into Mrs. Johnson's face, and refrained from the mental calculation of how far she had advanced on the wrong side of 40, I was able to fancy that I had Araminta by my side. This gave me poetic inspiration, and I felt little of the embarrassment which usually accompanies a young man's conversation with his future mother-in-law.

"Oh, you must come in and take a little supper with us," said Mrs. J., when we reached the gate; "I want to introduce you to our friend, Mr. Smith."

Throughout our walk Araminta and her companion kept well ahead. They started with a lead and maintained it so well that they had entered the house ere we were in sight. I did not want to become acquainted with Smith; but I did wish to bid Araminta good-night, and to indicate, by a stronger pressure of the hand than usual, that I was making the way smooth with her mamma.

Smith was, as I had imagined, a shallow-brained coxcomb. 'Twas Hyperion to a satyr over again; I being Hyperion, of course, and he the distorted monster. They said he was a musician; well, if loud growling among the lower "F's" in the bass, in the attempt to drown everybody else's voice, constitutes a claim to be considered a musician, then Smith should at the very least have put "Mus. Doc." at the end of his name.

It was a welcome release when supper was announced. Then, offering my arm to Mrs. Johnson, we left her offspring and Smith to follow. Of course all this time my heart was with Araminta, although I let no desires of my own interfere with my purpose of rescuing her from the thralldom of her mother. Taking furtive glances at Araminta on the other side of the table, I could not but compare her to Andromeda. Yes, she was the beauteous creature tied to the rock of single blessedness, her mother was the monster, I was the gallant Perseus, resolved upon rescuing my beloved, and Smith—well, he was an officious on-looker, a sort of theatrical "super," nothing more.

"Ah!" exclaimed Mrs. J., during an interval of cold beef and salad, "my Algy was so fond of music. Often and often has he called me to his side and insisted upon my joining him in 'Meet me by moonlight alone.' Do you know that song, Mr. Quick?"

I became all attention at the mention of this Algy, of whom I had never heard before. Was he among the living? If so, he must be Araminta's brother. Perhaps he, too, would have to be conciliated ere the divine creature and the three hundred pounds per annum became mine! My experience with Mrs. J., and the fear that a similar process would have to be gone through with this Algy, completely took away my appetite, and I had barely strength to gasp out,

"No, ma'am, I do not know the song. Pray does Algy live?"

"Live? Certainly not, Mr. Quick; poor, dear Algy, he died in 1848. Poor, dear Algy!"

A weight was lifted off my mind; but never having previously heard of "poor, dear Algy" my curiosity was stimulated, and I determined to pursue my inquiries further.

"Dear me," I said, moving my chair closer to Mrs. Johnson, "pray what was the nature of Algy's complaint?"

"Oh! Mr. Uriah," she murmured, placing one hand in mine while the other held the handkerchief to her eyes. "You have a sympathizing heart, Mr. Uriah, is it not so?"

I admitted the fact, upon which she gave my hand another squeeze. Araminta and the annuity could not be far off now.

"He was my second, and I think I loved him better than the rest."

"Indeed," I replied. "Why, I thought Mrs. Johnson, you never had but one."

"Oh, yes, Mr. Uriah! I have had three," answered the grief-stricken woman.

Determined not to be daunted in my investigation, I asked, "Were they girls or boys, Mrs. Johnson?"

The widow's hand was suddenly withdrawn from mine; then bending upon me a look, in which pity and indignation seemed to be strangely mingled, she said, "I do not understand you, Mr. Quick."

The blood rushed to my cheeks, and I know I blushed horribly at the consciousness that somehow or other I had, vulgarly speaking, "put my foot in it." What made the matter worse was that Mrs. J.'s last inquiry had disturbed Araminta and the hated Smith, and they also were looking inquiringly at me. "Pray, ma'am, were you—you—not speaking of your chil—children?" I stammered.

"Children! no, sir!" she exclaimed, drawing herself to her full height, "I spoke of my husbands!"

Involuntarily I drew my chair a few paces from the terrible woman from whose clutches I was bent upon rescuing Araminta. It was very rude and pointed of me, but I could not help it. Lucky for my purpose was it that this revelation had not come sooner. Had I known how things were, I could not have had courage to escort Mrs. J. from church so frequently. No matter, my design was now nearly accomplished. Araminta, I felt sure, would shortly be mine, and it would be my care to see that she should not follow the fearful example of her mother.

I recollect nothing of what transpired after this until I found myself outside the house with Smith by my side. He had been talking some time ere I listened, but suddenly my ears caught the name of Araminta, and then I became all attention.

"You have influence—great influence, as any one can see, with her mother. You might put in a word for me."

"Why?" I inquired mechanically.

"Because you might be enabled to gain her consent to our marriage."

"To your marriage? Marriage with whom?"

"Why, with Araminta, of course. Don't you know that if the girl marries without her mother's approval she loses £300 a year?"

"What! have you proposed to her?"

"Not yet, but I mean to shortly. That's why I want you to talk about it to the old woman."

"What," I observed, "is filthy lucre when weighed against true love!"

"Exactly," said he, "but I don't care about the girl without the money."

This, then, was the mean, contemptible creature who had been held up to me as a paragon among men. He could not dissociate Araminta from her yearly income. The two must come together, or she should never bear his name. Oh! paltry scoundrel! Had he been short and I tall, I would have crushed the life out of him as he stood before me. But nature has made me a short man, and Smith towers a foot above my head, so prudence repressed all my bellicose inclination.

We had now arrived at a road where he had to take one direction and I the other. He wrung from me a half promise that I would say what I could in his favor, and then we parted. I was glad to be quit of him, for I now knew that he had entered the lists for Araminta; and I wanted to mature my own plan of action. I resolved to declare my passion the next night.

The resolution with which I retired to rest was strengthened when I arose; and from the first hour of business to the time when I returned to my lodging my purpose remained unaltered. When and under what circumstances was it best to proffer my suit? Twilight? Yes, in "the twilight's holy calm"—in that romantic hour when the shadows deepen, and all around gives token of the approach of night, I would address to her words of love.

I saw it all, and dressing myself with scrupulous care, strode forth upon my mission. As I paced the strip of path which led to the portal of my beloved, I saw through the parlor window, in the gloaming, a hand wave a welcome to me. A thrill of delight passed through me as I felt that it must be her—my beloved.

So well had I become known at the little villa that it was not necessary I should be announced by the servant. She, with a knowing smile, motioning with her finger toward the parlor door, gave me to understand that the object of my search was within and alone.

Quickly turning the handle of the door, I entered the apartment sanctified by her presence. As I had anticipated, she was alone. Seated in front of the window, she had evidently been expecting my approach, and, betrayed by the exultation of the moment, had waved her hand as she saw my form emerge from the shadow cast upon the path by the tall hollyhocks. I knew that her face was beaming with smiles, although in the gloom of the apartment I could not see a feature. I could picture the rosy flush upon her cheek, her bright glance toward me, the pouting of her lips that would murmur, "Uriah, dear, I love you." I knew all this was expressed on my Araminta's face, by the tremulousness of her hand and the quivering accents in which she said how delighted she was to see me.

I did not ask my beloved the usual question relative to the state of her mamma's health, as I feared this would lead to the Medusa herself being summoned to pay her respects to me, but went straight to the [illegible] of my [illegible], dreading lest Smith should forestall me. Drawing my chair closer and closer to hers, we rang the usual changes upon the topic of the weather, and then with the exhaustion of the subject came an interval of silence—a hush of nature, as it were. Still nearer to her I approached; then, taking her willing hand in mine, I murmured, "Dearest."

She had evidently been expecting the avowal of my love, for, without drawing back her hand, she whispered, "Uri, dear, go on, I do so like to hear you talk."

Thus encouraged, I proceeded: "Sweetest, you bid me talk. Ah, love, had I ten thousand tongues they could lisp no name so treasured as your own. Dearest, I love you—you know it. Long has my heart been yours. Why have my visits here been so frequent? Because, dearest, you were the magnet that attracted me. Tell me, may I not call you mine?"

"Oh! Uri dear, this is so sudden, so unexpected—give me time to consider."

"Not an hour, not a moment," I exclaimed, in the mad enthusiasm of my love. "I would have my answer at once—this anxiety I cannot brook."

"Then, Uri dear, I will be yours, and yours alone."

In a moment I had clasped her waist, and imprinted a kiss upon her cheek. "That ratifies our compact. Now tell me, dearest, how long is it since you knew I loved you?"

"Oh, a long time, Uri dear—a very long time, almost as long as I have known you. But you have not yet told me how we are to live, Uri. You know I have a small income, but it is not sufficient for us both."

Three hundred pounds per annum a small income! 'Twas thus slightingly she spoke of her wealth. Oh! how I loved the girl! I felt the inferiority of my position at once, but I summoned courage and told her of my income and prospects.

"Oh, Uri dear, she murmured, her head resting upon my shoulder and her face upturned to mine, "I am more than satisfied. Oh, how I have longed for, yet feared, the arrival of this moment."

"Then, my betrothed, you confess to having loved me ere my avowal."

Never shall I forget the estasy that filled my soul as she replid, hesitatingly, "Yes, Uri, almost from the commencement of our acquaintance."

Darling girl! "And what, dearest," I continued, in my delirious joy, "what trait in my character charmed you most, what led to my winning your heart? Was it my poetic genius?"

"Oh, no, 'twas your resemblance to Algy."

"Algy? do you mean your stepfather?"

"No, my second husband."

Great powers! I had proposed to the Gorgon of a mother. In the horribly poetic twilight I had mistaken Mrs. Johnson for her daughter. The fatal resemblance of voice and height proved my betrayal, and I sank back in my chair dumbfounded.

Next Wednesday what some people call an "interesting ceremony" is to be gone through at the Church of St. Magnus-cum-Little-Benjamin. If I survive till then I am to be dragged to the hymeneal altar by Mrs. Johnson; and immediately after she has legally become Mrs. Quick that detestable Smith is to wed the lovely Araminta and her £300 per annum. For me there is naught but genteel poverty and petticoat government. I feel it is coming. Should my spouse be again widowed (as is more than likely), may the earth lie light upon my blighted corpse!

Lively Spooks.

At length Milwaukee has a genuine sensation, nothing less than a legitimate haunted house, where the spirits make things lively by slinging stoves, chairs, pots, kettles, tables and vegetables at spectators. It's exciting, but decidedly uncertain, when a huge stove jumps up and down, and suddenly strikes out from the shoulder at an unsuspecting and unbelieving mortal.

Mr. George W. Allen, one of our best known citizens, furnishes us the facts of this peculiar case. They are as follows:

On Saturday last, at the house of Wm. Giddings, in Allen's addition to the Twelfth Ward, a sudden and unaccountable commotion commenced with the furniture. Chairs went suddenly from the floor up to the ceiling, and one broke in falling back to the floor. Crockery would fly from the china-closet out upon the floor and break in pieces. The tea-kettle flew off the stove and upset, with its scalding water, upon Mrs. Giddings, scalding her badly. An oil lamp flew from the shelf and broke in pieces upon the floor. A pail filled with earth and flowers was taken from the door and flew over a fence into the next yard. On being brought back again it went flying over the same fence. Wood from a pile went flying over the fence.

The floor of the house was filled with the debris of broken chairs, crockery, etc., etc. The women of the neighborhood all gathered there and were terribly frightened. They sent for Messrs. George W. Allen and his brother Rufus Allen, who happened to be down at their tannery. They went in and saw the destruction, but believed nothing as to the causes, but saw the results. While Mr. George W. Allen was counseling the women to dismiss their fears, the iron ladle-hook used to remove covers from the stove, and which was resting on the stove hearth, flew and struck him on the leg with considerable force. No one was as near the stove as himself, and he was ten feet away from it. Soon a newly-made pie, standing upon a table, flew past him and smashed up against the stove. He retreated from the room simply to prevent being hit by these unaccountable manifestations. That these things occurred without human agency is vouched for by scores of eye-witnesses who are beyond impeachment.

All the above Mr. Allen is willing to testify to. How to account for it he cannot tell, unless it is by electricity.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

How Ladies Dress at Saratoga.

[Saratoga Correspondence of the New York World.]

As a woman dressed in the height, not only of fashion, but costly fashion, promenades a ball-room, suppose we estimate what in round numbers she represents in cash—that is, the actual cost, as nearly as it can be ascertained, of what she wears.

Her dress, independent of lace, will scarcely cost less than $300. Worth's cheapest are $200 in gold. A set of the handsomest point-lace flounces may usually be valued at about $3,000, though very handsome ones may be purchased for less. A fine point-lace overdress or shawl costs at least $1,500. A fan suitable for such a dress is worth $50 at least, and a handkerchief about the same; and the diamonds seen with this toilet frequently represent $50,000, consisting of necklace, ear-drops, aigrette, a bouquet de corsage, and bracelets; besides these are rings rarely purchased for less than $3,000, when there are but three or four of them. So we have our fashionable women representing $57,000 or even $60,000, for there are many minor but costly accessories for the toilet, and even valuing her toilet at $60,000 is a low estimate.

But this is the ball-dress alone, and only one ball-dress, and who would expect a grande dame to go through a Saratoga season with but one? She has another silk covered with embroidery, and Valenciennes lace edges its ruffles; this will scarcely cost less than $500, and then she has a velvet at $800 or $1,000, and three or four light silk robes of light shades, trimmed with silk of the same or darker tints, for not one of which she paid less than $300 to $500; and she has other jewelry besides—diamonds, corals, earrings, necklace, bracelet, and brooch at $200; and she has onyx and diamond ear-drops and pendant and various other styles of ornaments, beautiful and costly because in fashion. She has fans to match every dress, and not one can be purchased for less than $25, and she has costly handkerchiefs without number.

Her daylight dresses are not less expensive. One of her morning-dresses of Paris muslin and Valenciennes lace cost $120, and the colored silk over which she wears it cost nearly another $100. The sash of ribbon and lace at $25, jabot for the throat $10, scarf of black guipure $12. A parasol of white silk lined with a color and covered with lace must be used sitting on the piazza or going to and from the spring, and another $50 may be easily counted in for that. Her ladyship has, of course, an embroidered batiste at $75, a black grenadine walking-dress at $200, a black silk at $300, a guipure sacque at $60, a beaded polonaise at $150, at least half a dozen hats (I have been told of a lady here who has three dozen), and not one costs less than $20. She spends $2 every few days for silk illusion to pin over her face and hat and bring down around her throat as a scarf. She has a jet belt with deep fringe and pocket, costing $16. Gloves she rarely wears at Saratoga, preferring to show her rings, but at balls, at the races, and at church, kid must eclipse the diamonds, and $3 and $4 a pair she generally pays for these. An opera-cloak at $100 and an India shawl at $1,000 are indispensable to her wardrobe. Dresses, gloves, fans, parasols, and the numberless small articles which are only pretty when in fashion, are ephemeral and must be renewed each year; the India shawl, diamonds, and lace form a fine lady's capital stock.

Fortunes Made by Advertising.

If the advantages of advertising could still possibly be doubted, the high appreciation which the business community of New York places upon it should suffice to convert even the most incredulous upon this point. According to a correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who has fully investigated the subject, the average receipts of the New York dailies amount annually to $8,908,000. Of this sum, the Herald receives upward of $2,000,000, or about $6,000 a day; the Staats Zeitung, $1,825,000; the Times, $1,460,000; and so on down to some of the more obscure sheets, none of which receive less than $100,000. The weekly papers take nearly half a million annually as their share of the advertising patronage, and perhaps fully $5,000,000 is spent in posters, circulars, steamboat and street-car advertising, etc. The writer also shows whence this immense revenue comes, and quotes the following figures from the ledgers of some of the leading business firms: A. T. Stewart, for instance, is said to spend $500,000 a year for printer's ink; Lord & Taylor, $225,000; Arnold & Constable, $175,000; Robert Bonner, $200,000; Babbitt, the soap man, $225,000; while Barnum pays out every year about $400,000; and all have made their fortunes largely through this instrumentality.

A good many merchants who seem to think that money spent in advertising a regular, legitimate business is wasted, are willing to concede that quacks, confidence men, certain classes of manufacturers, etc., etc., may use the advertising columns of the newspapers advantageously; but all persons who read the New York journals carefully, will observe that a great part of their advertising business comes from such immense houses as are mentioned above. Some of our Western merchants might profit by following such examples.—Industrial Age.

Fate of Modest Men.

The world generally takes men at their own apparent estimate of themselves. Hence, modest men never attain the same consideration which bustling, forward men do. It has not time or patience to inquire rigidly, and it is partly imposed upon and carried away by the man who vigorously claims its regards. The world, also, never has two leading ideas about any man. There is always a remarkable unity in its conceptions of the character of individuals. If an historical person has been cruel in a single degree, he is set down as cruel and nothing else, although he may have had many good qualities, all not equally conspicuous. If a literary man is industrious in a remarkable degree, the world speaks of him as only industrious, though he may be also very ingenious.—Chambers' Journal.

Advice About Dying.

The best advice to those who contemplate dying, is, don't meditate over it. That only makes living harder and dying no easier. Still, if a man will die, let him die to-morrow—not to-day. Never do to-day what you can put off until to-morrow. Wait till some of the questions of the age are settled. Wait and see if Grant gets a third term. If you must die, do it in the off year in politics. Wait till the M. D.'s have decided all about hydrophobia and trichina, because if you have ever patted a dog or eaten a bit of pork, you are a doomed man. Science has marked you for her own, and you may be certain of an autopsy. Wait till the scientists decide on the best method of disposing of your discarded body. They declare you'll be a nuisance if you are buried, to infest the air and poison the water. No right-minded man would die and make a nuisance of himself. Then the real-estate men declare that cemeteries depreciate adjacent property. Nobody ought, in these hard times, to lend a helping hand to hurt the real estate business. Wait till cremation is the fashion, and your death incommodes only yourself. No, don't be in a hurry about dying. In that matter you will find that punctuality is the thief of time, and procrastination the robber of eternity.—Witch-Hazel.

Cold starch should not be made too stiff, or undissolved portions will adhere to the garments. If of the right consistency, the article will look as if wrung out of water. Roll tightly, and let it lie for two hours. It will then iron as easily as if boiled starch had been used, and take much less.

THE BEST EVIDENCE.

The following letter from REV. E. S. BEST, pastor M. E. Church, Natick, Mass., will be read with interest by many physicians. Also those suffering from the same disease as afflicted the son of the Rev. E. S. Best. No person can doubt this testimony, and there is no doubt about the curative powers of VEGETINE.

NATICK, Mass., Jan. 1, 1873.

Dear Sir—We have good reason for regarding your VEGETINE a medicine of the greatest value. We feel assured that it has been the means of saving our son's life. He is now seventeen years of age; for the last two years he has suffered from necrosis of his leg, caused by scrofulous affection, and was so far reduced that nearly all who saw him thought his recovery impossible. A council of able physicians could give us but the faintest hope of his ever rallying, two of the number declaring that he was beyond the reach of human remedies, that even amputation could not save him, as he had not vigor enough to endure the operation. Just then we commenced giving him VEGETINE, and from that time to the present he has been continuously improving. He has lately resumed his studies, thrown away crutches and cane, and walks about cheerful and strong.

Though there is still some discharge from the opening where his limb was lanced, we have the fullest confidence that in a little time he will be perfectly cured.

He has taken about three dozen bottles of VEGETINE, but lately uses but little, as he declares that he is too well to be taking medicine.

Respectfully yours, E. S. BEST,
MRS. L. C. F. BEST.

The range of disorders which yield to the influence of this medicine, and the number of defined diseases which it never fails to cure, are greater than any other single medicine has hitherto been even recommended for, by any other than the proprietors of some quack nostrum. These diseases are Scrofula and all Eruptive diseases and Tumors, Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, and Spinal complaints, and all Inflammatory symptoms, Ulcers, all Syphilitic diseases, Kidney and Bladder diseases, Dropsy, the whole train of painful disorders which so generally afflict American women, and which carry annually thousands of them to premature graves; Dyspepsia, that universal curse of American manhood; Heartburn, Piles, Constipation, Nervousness, inability to sleep, and impure blood.

This is a formidable list of human ailments for any single medicine to successfully attack, and it is not probable that any one article before the public has the power to cure the quarter of them excepting the VEGETINE. It lays the ax at the root of the tree of disease by first eliminating every impurity from the blood, promoting the secretions, opening the pores—the great escape valves of the system—invigorating the liver to its full and natural action, cleansing the stomach and strengthening digestion. This much accomplished, the speedy and the permanent cure of not only the diseases we have enumerated, but likewise the whole train of chronic and constitutional disorders, is certain to follow. This is precisely what VEGETINE does, and it does it so quickly and so easily, that it is an accomplished fact almost before the patient is aware of it himself.

VEGETINE is sold by all Druggists.

"I Want to See Mother."

Night before last a young lady residing in the city, who had been ill for some months, died. That night her mother, worn out by weeks of care and watching, had laid down upon the foot of the bed, leaving two women to watch over the sufferer, who appeared to be in a stupor. She had been asleep but a few minutes when her daughter awoke and inquired of the nurses: "Where is mother? I want to see her this minute." The ladies explained the circumstances, to which the girl replied, "Yes, I know mother is tired out, but I must see her right now." Expostulations were useless; she became excited, and reaching over to her mother, endeavored to arouse her, but was too weak. The ladies finally concluded to wake the parent, who immediately sat up in bed and looked at her daughter. The latter glanced full in her face for a second, and fell back dead.—Sacramento Union.

Liver Complaint.

By R. V. Pierce, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate this vast amount of noxious substance, which, therefore, remains to poison the blood, and be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood, which passes to it from the heart, and it fails to perform its office healthfully. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning.

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT AND OF SOME OF THE DISEASES PRODUCED BY IT.

A sallow or yellow color of the skin, or yellowish-brown spots on the face and other parts; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache, dizziness, bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of the throat, and internal heat; palpitation of the heart; in many cases a dry, teasing cough, with sore throat; unsteady appetite, sour stomach, with a raising of the food, and a choking sensation in the throat; sickness and vomiting, distress, heaviness, or a bloated and full feeling about the stomach and sides, which is often attended with pain and tenderness; aggravating pains in the sides, back or breast, and about the shoulders; colic, pain and soreness through the bowels, with heat; constipation of the bowels, alternating with frequent attacks of diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of the extremities; rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs, especially at night; cold chills, alternating with hot flashes, with dullness, low spirits, unsociability and gloomy forebodings. The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches, and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles and scrofulous tumors. Only a few of the above symptoms will be likely to be present in any case at one time.

RATIONAL AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT.

A large variety of diseased conditions are produced by liver complaint. By curing the disease of the liver we remove the cause, and thereby, radically cure, not only the liver complaint, but also the various other diseased conditions produced by it.

It is generally the custom to take strong liver stimulants for the liver complaint, and both the mineral and vegetable kingdoms have been diligently searched to procure the most drastic and poisonous purgatives, in order to produce a powerful effect upon the liver, and rouse the lagging and enfebled organ. These medicines are given freely and in large doses, which keep the liver in an excited condition while under their influence. This system of treatment is on the same principle as that of giving a weak and debilitated man large portions of brandy to enable him to do a certain amount of work. Every intelligent person can readily see, or imagine, the condition the man would be in when the work was done and the brandy withheld; and it is just so with the liver. When the stimulant is withheld, the organ rapidly relapses into a more torpid or sluggish and weakened condition than before. What, then, is wanted? Evidently medicines that, while they arouse the liver to action, will do it, not by an irritating and stimulating effect, as is produced by a dose of great, repulsive, sickening, drastic pills, calomel, blue mass, mandrake, or podophyllin, but by a tonic invigorating and strengthening influence upon that organ. Medicines are wanted that, while they cause the bile to flow freely from the liver, as that organ is toned into action, will not overwork and thus debilitate it, but will, when their use is discontinued, leave the liver strengthened and healthy. Such medicines I am happy to have been able to discover and introduce to the afflicted for their relief and cure. As a remedy for all the various manifestations of disease resulting from "Liver Complaint," as it is usually termed, and as a blood-purifier, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is positively unequaled. By it the liver and stomach are changed to an active, healthy state, the appetite regulated and restored, the blood and secretions thoroughly purified and enriched, and the whole system renovated and built up anew.

Its action is mild, yet positive and lasting. It does not simply palliate the disease and relieve it for the time being, but it produces radical and lasting benefit.

There are, however, some peculiar constitutions on which the Discovery will not prove sufficiently laxative to unclog the bowels, and instead of taking it in larger doses than two teaspoonfuls four times a day, if that quantity does not move the bowels twice in twenty-four hours, take from one to three of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets each day, or just sufficient to produce the desired relaxation, which should fall short of a cathartic effect. In fact, the combined use of the Pellets and the Discovery from the first in the mild doses which I recommend, will be found most effective in arousing the secretion of the liver, and subduing congestion or inflammation of that organ. Do not use any other laxative or cathartic with the Discovery, as none other is so well calculated to work in harmony with and assist the Discovery in its congenial operation. Other cathartics will frequently counteract and interfere with or neutralize the power and good effects of the Discovery; they should not, therefore, be used. These little Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-Coated, Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules, on the other hand, are so compounded as to harmonize with and assist the Discovery.

A CURE OF LIVER DISEASE.

Rusk, Tex., May 10, 1873.

Dr. R. V. Pierce—Dear Sir: My wife last year at this time was confined to her bed with Chronic Liver Disease. I had one of the best doctors to see her, and he gave her up to die, when I came upon some of your medicine. I bought one bottle, and commenced using it. She then weighed 82 pounds, now she weighs 140 pounds, and is robust and hearty. She has taken eight bottles in all, so you see I am an advocate for your medicines.

A WONDER TO HERSELF.

Tanetown, Delaware Co., O., March 20, '73.

To Dr. R. V. Pierce: Your Discovery needs only a fair trial, and it will do all you recommend it to do, and more, too. When I was 15 I caught cold, and for 28 years I have been a perfect wreck of disease, and all the medicines and doctors' bills have run up at times to $200 and $300, and never any better, but worse, when I gave up all hopes last spring of living the summer through. I received one of your account books, and told my husband, after reading it, that it was too late to try further, but he said it was never too late. He went and bought two bottles, and I found it was helping me very much. Since 1841 I was troubled with Catarrh and Sore Throat, and was almost entirely deaf in one ear, and my voice was as dull as could be. There was constant pain in my head. Now my head is as sound as a dollar, my voice is clear, and I have used ten bottles of your Discovery. It has cured me of Catarrh, Sore Throat, Heart Disease, Spine Affection and Torpid Liver. My liver was very bad. My skin was rough. When I put my hand on my body it was like fish scales. Now it is smooth and soft as a child's. In conclusion, I will say I have been well for three months. I am a wonder to myself and friends. This is but an imperfect statement; half has not been told. Yours with respect, Hester Lackey.

READ THE FOLLOWING FROM THE NOTED SCOUT, "BUFFALO BILL."

Holland House, Rockford, Ill., Apr. 30, '74.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.—Sir: I have now taken four bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery in connection with your Pellets, and must say that nothing I have ever taken for my liver has done me so much good. I feel like a new man. Thanks to your wonderful medicines.

W. F. Cody, ("Buffalo Bill.")

Mrs. J. B. Cutler, Bath, Me., says: "My eldest daughter was sick for three years with Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, and your Discovery cured her."

Did space permit I could give hundreds of testimonials from those cured of Liver Disease by my Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets.

Flies as Vehicles of Contagion.

Physicians have sometimes expressed the opinion that the infectious matter of small-pox, cholera and other infectious diseases may be, at least occasionally, conveyed from house to house by the common house-fly. One is reminded of the theory by the account published of the death of a promising young man in Berlin. He was a student in a gymnasium there. He had a small, hardly observable ulcer or sore on one of his cheeks, and while in the turning-hall attached to the institution, a fly lighted on the sore. The moment after it was driven off a sharp, pricking sensation was felt in the place, the face began to swell, the young man took to his bed and in a few days was dead. We suppose it was a common house-fly, and of course we must also suppose that it must have imparted a poisonous substance which did not originate with itself. Such accidents are, of course very rare, and a case of the kind seems worthy of mention if only to illustrate the possibility and thus point out the need of care regarding some matteri which are supposed to take care of themselves.

The pun-fiend walketh like a policeman at noonday, and at night he sleepeth not. His tracks are seen in the dry commercial reports of the New York daily, where we read that, "Like the man who went out for wool and got 'shorn,' there are men in Chicago and New York who wanted corn, and got in a 'corner.'" And even from the study of the pale student we hear his strident voice turning the Greek alphabet topsy-turvy to gratify his unholy passion. Hear him: "Alpha Betacal dissertations don't Sigma Phi anything to us, but we unce Nu a man who Kappa Phi Rho bank, and Lambda pal because he Beta pile on a Gamma cards, and then Delta Beta Rho of trumps to his opponent than to himself."

A Physician Who Healed Himself.—If a railroad director were lashed to every locomotive, there would be fewer railroad accidents; and if doctors had to take their own physic before administering it to their patients, fewer people would be poisoned. Dr. Joseph Walker, of California, took this course when he first compounded the famous Vinegar Bitters, which now rank as an inestimable household remedy in all parts of the United States. He healed himself with this specific before he offered it to the world. He introduced it with a simple statement of the manner in which he had discovered its vegetable ingredients and been cured, while wandering, sick and poor, among the California tribes. He stated what the preparation had done for himself, and a few sufferers from dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, lung diseases and many other prevalent disorders, believed him, tried the new restorative and were more than satisfied with the results. In this way the sale of the Vinegar Bitters began, and we mention the fact as an evidence that in this age of intelligence and inquiry, nothing that is really valuable to mankind can prove a pecuniary failure—even though it may lack the help of capital, and have to fight its way against powerful opposing interests. Within two or three months after its introduction, the article became self-supporting, and it now yields a magnificent annual revenue.

Wilhoft's Fever and Ague Tonic.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

The Ladies' Sorosis Club, of New York, recently changed their discussion from Woman's Suffrage to Hair preparations and Pimple Banishers. They declared that where nature had not endowed them with beauty, it was their right—yea, their duty—to seek it where they could. So they all voted that Magnolia Balm overcame Sallowness, Rough Skin and Ring-Marks, and gave to the complexion a most distingue (Sorosian) and marble-like appearance (dangerous to men, no doubt); and that Lyon's Kathairon made the hair grow thick, soft and awful pretty, and, moreover, prevented it from turning gray. If the proprietors of those articles did not send the sisters an invoice, they are not smart.

Not Quite So Fast, Mr. Jones!—A horse-doctor in Philadelphia was caught changing the celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment into other bottles and using it as his own recipe. Honesty is always the best policy. These medicine-men like to follow up such fellows. It cured the lame horse all the same; but it damaged the Doctor's reputation, and benefited the proprietor in proportion. We have heard of so many Rheumatic persons and lame horses being cured by the Mustang Liniment that we advise every housekeeper, liveryman and planter to invest in a 50-cent or a $1.00 bottle, against accident. Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

The Grand Revolution IN MEDICAL TREATMENT, which was commenced in 1860, is still in progress. Nothing can stop it, for it is founded on the principle, now universally acknowledged, that physical vigor is the most formidable antagonist of all human ailments, and experience has shown that PLANTATION BITTERS is a peerless invigorant, as well as the best possible safeguard against epidemic diseases.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

What is this Great Remedy; and what are its effects? These are questions which the great American public has a right to ask, and it has also a right to expect a candid and satisfactory reply. The preparation is a mild and gentle saline cathartic, a febrifuge and tonic, and is most carefully prepared in the form of a snow-white powder, containing all the wonderful medical properties of the far-famed Seltzer Springs of Germany.

Of its effects, those who have tested the preparation are the best judges, and they declare, over their own signatures, that the preparation will promptly relieve indigestion, regulate the flow of the bile, cure every species of headache, tranquilize the nervous system, refresh and invigorate the weak, mitigate the pangs of rheumatism, neutralize acid in the stomach, cleanse and tone the bowels, assist the failing appetite, cure the heart-burn. If you are a sufferer, give this remedy one trial, and it will convince you of the above facts. Sold by all druggists.

A Means of Grace.

Rev. Milton Rowley, of Marseilles, Ills.—says: "I have no scruples about recommending Kress Fever Tonic. I rather regard it as a means of grace in this locality, because many of my best parishioners are kept, by Ague, from church; besides it makes men cross, peevish and unsocial and any medicine which will cure such ills, should have the benefit of the clergy. I know Kress Fever Tonic will cure, because I tried it myself and have seen it tried, and I gladly do what I can to introduce so reliable a medicine to my friends. VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

(which is 650 bushels) besides flax and other seeds. He pays to our farmers as we see from this statement, in the aggregate from 100 to 1000 dollars per day, which is circulated among the merchants and inhabitants of our county. Mr. Cuppy also makes it a point to keep on hand a full supply of salt, which can be obtained of him by the barrel. He has charge of the Eel River Elevator at the depot and intends to devote his whole attention to the trade, and pay our farmers the highest cash price for the grain and seed delivered to him at his headquarters. He has been in the enterprise from his early youth—has grown up in the trade and is highly respected as a fair dealer and an upright man. We have no doubt but that his business this fall will be large, as there is a great abundance of grain to bring into the market. We wish him and his enterprise continued prosperity and success.

P. S. Mr. Cuppy is putting in a steam power for running the elevator and for the purpose of shelling corn.

D. D. Snyder—Excelsior Hardware Store

This energetic citizen, whose success has been most signal and gratifying, has been in the hardware business among us for the period of one year, meeting with a degree of success that has hardly been achieved by many whose merchantile experience has been of much longer duration. No one can hope to succeed in life merely by the force of his own genius, any more than he can hope to live without creating some influence for good or evil in the community in which his lot is cast. Success in life is not the effect of accident or chance, it is rather the result of the intelligent application of certain fixed principels to the affairs of every day and each man must make this application according to the circumstances by which he is surrounded. No one could have understood these principals which underlie the success of a business undertaking more thoroughly than did Mr. Snyder at the very outset of his business career.—While a tiller of the soil he turned attention to the sale of Agricultural Implements, and the success he met with gradually led him to adopt as his profession the Hardware business. In 1872 he made a purchase of the lot, upon which his large and commodious three story brick building stands—but unfortunately after the building was erected and stocked with a valuable assortment of implements the foundation gave way, and the walls on the east and west fell, doing damage to the amount of from $5000 to $6000; but Mr. Snyder being a man of perseverance, energy and pluck, began at once to repair the ruins, after which he re-stocked his store with a new assortment of agricultural implements and a large stock of hardware. His stock is general, embraceing all that is contained in a first-class hardware, among which we may mention oils, paints, glass, nails, tinware, pumps, stoves, doors, window sash and building material. He also keeps belting for machinery, plows, harrows, threshing machines, reapers, mowers, grain drills, &c. It would be difficult to specify in a short article like this all the goods found in his Excelsior Hardware Store. One must visit his rooms in order to know how extensive a stock his rooms contain. Mr. Snyder keeps in his employ a first-class tinner and his house is doing a successful business—and we commend it to the patronizing public for honesty and fair dealing.

The Eagle Flouring Mills—Louis Bowers Proprietor.

The manufacture of flour has undergone wonderful changes during the past years, and the Auburn Eagle Mills, in its arrangements, bears but a small resemblance to its prototype of half or even a quarter of a century ago. These Mills have acquired an extensive reputation for the manufacture of its excellent flour and custom work. The building itself is nearly new and is a structure 64x36 feet three stories high, and no effort was sparded in equiping it with the best of machinery. Its Engine is a 40 horse power, and the mill is capable of grinding 240 bushels of grain in 24 hours. It is supplied with three run of stones. The management of the manufacturing department, which, by the way requires a decided adaptation, is in the hands of E. R. Houston, one of the most experienced and practical millers in the country. He has followed the art of milling from early life, and we heartily congratulate the proprietor, Mr. Bowers, for his good fortune in the engagement of such an excellent hand. The flour manufactured by him is the only guarantee needed to recommend him to any flouring mill in this section of the country. The mill contains the "Half Chest Merchant Bolt," and the "Custom Bolt," which is a 22 feet reel, and is 40 inches in diameter. Indeed, the popularity of these mills extend far into the country, customers coming from 10 to 20 miles to have their grain ground.

Mr. Bowers, the proprietor, is an old respected resident and is highly regarded, and is among our most upright citizens.

F. D. Ryan & H. Mader--Livery and Sale Stables.

This establishment is situated in the barns immediately east of the Auburn Hotel, and contains an assortment of carriages, horses rarely obtained at a livery stable. The firm have no taste for crow bates or cripples, neither do they expend money for horses that either balk or run-a-way. When they buy they get none but safe and most reliable, at the same time that class of animals that travel at the rate the traveler desires, consequently are all valuable and ready to perform Their carriages and buggies are single and double, open and with-top, capable of carrying one or more as their patrons desire, and as to their quality and elegant appearance they cannot be excelled in any livery stable of the north west, several of which are costly and decorated with the finest trimmings. Their harness is made of the best material and purchased expresely for their use. Their robes, whips, and other equipage favorably compares with the vehicles, so that when harnessed up and put together their customers in possession of a turn-out with which they feel proud. The charges these gentlemen make for their equipments are no more than what our friends have to pay for inferior accoutrements. They keep from nine to ten of these turnouts for their patrons, and pride themselves in keeping their establishment in a neat, healthy and stylish manner. The stables were first opened by Mr. Griswold, who disposed of his stock to Joseph Rainier. Mr. R. superintended the enterprise successfully for four or five years, and then disposed of it to Mr. F. D. Ryan, who has had the institution in his hands for a period of from two to three years and has recently associated with him in the business Mr. Mader who has its chief superintendance. These gentlemen have in connection with their livery an Omnibus which they run to and from all the passenger trains of the different rail-roads, and also send it out on funeral occasions when it is required. These gentlemen contemplate the erection of a commodious brick building some time this fall and when completed will move their livery thereto. Mr. Ryan the sr., member of the firm has served the county as treasurer for a period of five years, and his political history and past record is so favorably known that it would be superfluous for us to eulogize it. This company are doing a successful and prosperous business, and are worthy the patronage they receive.

County Officials.

J. R. Lanning, Clerk.

J. R. Lanning, Clerk of Courts.—This official has been a faithful and acceptable officer of our county for a period of seven years. His courteous demeanor and exemplary life have won for him a multitude of friends. Such citizens are the only ones our people should seek for, to occupy posts of honor, and were this the case, we would have no trouble with them. This gentleman retires from his official position reflecting much honor upon himself and credit upon his supporters who elected him. Mr. Lanning is too well known to require any eulogy from the writer, and we content ourself by knowing that he is highly respected and beloved by our citizens.

Wm. McIntyre, Auditor.

Mr. McIntyre has been a resident of this county seventeen years, and has been a Democrat from his boyhood days He has been elected to several positions of honor and like Governor Allen of Ohio, has never been defeated. This is not owing to any political wire working on his part, or political intrigue, for he is a modest, unassuming gentleman possessing stern integrity, and eminently qualified to fill the responsible positions for which he has been chosen. He has been a citizen of Sedan this county and known throughout this section as a trustworthy man. His books in the Auditor's office are the best kept set of records we have examined in a long time, and if re-elected to his present position for another term, the office will be in the hands of one of experience, as well as in the hands of an upright man. We congratulate the county in making Mr. McIntyre their choice for Auditor, and hope that he will be re-elected by a large majority.

D. Z. Hoffman—Recorder.

This official moved to DeKalb county in the year 1845, and has been a resident among us for a period of nearly thirty years. He has been chosen to fill several positions of trust, filling the various offices and discharging the labors thereof with a careful and exact observance of duty, so as to satisfactorily discharge his obligations to his office as well as to the public. He was first appointed Clerk of the town, afterward elected, and continued in the same position for a series of years — When the law was amended so as to do away with a plurality of trustees, Mr. Hoffman was chosen to serve as the one to officiate in this capacity. After his term as trustee expired, he was elected assessor of the township, after which he was eleted to the responsible position of Recorder, and after his first term expired he was re-elected by an increased majority, and returned to the same office, and is now about half through his second term. This is a meritorious record for the writer to refer to, and reflects honor upon the subject of this brief notice.

Nicholas Ensley--Treasurer.

This citizen served the country as a soldier during the late war, and for his bravery in time of battle was promoted to second lieutenant. He was honorably discharged after four years of conflict and returned to his home, where he was again promoted by his friends to the responsible position of treasurer of this county. He is expecting to be re-elected to the same office another term. He has filled his office acceptably and enjoys the confidence of the community.

Wm. L. Meese—Sheriff.

This officer of DeKalb co. was chosen by the popular vote of the people. nearly two years ago. Has been a highly respected citizen of this vicinity for 20 successive years, and is consequently well and favorably known. He has served the county acceptably and we understand his chances are flattering for a re-election, but should he retire from the responsible office of Sheriff, he will carry with him the regards of those who know him.

ATTORNEYS.

Rose & Hartman.

J. E. Rose, of the firm of Rose and Hartman. This attorney and counselor at law, has been one of the prominent citizens of our county for a series of years, and an acceptable member of the bar for about eight years. He studied under J. B. Morrison formerly of Auburn, and opened his first office in Butler this state. He ranks among the most reliable counsellors of the place and is successful in his profession.

E. D. Hartman, the Junior member of the firm is also respected for his legal ability, and is an excellent advocate. He has been in the practice for a series of years, and a gentleman of practical experience. He is a graduate of the State & Union law school of Cleveland O. was also a pupil at Ann Arbor Mich Has been a member of the Assembly, and prosecuting attorney of the circuit court three years. The firm was formed in July 1873, and possess the only abstracts of the records of the county.

H. C. Peterson.

This gentleman began the study of law under T. R. Bobo of Decatur Ind 1867, who is considered one of the most proficient lawyers in that part of the state. Mr. Peterson has been a successful practitioner of our place for four years and is one of our promising men. He possesses a large and valuable library. His practice is commensurate and his legal attainments meritorious. Office south-west corner of Main and Seventh sts. up stairs.

Physicians.

Physicians--Dr. J. H. Ford.

This practitioner has lived in the county and devoted his time and talent to the medical profession twenty-nine years. He devoted his energies to a thorough course of reading, was a successful physician, but in consequence of ill health, he retires from the field. He, in cases of difficulty councils with the medical fraternity, but aside from this he performs no treatment. He has the utmost confidence in the following professionals who are cultivating the field, and esteems them highly for their works sake.

Dr. J. B. Casebeer--Physician & Surgeon

Began the study of medicine in 1862 with Dr. Martin, a very reputable and successful practitioner in the north eastern part of Ohio. He attended medical lectures at Ann Arbor Mich., and after a few years of close study presented himself before the Ohio board of Medical examiners, and was sent to assist Surgeon Cheney in the fourth division of the U. S. A. hospital. Soon after he was placed in charge of one division of the tent hospital, mentioned above, and still later, promoted to the Surgeon's charge of the fourth division of said U. S. A. hospital, which at this time was made the fever division of the said hospital and camp. He remained in charge of the above division until the winter of 18-65 at which time he was commissioned by Governor Todd as first assistant surgeon of the 103rd Reg't. O. V. Infantry. He joined his regiment in North Carolina soon after, and remained with it until it was mustered out of service. Then he returned to his former office where he continued to study and assist with his precepter until fall. Then he went to the city of New York and took another course of lectures in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College at which place he graduated with distinction. In the latter part of March 1866 he came to Auburn and opened his office, and engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery. The doctor is now acting surgeon for the D. E. R & I. railroad Co, from Butler to Logansport, and is medical examiner for the Union Central Life Ins. Co. located at Cincinnati, O. and we learn from the companies agent that his services are duly appreciated and highly complimented. This gentleman's qualifications for his profession is undoubted, and he is now reaping the reward he so justly merits.

Dr. J. A. Cowan--Physician and Surgeon

This professionary studied medicine for three years, under the instructions of Dr. T. T. Darwin, of Decatur, Ind., one of the most scientific and skillful men in his profession in that part of the State, after which Mr Cowan took his first course of lectures in the Rush Medical College in the City of Chicago, Ill. In 1868 his second course was entered upon in the Detroit Medical College in 1869, at which time he received his diploma, and began the practice of medicine both surgical and general in our village. The writer is creditably informed that Mr. Cowan graduated with distinction, being one of the first in his class. The writer refers to this with pleasure, for it reflects honor upon this gentleman as a practitioner and also upon his profession, and places him high above those quacks who are practicing medicine from a little light received by reading a few receipts. The doctor's ability has secured for him an excellent class of patrons, and he is possessing the reward he so richly merits. His office is located on the west side of Main st., up-stairs.

Wm. S. Allen.

This medical gentleman has, like Dr Ford, been a physician for a long series of years, and has brunted the storms of twenty-five winters in attendance upon his patients. He practiced nineteen years in the county of Wayne, O. four years in Ashland, Ashland Co., O., after which he came to Auburn, and settled among us. Long experience and practical activity eminently qualifies him to attend any diseases incident to man in this climate We are glad to know the doctor has a good reputation as a physician and is prospering in his profession.

D. A. Sebring.

Has given his attention to the study and practice of medicine for about 20 years, about 18 years he has practiced in this State, He has a certain cure for cancers, and can remove them without the use of surgical instruments or severe pain. The remedy has been in use for 40 years with that degree of success that warrants him in saying to those afflicted with cancers that he has a sure relief from the sufferings of this malady and a restoration to health.—The doctor has a cancer in his office on exhibition, taken from the breast of a lady in this place. The doctor can be consulted either in person or by letter.

W. B. Graham,

attended two terms at the Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, and has been in the practice since last May in our town, and is a partner of D. A. Sebring. Office south west cor of 6th and Main streets.

How the Republicans Punish Their Knaves

From the Cleveland Plaindealer.

The corruption of the Republican leaders have grown a taite subject for newspaper comment; yet it is full of significance and important to the public, and we have been tempted to return to them by chance glance at the address sent out to the electors of the United States by the National Central Committee of the Republican party wherein this language is used: "The Republican party unlike the Democratic party, investigates the doings and punishes the rascals and knaves of the party." Senator Morton, in his Terre Haute speech, uses substantially the same language. In this connection we can not resist the inclination to show, breifly, how Radicalism has punished the rascals and knaves. We admit that there have been investigations." Radicalism will investigate its preachers and office holders on short notice; but as to the punishment—heaven save the mark? This boast of the Republican National Committee and Senator Morton seems to be the campaign key note of the party; but let us look into it a little. Take the custom house case in New York. Was clearer evidence in the establishment of charges of embezzlement and downright robbery ever adduced? And yet it was quietly brushed aside by an immaculate Republican commitee, and the inculpated parties daubed from head to foot with whitewash. It is useless to cite dates or particulars; the whole case is fresh in the mind of every newspaper reader. Every body, too, is familiar with the Credit Mobilier scandal and the connection therewith of men high in the public confidence, which was shamefully dismissed by making scapegoats of two of the accused parties—no doubt because one was a Democrat whom it would not do to let him go unpunched, although it was a notorious fact that he was not a whit more guilty than the whitewashed parties—representative men of the Republican party, one of them the Republican Vice President of the United States Then we come to the knaves of the Republican party whom Grant has produced out of the penitentiary, or as a consolor for being driven from places disgraced by their presence has appointed to their exalted position for no earthly reason than that they are consequental members of the party.—Dodge, Yerker, Boss Shepherd and Rrichardson are prominent instances. The cases of two later are especially noticeable. Shepherd was the head of as bad a nest of swindlers, every whit, as that of Boss Tweed; and when the corruption of the gang became so unendurable that Congress was forced to take the matter in hand and squelch the district government and place its affairs in the hands of a commission. Grant had the cheek to appoint the chief swindler one of the commissioners. Richardson, while Secretary of the Treasury, became involved in a villinous conspiracy to defraud the business community, and upon his being driven by public opinion to vacate his seat, Grant hastened to ease the ex-Secretary's troubled breast by nominating him to an exalted judicial position, which nominated the Radical Senate had the shamefacedness to confirm—although we should do that body the justice to say that it turned its back upon the Boss. Only within a day or two Grant has given another instance of this contempt for public opinion by appointing the notorious Clayton, United States district attorney for the Western district of Arkansas. To be sure these are acts of the President, but they are acts inspired by his advisory surroundings, and by the invariable spirit and policy of the party of which he is the national figure head. We can bring this matter a little nearer home The Republican party is in the habit of investigating and punishing its offenders is it? Well if it is, the rally of the "honest old" Republicans of the Nineteen District of Ohio to the support of James A. Garfield for the Cugressional nomination is a curious way of showing it. Mr. Garfield has been mixed up in three very bad scrapes, viz: the Credit Mobiler, the salary grab, and the Washington paving swindle. We need not go into particulars to show just the length and breadth of his offending; his guiltiness has been rendered perceptible without the aid of spectacles. But the Republicans of Nineteenth District who belong to the party which "investigates their doings and punish its rascals and knaves," but their creed in practice by coming up like brave consistant sheep to return their beenlating pet to office.

The contrast between this boast of tha Radical managers and the actual practice of the party is as wide as the universe. It has ever been a favorite pretense of the cominant party that it punishes its knaves although there has never been a more manifest fact than that it does nothing of the kind. It sends out its criers to make this boast thought the land, and then keeps right on condoning the act of rascals and shielping them from punishment, just as though the public were a pack of fools and it was a very monitor against the people. But Justice is a zealous watcher, and the end approacheth.

How Father Cured His Horse.

Well,' said Reuben, "father always wanted a horse, but he never felt as if he could afford to buy one. But one day he was coming afoot from Hildreth and a stranger ask him to ride.

Father said, "that's a handsom horse you are driving. I should like to own such a one my self."

What will you give for him?" asked the man.

'Do you want to sell?' says father,

Yes I do, and I'll sell cheap'

'Oh, well, it's not much use talking said father, "but would you take seventy-five dollars for him?'

'Yes, you may have him at that," says the man, as quick as a flash, "but you'll rue your bargain in a week.

'Why what ails the horse?' father asked.

'Ails him? You'll soon see. If he has a will to go he'll go, but if he takes a notion to stop, all creation can't start him. I might beat him an hour and he wouldn't budge an inch.

'I'll take the horse,' says father. what is his name?'

'George,' is his name.

'Well, father brought him home and we boys were mightily pleased. We fixed a place for him in the barn, and curried him down and fed him well, and father said, 'Talk to him boys and let him know that you feel friendly

'So we coaxed and petted him, and the next morning father harnessed him and got in the wagon to go. But George wouldn't stir a step.

'Father got out and petted him, and we boys brought him apples and clover tops, and once in a while father would say Get up, Georgie!' but he did not strike the horse a blow. By and by, he says, 'This is going to take time. Well, George, we'll see who has the most patience, you or I.' So he sat in the wagon and waited full tow hours befor the horse was ready to start, but when he did there was no more trouble for that day. The next morning it was the same thing over again only George gave in a little sooner

'All the while it seemed as if father couldn't do enough for the horse. He was round the stable feeding him and fussing with him and talking to him in his pleasant, gentle way, and the third morning when he had fed and curried, and harnessed him with his own hands, somehow there was a different look in the hoorse's eyes.

'But when father was ready to go Geore put his feet together and laid his ears back, and wouldn't stir. Well Dove was playing about the yard, and brought her stool and climbed up by the horse's head.

'Dove, tell what you said to George that morning.'

'I gave him a good talking to, said the little girl. 'I told him it was perfectly ridiculous for him to act so, that he'd come to a real good place to live where everybody helped everybody, and he ought to set a good sample to the other horses. That's what I told him. Then I kissed him on his nose.

'And what did George do?'

'Why he heard every word I said, and when I got through he felt so Shamed of himself he couldn't hold up his head; so he just dropped it, till it most touched the ground, and he looked as sheepish as if he had been stealing a hundred sheeps.'

'Yes,' said Reuben, 'and when father told him to go he went off like a shot. He has never made any trouble since. That's the way father cured balky horses. And that night when he was unharnessed, he rubed his head against father sholder, and told him as plain as a horse could speak that he was sorry

A Gentleman at Lake George, after waving his handkerchief for half an hour or more at a unknown lady, whom he discovered at a distance point on the shore, was encouraged by a warm response to his signals to approach his charber. Imagine his feelings, when on drawing nearer, he saw that it was his own wife whom he had left at the hotel but a short time before. "Why, how remarkable we should have recognized each other at such a distance" exclaiming both in one breath and then they changed the subject.

Republican Impudence

[Indianapolis Sentinel]

The impudence of politicians is something astonishing. The Republican organs of Ohio and Indiana denounce the resolution of the Democratic convention of this State to pay the five-twenty bonds in greenbacks as repudiation: yet in 1868, the Republicans of Ohio platform declared

That the Republican party pledges itself to the faithful payment of the public debt according to law; and we hereby express our conviction that, according to the laws under which the five-twenty bonds were issued, said bonds should be paid in the currency of the country, which may be a legal tender when the government shall be prepared to redeem such bonds.

The Indiana convention was not far behind. Its repudiation plank was as follows:

"The public debt, made necessary by the rebellion, should be honestly paid and all the bonds issued therefor should be paid in legal tenders, commonly called greenbacks, except when by their express terms they provide otherwise, and paid in such quantities as will make the circulation commensurate with the commercial wants of the country.

In view of these resolutions, it may be remarked that the virtuous indignation role which our administration friends have so hastily assumed may as well be laid aside.

Mr. Medill, of Chicago, has lately been traveling over the greater part of Europe, and we believe that in the following extract from a recent letter of his, written from Vienna to the Chicago Tribune, "he knows whereof afflams." Speaking of life in that capital, he says:

When the weather premits the Vienna people have a great penchant for taking their beer and coffee out of the doors, under the shade of a tree or an awning. In the public parks their are whole acres of metalic tables placed under the trees, and thousands of all classes arrange themselves around them every fair evening. Sunday inclusive to drink coffee or beer—and a few wine—gossip, smoke, discuss the affairs of the day or the morrow, read papers and listen to the band discoursing excellent music from a pavillion in the midst of the trees, fountains, statuary and flowerbeds. The best order, decorum and behavior prevail. There is no whisky drinkers, and concequently no noise, disturbance, rowdyism or feaferish conduct on the part of any person. Whiskey is the devil that makes the mischief wherever it tolerated, whether in America, England, Ireland or Scotland. Their are 200,000,000 of people in Europe, outside of Great Brittian and Russia who drinks nothing stronger than wine or beer, and among all that vast mass outnumbering the population of the United States five times, there is less drunkenness and fewer arrests made on charge of "drunk and disorderly," than in the single city of Chicago, which contains not one fifth-hundredth part of their population. This is an absolute fact—a nake truth—which it would be well for liquor advocates and prohibitionists to turn over their minds, digest well and draw rational conclusions therefrom. A "crusade," against whisky as a beverage would be a legitimate and beneficent war, which if crowned with success by the extirpation of the accursed fluid from the entire Union, would be a most inestimable blessing. As a temperance measure, the tax on whisky should be quadaupled, while that on light wine should be reduced to one fourth of existing imposts.

This morning Hon. J. A. Henricks receipted to Treasurer Campbell of the school board for the $600 voted him by the council for services. Dr. Hendricks, however, refused to take but $400 and the remaining $200 consequently reverts to the spicial school fund. Good for Dr. Hendricks.—South Bend Tribune.

Two years ago Dr. Hendricks was the Liberal candidate for Congress against Gen. Packard, Republican.—Henricks was recoganised as a man of the strictest integrity and as an honest advocat of reform. Yet he was disastrously beaten at the pols, and the Tribune folks, like other rockrooted partisans, helped to bring about this result. Packard was elected, and, encouraged by demonstrations of object party loyalty, cast his vote for the "big grab." Point your own moral.—Banner.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, SEPT. 3, 1874.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Lexington's four-mile time has been beaten by half a second. At Saratoga, Aug. 20th, Fellowcraft made the distance in 7:19½, the fastest time on record.

What purports to be an abstract of the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee was given to the public through the columns of the New York papers of the 23d of August. The report says that, after close examination of Rev. Mr. Beecher, which developed no important additional facts, the evidence in the case closed. The report then briefly and tersely gives the conclusions of the committee. It states that, on one hand, they find the accused person a man of well-known character, against whom, during a ministry of 25 years and a life of over 60, not a single charge of a lack of duty, much less of immorality, had ever been made—a man of great Christian goodness and high principle; on the other hand is the accuser, a man of bad reputation, and whom the testimony had shown to be a perjurer and an adulterer. His charges are unsupported by any distinct evidence or corroborative proof. Many of his main statements are flatly contradicted by other persons of better character than the accuser, besides the accused himself. The proof seems almost all on one side. Mr. Tilton fails to prove anything, except that wrong had been practiced toward him. Mr. Beecher manfully confesses his wrong, and shows by his letters that he bitterly regretted it. The committee, therefore, comes to the conclusion that Beecher throughout this painful inquiry has acted in an open, undeviating manner, while his accuser's course has been subtle and underhanded: and the finding is that Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is entirely guiltless of the accusations brought against him. A New York special says that Mr. Beecher's statement was cut in large part and in important particulars. It is not all the statement he wrote, nor all the explanation he gave, and it is now asserted that the rest will be made part of a second statement, to be prepared by his lawyers. It is claimed that much manipulation of Beecher's statement has been done by his lawyers, who are afraid of saying too much.... Before leaving for the White Mountains, Mr. Beecher expressed his determination to bring suits for libel against Moulton and Tilton, because of the publication by the former of his statement.... Four libel suits are preparing by Mr. Tilton's counsel against the New York Tribune, World, and Sun, and the Brooklyn Eagle. The damages in each case will probably be placed at between $60,000 and $100,000.... The Rev. Warrick Martin, who became conspicuous in New York in the revenue service immediately after the flight to South America of Joshua F. Bailey, the defaulting Collector of Internal Revenue, is stated to have filed his claim for $4,000,000, which he says, is due him from the Government for informers' moieties in many costly and fruitless prosecutions begun by him in New York against distillers.

Specials from the White Mountains of New Hampshire state that Mr. Beecher preached at the Twin-Mountain House on Sunday, August 23, to an immense throng, people flocking to the hotel from a radius of twenty-five miles. The reverend gentleman is reported as appearing to feel his usual hearty cheerfulness, but some note in him that which suggests the thought that his cheerfulness is now assumed, and that the brooding which has been long and deep, over his troubles, has worn him much.

Rev. Mr. Beecher has signed sworn to a paper drawn up by his counsel, Mr. Shearman, which is an explicit denial of all charges made in the complaint against him by Mr. Tilton. Mr. Beecher is still at the Twin-Mountain House.

There is a temporary lull in the operations of the principals in the Brooklyn scandal. It is probable that the report of the Investigating Committee, which is to be published in a short time, will renew the excitement.... A man giving the name of Gustave Meyer has been arrested in New York, having been recognized by one Lewis Moses as Theophile George Kierstein, who is alleged to have robbed the Kulm Credit Bank of Western Prussia, last December, of $180,000 in bonds and money. Kierstein was a director in the bank, and had not been seen since the defalcation, until his arrest. It is said he committed many forgeries besides the embezzlement, and that one man in Kulm lost $75,000 by him, and several banking houses in Berlin were victimized to the amount of $30,000.

The West.

On Friday, Aug. 20, Joel Moritz was shot at Indianapolis by Rev. George C. Harding, editor of the Indianapolis Sunday Herald, under the following circumstances: Harding had an interesting daughter, aged eighteen years, to whom he was much attached. On the morning of the 20th she confessed that she had been seduced by Moritz; also that she had taken laudanum to cover her shame. Upon receiving this statement Harding rushed down town, and an hour later came upon the seducer of his daughter. Without saying a word he drew a revolver and began firing upon Moritz, who fled, crying murder. Two shots were fired, one passing through an arm, and the other through the body near the heart; the other three missing. Moritz fell. Friends conveyed him to his residence, where he now lies in a critical condition. His assailant walked rapidly home to the bedside of his dying daughter, who expired within a few minutes after the father's return. Moritz is a prominent Jew, and the husband of one of the handsomest ladies in Indianapolis. The wife of Mr. Harding, and stepmother of the daughter, has confessed since the shooting that Moritz had also made improper proposals to her within a short time. Moritz denies the charges made by Miss Harding on her death-bed, and says as soon as he is able he will prove his innocence. His statement, however, is not generally believed. ....A wonderful phenomenon has occurred in Pulaski county, Ill. The great Osage ceded-land case has been decided by the Circuit Court of the United States at Davenport, Iowa. The land in controversy was claimed by certain railroad companies under grants from Congress. The amount in dispute was about 1,000,000 acres, and the disputed tract is 50 by 30 miles in extent, embracing the counties of Neosho and Labette, and part of the counties of Bourbon, Crawford, Allen, Wilson, and Montgomery, in Kansas, and upon which, claiming adverse to the railroad companies, are over 30,000 people. The court decided against the railroad companies, holding that they have no title, and setting aside their patents issued by the Interior Department. The Court decides that when a patent for lands has been issued contrary to law, the United States may file a bill in equity to cancel it. It also decides that the lands in question, having been reserved in a treaty with the Osage Indians for their use, and being occupied by them at the date of the railroad grant of public lands, were not public lands of the United States within the meaning of the granting clause of the act; and also, that if such lands were within the granting clause, they were excepted out of this grant by the words that the grant should not extend to the lands previously reserved by the United States for any other use or purpose.

Next morning between seventy-five and one hundred masked men entered the town, rode up to the jail and compelled the Sheriff to deliver the keys to them. They then took the six negroes from the jail. Four were killed and two mortally wounded at the edge of town. The masked men then rode off with the other ten, and are supposed to have killed them.

BEECHER-TILTON.

Production of Documents by Moulton.

A Mass of Explanations, Confessions, etc.

Francis D. Moulton, the "mutual friend" and go-between of Beecher and Tilton, has at last unsealed his lips and given to the world all that he knows about the famous or infamous scandal, together with all the correspondence bearing upon the ugly matter which was intrusted to him. The statement is precisely the same document that was prepared for the Plymouth Investigation Committee, but which, upon second thought, he concluded to withhold for a time. It was published in the New York papers of the 22d of August.

Moulton states that Tilton was first induced to make charges against Beecher by Bowen, who promised Tilton to sustain charges and to adduce additional evidence to prove them whenever required. It was on Bowen's demand that Tilton addressed the following open letter to Beecher:

"Brooklyn, Dec. 26, 1870.

"Henry Ward Beecher:

"Sir: I demand that, for reasons which you explicitly understand, you immediately cease from the ministry of Plymouth Church, and that you quit the city of Brooklyn as a residence.

(Signed) "Theodore Tilton."

Tilton explained that the words, "for reasons which you explicitly understand," were interlined at the request of Bowen. But Bowen afterward changed his mind and demanded silence on the part of Tilton, threatening that if he should say to Beecher what he (Bowen) had told him concerning his (Beecher's) adultery, he would dismiss him from the Independent and the Union. Tilton told him he had never been influenced by threats, and he would not be in the present case, and subsequently received Bowen's letter of dismissal.

In July, 1869, Mrs. Tilton confessed to her intimacy with Beecher, which confession her husband destroyed. Subsequently Mrs. Tilton, fearing that, if Bowen's accusations against Beecher were made public, the whole matter would be known and her own conduct with Beecher become exposed, had renewed her confession in her own handwriting. This later confession Beecher obtained from Mrs. Tilton, and also a recantation and denial of any improper conduct by Mr. Beecher toward her. At an interview between Moulton and Beecher, in which the former demanded this paper, Beecher admitted, with grief and sorrow, the fact of his sexual relations with Mrs. Tilton, expressed some indignation that she had not told him that she had told her husband, and that in consequence of being in ignorance of that fact, he had been walking upon a volcano.

Here follows a letter addressed by Mrs. Hooker to her brother, Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of which the following is an extract:

[Please return this letter to me when you have done with it.]

"Hartford, Sunday, Nov. 3, 1872.

"Dear Brother Tom: The blow has fallen, and I hope you are better prepared for it than you might have been but for our interview. I wrote a single line last week, thus: 'Can I help you?' and here is his reply: 'If you still believe in that woman, you cannot help me.'"

She incloses to him letters from the Woodhull and from Henry Ward Beecher. In the latter's letter the following sentences occur: "Probably you and I are nearer together than any of our family. I cannot give the reason now. I am clear, still you will follow your own judgment. I thank you for your letter of some things. I neither talk nor will be talked with. For love and sympathy I am deeply thankful. The only help that can be grateful to me, or useful, is silence, and silencing influence on all others. A day may come for converse. It is not now. Living or dead, my dear sister Belle, love me, and do not talk about me or suffer others to in your presence.

"The underscoring," says Mrs. Hooker, "is his own, and when I read in that horrible story that he begged a few hours' notice that he might kill himself, my mind flew back to this sentence, which suggested suicide to me. The moment I read it—'Living or dead, dear sister Belle, love me,' and I believed even that. Now, Tom, can't you go to Brother Edward at once, and give him these letters of mine, and tell him what I told you, and, when you have counselled together as brothers, you should counsel me also, and come to me if you can. It looks as if he hoped to buy my silence with my love. At present, of course, I shall keep silence, but the truth is dearer than all things else, and, if he will not speak it in the same way, I cannot always stand as consenting to a lie. God help us all."

Rev. Thomas K. Beecher replies to this letter of his sister under date of November, 1872, in which he says, among other things, that the Woodhull is only carrying out Henry's philosophy, against which he had recorded his protest twenty years ago, when he parted lovingly from him, saying they could not work together. He continues: "In my judgment, Henry is following his slippery doctrines of expediency, and, in his cry of progress and the nobleness of human nature, has sacrificed the clear, exact, ideal integrity. 'Hands off' until he is down, and then my pulpit, my home, my church, and my purse and heart are at his service. Of the two, Woodhull is my hero and Henry my coward, as at present advised; but I protest against the whole batch and all its belongings."

Mr. Moulton quotes from a letter from Mr. Hooker to his wife to show that all this matter had been discussed between the two long before the Woodhull publication.

"After Beecher had seen these letters of his sister," says Mr. Moulton, "he came to me in trouble and alarm, and handed me all the letters, together with one under date of Nov. 27, with an inclosure cut from the Hartford Times, to which he alluded." The clipping alluded to referred to a conversation between Eli Perkins and Thomas Nast, regarding the latter's offensive caricatures of Horace Greeley, and in which he remarked that the people were fooled with Beecher, and predicted his downfall. Mr. Moulton continues:

Beecher was exceedingly anxious that Tilton should repudiate the statement published by Woodhull, and denounce her for its publication, and he drew up upon my memorandum-book the form of a card to be published by Tilton over his signature, and caused me to submit it to him for that purpose. It is as follows:

"In an unguarded enthusiasm, I hoped well and much of one who has proved utterly unprincipled. I shall never again notice her stories, and now utterly repudiate her statements concerning me and mine."

In February, 1871, F. B. Perkins, a nephew of H. W. Beecher, addressed a letter to his uncle, charging that Tilton had been justifying or excusing his recent intrigues with women by alleging that Beecher had been detected in the like adulteries, the same having been hushed up out of consideration for the parties. Beecher replies by saying that "whatever Mr. Tilton formerly said against me, and I know the substance of it, he has withdrawn, and frankly confessed that he had been misled by the statements of one who, when confronted, backed down from his charges. If the papers do not meddle, this slander will fall still-born, dead as Julius Cæsar. If a sensation should be got up, of course there are enough bitter enemies to fan the matter and create annoyance, though no final damage."

H. W. Beecher agreed to hold this letter over for consideration, but sent it before seeing me again. Moulton at first approved of the letter, but finally concluded to consult with T. T., who offered a substitute, the substance of which is in pencil on a copy of H. W. B.'s reply to P. The following is a copy of the substitute referred to:

"An enemy of mine, as I now learn, poisoned the mind of Theodore Tilton by telling him stories concerning me, T. T. being angered against me because I had quoted similar stories against him which I had heard from the same party, retaliated. Theodore and I, through a "mutual friend," were brought together, and found upon mutual explanations that both were the victims of the same slander."

In regard to the servant-girl in the Tilton household who was sent West to a boarding-school, Moulton says her expenses were paid by Beecher, through him, the latter offering to pay the money for her schooling. Before going away she wrote the following letters to Mrs. Tilton:

"My Dear Mrs. Tilton: I want to tell you something. Your mother has repeatedly attempted to hire me by offering me money and presents, to go to certain persons and tell them stories injurious to the character of your husband. I have been persuaded that the kind attentions shown by Mr. Tilton for years were dishonorable demonstrations. I never at the time thought that Mr. Tilton's caresses were for any such purposes. I do not want to be made use of by Mrs. Morse, or any one else, to bring trouble on my two best friends, you and your husband. Bye-bye."

"My Dear Mrs. Tilton: The story that Mr. Tilton once lifted me from my bed and carried me screaming to his own, and attempted to violate my person, is a wicked lie. Yours truly."

The following is a letter from Mrs. Tilton to one Mrs. P., dated Brooklyn, Nov. 8, 1872. It refers to certain stories told by the school girl mentioned above:

"My Dear Mrs. P.: I come to you in this fearful extremity, burdened by my misfortunes, to claim your sympathy and love. * * * I have mistakenly felt obliged to deceive * * * these two years, that my husband had made false accusations against me, which he never has to her or any one, in order that he may not appear on his defense, thus adding the terrible exposure of a lawsuit. Will you implore silence on her part against any indignation which she may feel against him for the only ray of light and hope in this midnight gloom is his entire sympathy and co-operation in my behalf. A word from you to Mr. D. will change any unfriendly spirit which dear mother may have given him against my husband. You know I have no mother's heart that will look charitably upon all save you. Affectionately, your child, (Signed) "Elizabeth.

"Of course you will destroy this letter."

Mr. Moulton continues:

"I had seen and known Mrs. Tilton well and kindly on my part, and I believed wholly so on her's, and I had never known or suspected, or seen, any exhibition of inharmony between her and her husband, and of course I had no suspicion of infidelity upon the part of either towards the other. The first intimation of it which came to me was the exhibition of her original confession, the first communication had from Mrs. Tilton after I had read her confession, on the next morning, 31st December, 1870, as follows:

"'My Dear Friend Frank: I want you to do me the greatest possible favor. My letter, which you have, and the one I gave Mr. Beecher at his dictation last evening, ought both to be destroyed. Please bring both to me, and I will burn them. Show this note to Theodore and Mr. Beecher. They will see the propriety of this request. Yours, truly, (Signed) "'E. R. Tilton.'

"I could not accede to this request, because I had pledged myself to Beecher that her retraction on the one side and her confession to Tilton on the other (which are the papers she refers to as 'my letter which you have, and the one I gave Mr. Beecher') should not be given up, but should be held for the protection of either as against the other. I learned in my interview with Beecher, on the 1st of January, 1871, he had been told by his wife and others that Mrs. Tilton desired a separation from her husband on the ground of his supposed infidelities to her, and that Mrs. Tilton had applied to Mrs. Beecher for advice upon the subject."

On Jan. 4, 1871, Mrs. Tilton addressed the following letter to Moulton:

"My Dear Friend: In regard to your question whether I have ever sought a separation from my husband, I indignantly deny that such was ever the fact, as I have denied it a hundred times before. The story that I wanted a separation was a deliberate falsehood, carried by my poor mother, who said she would bear the responsibility of this and other statements she might make, and communicated to my husband's enemy, Mrs. H. W. Beecher, and by her communicated to Mr. Bowen. I feel outraged by the whole proceeding, and am now suffering in consequence more than I am able to bear. I am yours very truly,

(Signed) "Elizabeth R. Tilton."

The following statement of Mrs. Tilton was made and placed in the hands of Moulton:

"December 16, 1872.

"In July, 1870, prompted by my duty, I informed my husband that Mr. H. W. Beecher, my friend and pastor, had solicited me to be a wife to him, together with all that this implied. Six months afterward my husband felt impelled by the circumstances of a conspiracy against him, in which Mrs. Beecher had taken part, to have an interview with Mr. Beecher, in order that Mr. B. might know exactly what I had said to my husband. I wrote a brief statement, I have forgotten in what words, which my husband showed to Mr. Beecher. Late the same evening, Mr. B. came to me, lying very sick at the time, and filled me with distress, saying I had ruined him and wanting to know if I meant to appear against him. This I certainly did not mean to do, and the thought was agonizing to me. I then signed a paper which he wrote to clear him in case of a trial. In this instance, as in most others, when absorbed by one great interest or feeling, the harmony of my mind is entirely disturbed, and I found on reflection that this paper was so drawn as to place me most unjustly against my husband, and on the side of Mr. Beecher; so, in order to repair so cruel a blow to my long-suffering husband, I wrote an explanation of the first paper over my signature. Mr. Moulton procured from Mr. Beecher the statements which I gave to him in my agitation and excitement, and now holds it. This ends my connection with the case.

(Signed) "Elizabeth R. Tilton.

"P. S.—This statement is made at the request of Mr. Carpenter, that it may be shown confidentially to Dr. Storrs and other friends with whom my husband and I are consulting."

Concerning the charge of blackmail made by Mr. Beecher against Theodore Tilton, Mr. Moulton says:

"So far as Beecher is concerned, Tilton never made a demand on him for money, or pecuniary aid in any way or form. He asked only that Beecher should interpose his influence and power to protect him from the slanders of those who claimed to be Beecher's friends, while Beecher himself, with that generosity and kindness toward Tilton which had always characterized his act during the whole of this unhappy controversy, of his own motion, insisted, through me, in aiding Tilton in establishing his enterprise of the Golden Age, for which purpose he gave me the sum of $5,000, which I was to expend in such manner as I deemed best to help the enterprise along, and if Tilton was at any time in need personally to aid him."

I think proper to add, says Mr. Moulton, that, Tilton more than once said to me he could and would receive nothing from Beecher in the way of pecuniary assistance. I remember one special instance in which the subject was discussed between us. Beecher had told me that he was willing to furnish money to pay the expenses of Tilton and his family in traveling abroad, in order that Tilton might be saved from the constant state of irritation which arose from the rumors he was daily hearing. I rather hinted at than informed Tilton of this fact, and he repelled even the intimation of such a thing with the utmost indignation and anger. Therefore I only undertook the disbursement of this sum at the most earnest and voluntary request of Beecher. Prior to Sunday, March 29, 1874, a publication was made of a statement by a reporter of the Brooklyn Union, purporting to be the result of an interview with Thomas G. Shearman, Clerk of Plymouth Church, to the effect (I quote from memory) that Tilton was insane, and that he stated that Mrs. Tilton had mediumistic fits (whatever that disease may be), in which she had stated matters affecting the character of Beecher, and to the statement of neither of them, for that reason, was any credit to be given. Beecher was very much annoyed at this publication, and addressed the following letter to me:

"Sunday Night, March 9, 1874.

"My Dear Frank: Is there to be no end of trouble? Is wave to follow wave in endless succession? I was cut to the heart when C. showed me that shameful paragraph from the Union. Its cruelty is beyond description. I felt like lying down and saying, 'I am tired, tired, tired of living or of trying to resist the devil of mischief.' I would rather have had a javeline launched against me a hundred times than those who have suffered so much. The shameful indelicacy of bringing the most sacred relations into such publicity fills me with horror. But there are some slight alleviations. The paragraph came when the public mind was engaged with the Council and with Theodore's letters. I hope it will pass without further notice. If it is not taken up by other papers, it will sink out of sight and be forgotten; whereas, if it be assailed, it may give it a conspicuity that it never would have had. But I shall write Shearman a letter and give him my full feelings about it. I must again be, as I have heretofore been, indebted to you for judicious counsel in this new flagrant element. My inmost soul longs for peace, and, if that cannot be, for death. That will bring peace. My fervent hope is that this depth of gall may sink through outright, and not prove a mortal poison. Yours ever,

H. W. Beecher.

"I have written strongly to Shearman, and hope that he will send a letter to T. unsolicited. I am sick, head, heart and body, but must move on. I feel this morning like letting things go by the run."

The letter of retraction proposed by Tilton not being forthcoming, I felt it my duty in this contest to take such measures as should result in an apology from Shearman to Tilton. I accordingly carried to him a copy of the paper having the article, and laid it upon his desk in his office, and said to him that if the statements in this article were not actually made by him he ought to retract them. Although it lay on his desk, he said to me that he had not seen the article, and did not mean to see it. I told him that he must see it, and if it was not true he must say so. He said he did not want to read it, and would not read it. I then left him. Afterwards I saw Tilton and told him what I had done, and said, "We will go up together," which we did, and met Mr. Shearman. Mr. Tilton called his attention to the statement in the Brooklyn Union as having come from him (Shearman) concerning himself and his wife, that one was crazy and the other subject to mediumistic fits. Said he, "Mr. Shearman, this is untrue, and if you are not correctly reported, your simple duty is to say so; and if you have made such a statement, I demand that you retract and apologize. If you do not, I shall hold you responsible in any way I can for such an injurious statement." This confession brought about an explanation from Shearman which Tilton refused to accept, and Shearman two days afterward sent him another letter of explanation, in which he says, "I am now satisfied that what I did say was erroneous."

On Friday evening, the 30th of December, being the night of the Plymouth Church prayer-meeting, Tilton came to me and said in substance that by his wife's request he had determined to see Beecher in order to show to Beecher the confession of his wife of intercourse between them, which he (Tilton) had never up to that time mentioned to him (Beecher), and the fact of the confession, of which his wife had told him that she had never told Beecher; that though her confession had been made in July previous in writing he, (Tilton) had afterward destroyed it; but that his wife, fearing that if Bowen's accusations against Beecher were made public the whole matter would be known, and her own conduct with Beecher become exposed, had renewed her confession in her own handwriting, which he handed to me to read, which was the first knowledge I had of its existence. Tilton did not tell me how his wife came to make the confession in July, nor did I at that time, or ever after, ask. Indeed, I may state here, once for all, that I refrained from asking confessions of acts of all parties further than they chose to make them voluntarily for the purpose for which I was acting.

Tilton wanted me to go down and ask Beecher to come up and see him at my house, which I did. I said to Beecher: "Mr. Tilton wants you to come and see him at my house immediately." He asked what for. I replied that "he wants to make some statement to you in reference to your relations with his family." He then called to some one in the back room to go down and say he should not be at the prayer meeting, and we went out together. It was storming at the time, when he remarked: "There is an appropriateness in this storm," and asked me: "What can I do? What can I do?" I said: "Mr. Beecher, I am not a Christian, but if you wish I will show you how well a heathen can serve you." We then went to my house, and I showed him into the chamber over the parlor, where Mr. Tilton was, and left them together. I about an hour Mr. Beecher came down and asked me if I had seen the confession of Elizabeth. I said I had. Said he, "That will kill me," and asked me to walk out with him. I did so and we walked to Mr. Tilton's house together, and he went in. On the way he said: "This is a terrible catastrophe. It comes upon me as if struck by lightning." He went into Tilton's house, and I returned home. Within an hour he returned to with me, and we left my house again together, and I walked with him to his house. Tilton remained with me while Beecher was absent at Tilton's house, and when he returned there was no conversation between them. When we arrived at Beecher's house he wanted me to stand by him in this emergency, and procure a reconciliation if possible. I told him I would, because the interests of women, children and families were involved, if for no other reason.

That ended the interview that night. During this evening nothing was said by Beecher as to the truth or falsity of Mrs. Tilton's confession, nor did he inform me that he had obtained from her any recantation of the confession, which I afterward learned he had done. I returned to my house and had some conversation with Tilton, in which he told me that he had recited to Beecher the details of the confession of his wife's adulteries, and the remark which Beecher made was, "This is all a dream, Theodore," and that was all the answer Beecher made to him. I then advised Tilton that for the sake of his wife and family, and for the sake of Beecher's family the matter should be kept quiet and hushed up. The next morning, as I was leaving home for business, Tilton came to my house, and with great anger said that Beecher had done a mean act, that he had gone from that interview of last night to his house, and procured from Elizabeth a recantation of her confession. He said for that act he would smite him; that there could be no peace. He said, you see that what I have told you of the [illegible] evident. Tilton said that Beecher at the interview of last night had asked his permission to go and see Elizabeth, and he told him he might go, which statement was confirmed by Beecher himself, and Beecher left him for that purpose. I said to Tilton: "Now don't get angry. Let us see if even this cannot be arranged; I will go down and get that retraction from him." I was then going to my business, so that I was unable to go that morning, but went that evening, saw Beecher, and told him that I thought he had been doing a very mean and treacherous act, treacherous first towards me, from whom he wanted help, in that he did not tell me on our way to his house last night what he had procured from Mrs. Tilton; and that he could not expect my friendship in this matter unless he acted truthfully and honorably toward me. I further said: "Mr. Beecher, you have had criminal intercourse with Mrs. Tilton. You have done great injury to Tilton otherwise; now when you are confronted with it you ask permission of the man to again visit his house, and you get from that woman who has confessed you have ruined her a recantation and retraction of the truth for your mere personal safety—that won't save you."

At that interview he admitted with grief and sorrow the fact of his sexual relations with Mrs. Tilton, expressed some indignation that she had not told him that she had told her husband, and that in consequence of being in ignorance of that fact he had been walking upon a volcano.

* * * * * * *

I said: "Mr. Beecher, I want that recantation; I have come for it." "Well," said he, "what shall I do without it?" I replied: "I don't know; I can tell you what will happen with it." He asked: "What will you do if I give it to you?" I answered: "I will keep it as I keep her confession. If you act honorably, I will protect it with my life, as I would protect the other with my life. Mr. Tilton asked for that confession this morning, and I said: 'I will never give it to you; you shall not have it from my hands until I have exhausted every effort for peace.'"

Mr. Beecher gave me back the paper.

Having now placed before the committee my statements of facts concerning Mrs. Tilton and documentary evidence that I have to support them, and as they are diametrically opposed to nearly all that Mrs. Tilton appears to declare in her published statement, I deem it my duty to myself and my position in this terrible business, to say that during this affair Mrs. Tilton has more than once admitted to me, and to another person to my knowledge, whom I do not care to bring into this controversy, the fact of her sexual relations with Beecher, and she has never once denied them other than in the written papers prepared for a purpose which I have already exhibited; but, on the contrary, the fact of such criminal intercourse being well understood by Beecher, Tilton, and Mrs. Tilton to have taken place, my whole action in the matter was based upon the existence of that fact, and was an endeavor faithfully carried out by me in every way possible to protect the families of both the parties from the consequences of public disclosure of Mrs. Tilton's admitted infidelities to her husband.

If any evidence was needed that I was endeavoring to the latest hour to prevent the publication of all these documents and that I retained the confidence of at least one of the parties in that endeavor, I produce a letter of July 13, 1874, being a note arranging a meeting between myself and Beecher in regard to this controversy:

"July 13, 1874.

"My Dear Frank: I will be with you at 7, or a little before. I am ashamed to put a straw more upon you, and have but a single conclusion—that the matter cannot distress you long, as it must soon end. That is, there will be no more anxiety about the future, whatever regrets there may be in the past. Truly yours, and ever, H. W. Beecher."

A Curious Bird's Nest.

There is a bird in New Guinea called the megapodius, which, in the size of its eggs and its manner of hatching them, must be considered extraordinary. It is not larger than one of our ordinary fowls, but its eggs are three inches long by two and a half in diameter. It does not attempt to sit on them. A colony of birds lay their eggs together in a large mound, in the hottest part of the year, from September to March, and leave them to be hatched by the sun. The mound is made of sand, loose earth, and sticks and leaves, which latter by their decay increase the heat. The mounds are wonderfully large, being 10 feet high and about 60 feet in circumference at the base. The young birds come out at a hole in the top. The mother birds wait on the trees around till their chicks are hatched, and then each leads off her own brood. How each knows its own is a mystery. The eggs are much relished by the natives, but not at all by Europeans. A native of Cape York ventured one day into a nest for eggs, and while he was exploring the hidden riches of the large mound the upper part fell in and he was smothered. He was afterward found in the very act of digging—buried alive in a bird's nest.

A Decision for the Girls.

Some nice girl who wanted to do just what was right, and still what would best suit herself and her dear Adolphus, has written to the Christian Union, asking its editor a question, which he puts in this fashion: "A young lady wishes to know if there is any wrong in a gentleman, to whom she is engaged, calling on her Sunday evenings; and if they attend church, is it right for him to come in after returning, or go immediately home?" Every girl will want to know the answer, of course. Here it is, and it is easily big enough to slip a lover through: "It is certainly right for him to go immediately home if he wants to. As to his coming in—why not? When you are married you will hardly turn your husband out of doors on Sunday evening. Why shut him out now? One of the [illegible] of Sunday is the enjoyment of [illegible] ciety of friends. Christ even di[illegible] company on the Jewish Sabbath."

FARM AND GARDEN.

The cows are coming, Jessie dear, make haste and see the sight;
There are twenty milky beauties to be housed and fed to-night,
That first one with the snow-white horns is just as old as May;
She and my pet first saw the light the same soft summer's day.

A tender creature was she, weak and cold and thin!
John said she was not fit to raise. I said it was a sin
To cast her off for [illegible] sake. John laughed and asked me whether
I thought it best upon the whole to rear two calves together.

But she was spared, and so was May. It sometimes seems to me,
In Starbright's soft and gentle eyes, May's pleading glance I see.
I love the creature—you may smile—perhaps my fancies mock,
She's the fairest of the herd, as May's the sweetest of the flock.

There's May, her arms round Starbright's neck; the girl is nine to-day,
A frolicsome and genial thing, at study or at play;
The darling in our falling years, the spring in autumn set,
A fair white jewel blazing in our fading coronet.

But see, John lets the bars down; in clover deep they stand,
With glossy flanks, and backs as straight as yonder table-land;
The fragrance of their breath pours in like ambergris and myrrh;
"They are just the neatest cows to milk, John says, they never stir.

They know his tone—'tis seldom loud; they know his touch—'tis kind;
"John has a way," the neighbors say, to make dumb creatures mind;
Perhaps—I only know that I, through all these blessed years,
Have never seen the moment when his voice has brought me tears.

As a general rule of farming it is good economy to apply the most manure to the crop which requires the most labor.

WEEDS in lawns and yards may be killed by cutting close to the ground and then applying a few drops of oil of vitriol to the cut surface of the plants.

KEEP your hoes constantly bright and sharp; spades also; and if you have a power-grindstone it will pay well to grind coulters, cultivator-teeth and plow-points.

Do not throw plow-points, cultivator-teeth, wheels, coulters, harrow teeth, chains and pieces of chain, rings, clevises, extra whippletrees, neck-yokes, etc., into some dark and dusty corner, but put some wire around them and hang them up where they can be seen.

GROWING and transplanting flowers, take good, thick paper, and three-cornered, and double it in the shape of a funnel; fill with dirt and plant a seed in each one; bury it in a box filled with earth. The seeds will soon germinate. When the plants are ready to remove to the flower-bed, lift the paper out and plant it like roots. The paper will soon rot and the plants will never wilt.

JONATHAN TALCOTT gives a statement in the Boston Cultivator of an experiment performed on a Suffolk pig, where sugar beets were largely employed for fattening. The animal was about a year old, and the feeding on boiled sugar beets, tops and root, began on the 16th of August, and was continued three times a day until the 1st of October, after which ground feed was given, consisting of two parts of corn and one of oats, three times a day, until the animal was slaughtered, the meal being mixed with cold water. The result was, on August 16, when the sugar-beet feeding was begun, that the weight was 360 pounds; September 1, 390 pounds; October 1, 450 pounds; November 1, 520 pounds.

A CORRESPONDENT, who asks for a remedy for itch in sheep, is informed that the following has been recommended: "Shear off the wool about the pustules, then let the scab be removed with a knife or comb, after which diseased parts must be washed with soap and water; then apply the following mixture: One pound of plug tobacco to four gallons of water, which should be thoroughly boiled; then add the same quantity of lime-water with one pint of spirits of turpentine, or in these proportions if a less quantity is needed. After the diseased sheep is shorn of its wool, as well as all the sound ones, prepare a decoction of the above, and with a sponge, wash well the entire body, which will prevent a recurrence of the disease, even if turned in the old pasture.

THE nature of fowls requires their feed to be comparatively dry. Grain and cracked corn, when not fed dry, should be scalded till swollen and dried. Bran and mixed feed of every kind should be kept to crumble, not congeal. Salt, cayenne or black pepper, meat scraps of any kind, fresh or freshened fish and chopped cabbage once or twice a week added to their ordinary feed for variety and healthiness, during cold weather. Feed twice a day, regularly, sufficient for health and vigor, not more, except while fattening the fowls, and tainted or stale food is very desirable. Mashed bones, shells and crockery are excellent for hardening the shells. Sand, ashes and common earth are each good for fowls to roll in, and sulphur sprinkled where they roll and roost serves to keep away vermin. Lime is also serviceable; while pure water and air, sunlight and cleanliness are always indispensable.

THE head of a horse for farm work should be comely, but not so small as that of the running horse, as it enables the animal to throw more weight into the collar. He should be broad and flat in the forehead, have neat, well set-on ears, prominent placed eyes, thin eyelids, large nostrils, neat neck, and deep toward the chest; not very high in the withers, with upright shoulders, forearm broad, flat bone below the knee, rather short pasterns, good round feet—not too flat or too upright, plenty of hoof, clean leg, straight back, with plenty of loins, and ribs well arched. He should be long on the back rib and long in the quarter; the haunch should be strong, the hip well down, the hough-joint broad; and for a breeder, no animal should be used that is not free from curb, bog or bone spavin, splint or side bones. Horses with well-developed muscles and a good constitution are easy to keep, and can endure a great deal of fatigue.—Mark Lane Express.

WESTERN farmers will prove to be the salvation of Western interests in these troubled times. They will save Western merchants, manufacturers, mechanics and laborers. They will give body and substance to all our financial interests. They are not dealing in fictions, but in substantials. They will show the wonderful power and resources of the West—that our people can stand erect and bid defiance to the financial storms that are creating such a panic at the East. The West is wealth-producing. Our large crops are wanted, not only in the Eastern States, but in Europe. Before the crops are parted with, the farmers must have the money. People must eat and be clothed. They have to part with their money for these necessaries of life. Our wheat, corn, bacon, wool, cotton, etc., are needed, and money will seek them as readily as water will flow down hill. This money will give prosperity to Western interests. Then, again, our mines are yielding more largely than ever. Our manufacturing interests are flourishing, and the West will really be less affected by the crisis than any other portion of our country.—Rural World.

THE following very convenient arrangement for a farmer's kitchen we find in the American Agriculturist: One of the greatest troubles of the neat housewife in the country results from the muddy boots of those members of the family who have to work in the fields, the stables and the barn-yard. The wet boots must be dried, and are generally left under the kitchen-stove, where their presence is very disagreeable. Now, to have a neat kitchen, there should be a boot-rack placed behind the stove, in which the damp boots may be placed to dry. Such a contrivance has been found a great convenience. It has three shelves about four feet long, ten inches wide, and placed a foot apart. At one end a boot-jack is fixed by hinges, so that, when not in use, it is folded against one end of the rack and secured by a button. There is also a stand for cleaning boots at the front which also folds up when not in use, and the blacking brushes are placed on the shelves behind the stand, and are out of sight, and when folded they hang down out of the way. The rack should be made of dressed pine boards, and stained some dark, durable color.

A Singular Character.

An old man, Wm. Craig, died suddenly last Monday. He had gone to a neighbor's house and eaten breakfast, and was standing in the door when he dropped dead. He was a singular genius. For nearly twelve years he has refused to live in a house, and for a number of years he has made his in a large tree, doing his own cooking and washing. This tree was finaly blown or burned down, and he dug a hole in the ground, where he lived up to the day of his death. During the war he was robbed of some four or five hundred dollars, the accumulation of years of toil and industry, and this loss probably unbalanced his mind and caused him to lead this singular, hermit-like life. At the time of his death he was believed to be the possessor of some money, but it is thought he has buried it where it will never be found. He appears to have lived a quiet, peaceable, blameless life, shut out from the rude world in undisturbed seclusion and solitude.—Madisonville (Ky.) Times.

A Liberal Giver Detected.

A very funny scene was noticed in Westminster Abbey in connection with the Hospital Sunday services. The collectors were coming round with little bags for the offertory, and people began to take out their purses to hold their money in hand ready to give it. A lady of rank and fashion, well known at the West End, was one of the congregation, and as the bag approached, she somewhat ostentatiously displayed a sovereign. The bag reached her; she dropped in the sovereign—nay, rather, she tried, ineffectually, to slip a three-penny piece into the bag—but the coin stuck on the gilt edge of the receptable and had to be placed inside by the collectors. To say that that lady blushed is not to convey the scarlet appearance of her face when she saw how she had been detected in her little fraud. Those who stood by and saw the shabby act gazed at her in amazement, and in a minute she turned deadly pale as though she would have fainted. Then she turned and left the church.

New Surgical Inventions.

Two valuable surgical devices have lately been introduced into European hospital practice. One of these is the aspirater, which has been extensively employed by Dr. Dieulafoy of Paris, and by means of which fluids can be extracted from formations at some distance from the surface, with safety and certainty. Another novelty in this line of mechanism is the introduction of a bloodless method of amputation and other operations on the limbs, by means of a compressing bandage, by which the limb is blanched with a circular elastic cord, which compresses both the arteries and the veins of the limb. This plan, proposed by Prof. Esmarch, has been adopted by many hospital surgeons. It is considered, however, a point yet to be determined, whether there are any drawbacks to this system, and especially whether, in certain cases, embolism is likely to result from displacement of clot, which may have already formed in the veins of a damaged limb.—Boston Traveller.

A Physician.

The life of a physician is a life of contradiction. He is misrepresented, abused, and derided, yet he is sought for with avidity, and freely received into the bosom of families. His opinion can blanch the cheek, or suffuse the eye with tears of joy; and his lips are as closely watched as if from them proceeded the assurance of life and death. He lives by the woes of others; and while he would starve, if confined to the profession, if constant health were the attribute of our race, he is endeavoring to banish sickness from among men. While success in his avocation would ruin him forever, he is always warring against his own interests.

Fight Between a Bull-Dog and a Horse.

The San Francisco Chronicle of the 1st inst. has the following: "Yesterday afternoon about 6 o'clock a fine bay horse, attached to a light wagon, was being driven along Kearney street by two men. When near Sutter street a small English bull-dog, weighing 18 or 20 pounds, made a spring from the sidewalk and tried to catch the horse by the nose. Missing him, the dog fell under the horse's feet, and in an instant caught him by the right fore-leg, just above the knee, where he held on with the grip of death. The horse reared and plunged and stamped. The men in the wagon, having all they could do to control the animal in that crowded thoroughfare, dared not attempt to get out to fight the dog off. Finally, with a violent [illegible] his knees, the horse shook the vicious brute off his leg, but in an instant he was caught again in the chest. Fastening his teeth in the tough, thick hide, the dog hung on like a leech. The poor horse, unable to shake him off, bolted across a low pile of lumber at the corner of Sutter and Kearney streets, where he was caught by a dozen men out of the large crowd which had assembled. Some one at this point raised the cry that the dog was mad. That was enough to keep the crowd back and insure fair play. Not a soul would go near, and the horse was several minutes left to fight it out alone. Again and again did he shake off the tenacious little animal, kicking and striking at him with all his fierce strength, but in vain. He would not desist. Once in a while a hoof would hit the dog and send him reeling in the dust, but quicker than lightning he would gather himself up, and again fasten his vise-like fangs in the horse's flesh. 'Get a club here!' shouted some one in the crowd. 'Unfasten the horse's check-rein, and he'll soon fix him with his teeth,' shouted another man. 'Keep away from him; don't touch him; don't you see he's mad?' was again yelled out, and the crowd stood back. Once the dog sprang, and, clasping the horse's left foreleg, just as a young bear would climb a pole, fastened his teeth in and held on. The horse snorted with pain, and plunged wildly about; he reared, kicked, fell on his knees, and stamped, but still those sharp, white teeth were buried in his flesh, and the cold, sharp eye gleamed with tenacity and vicious hate. Finally, some one got a long club and beat the dog vigorously over the head. He would not let go. Then another man got a club and came to the horse's relief. A fierce whack fell on the dog's nose, and then the teeth loosened, and the fierce little brute fell under the horse's heels. Again he made a spring, but this time something struck him full in the face. It was an iron-bound hoop, and it came with the force of a trip-hammer. Beaten senseless, with the wind knocked completely out of him and a leg broken, the dog went rolling into a pile of rubbish, where his owner picked him up and carried him away in his arms.

"The poor horse was completely unstrung. The sweat poured off him in streams, and he shook and trembled so that he could scarcely stand. His owner got some rum and bathed the animal's legs which were badly cut and lacerated, and after a few moments he got sufficiently quiet to be driven home. The horse is a valuable one, but, unless there is danger of hydrophobia, his injuries are not likely to prove serious. The novel spectacle lasted fully ten minutes, and was witnessed by as many as 500 people. The dog is owned by a man in the employ of the gas company. He is a regular English bull, and is said to be one of the best fighters on this coast. He is terribly vicious, and is usually kept closely muzzled, but on this occasion he did not have his muzzle on."

Absinthe.

A Paris correspondent says: "The other day I saw a sad sight on the Champs Elysees, and which, with all my experiences of Parisian life, I never saw in this city before. It was a party of three persons, two men and a woman, all well—nay, even handsomely—dressed, and all three in a reeling, beastly state of intoxication. The men went staggering along, disputing and gesticulating after the manner of drunken men generally, now and then stopping to hail the passing unoccupied carriages, not one of which would consent to stop for them, while the woman reeled along in company, sometimes clutching wildly at the arm of one of her companions, and at other times stopping to address them in words of tipsy remonstrance. She was handsomely dressed in a costume of black silk and cashmere, trimmed with jet, while her companions wore high hats, broadcloth suits, and kid gloves. Finally the party made up their minds to cross the street, a difficult feat for anybody to attemp to execute in the full possession of their senses, so dense is the throng of passing carriages, and so rapidly are they driven, but the drunken trio got across somehow, and disappeared among the crowd of promenaders. Such is a specimen of the changes wrought by the lapse of a few years in the manners and customs of this people. Before the introduction of absinthe, who ever saw a drunken person in the streets of Paris? Now who is it that does not see them? Not drunkenness in rags alone, but drunkenness with goodly apparel and mien of ought-to-be respectability.

A Free Dinner.

A cadaverous chap sat down to one of the eating-stands in the market recently and called for seventy-five cents worth of "grub"—"the best in the house." It was handed him with commendable promptness, and it made people's eyes hang out to see him eat. He was about half an hour finishing up; and when he got up he remarked that he had forgotten his pocketbook. The woman grabbed up a butcher-knife and started for him, but instead of running away he laid his hand on her shoulder and whispered: "Be calm, and above all don't excite me. My fits comes on regular every day at this hour, and then I get wild, kick, bite, yell, and tip over things. I feel it coming now. If there's a policeman on the market go and get him, and let him take me to the station right away before I kill some one." She ran to get an officer, and the deadbeat ran the other way.—Detroit Free Press.

Hon. J. B. Beck's Advice to the Grangers.

The Grangers have it in their power, without departing from their determination to exclude politics from their organization, to do the country more service than they are, perhaps, aware of, simply by resolving not to vote for any man for Congress or the State Legislatures who is in any way connected with any of the great corporations or organizations which are seeking special legislation or exclusive privileges. It is impossible to have just and honest legislation, State or Federal, so long as representatives are sent who owe their election to, or are personally interested in, great moneyed corporations or monopolies—no matter whether they call themselves Democrats or Republicans, they are not the representatives of the people, they are simply the agents and attorneys of those who seek, by taxation of the masses, to enrich themselves, whenever they owe their election to monpolists, or are themselves interested in class legislation. The Grangers can make the election of such men impossible if they will make an honest, united effort to do so; that done, taxation could be reduced and equalized; wealth could be made to bear its just proportion of the necessary burdens of Government, and the rights of labor would be fairly considered. I do not propose that you should select representative men known to be hostile to corporations. All I insist upon is, that the representative shall be impartial and unbaised; that he shall have no interest to promote antagonistic to the interest of the great body of the people; that he shall be in a position, and it shall be his interest, to guard the public treasury, and not plunder it to enrich either himself or any favored class, whose interest he has undertaken to protect or promote. All our efforts in Congress, either to obtain a cheap and sound currency, or to impose proper taxation on them, for the money issued to the national banks, were defeated, because at least one-third of the members, perhaps a majority, were either Presidents, Directors, or large stockholders in national banks. The bonds of the United States escape taxation, and are paid, principal as well as interest, in gold, in known violation of law, when every other creditor of the Government is compelled to take "greenbacks" because Congress is composed largely of bondholders, or members are dependent for their seats upon them. The tariff monopolists, the railroads and other great corporations, all have their agents and attorneys. The "Grangers" can, at least, put an end to such flagrant wrongs, and send men to legislate for the benefit of all alike.

I know nothing about your form of organization, but I do know that you can, in some form, instruct your leading State officers to communicate with those of other States, and thus, through your national organization, bring such a power to bear, long before November, as will make it impossible for any Representative out of New England and portions of Pennsylvania to be elected to the next Congress in the interest of any corrupt rings or combinations, which, under Radical domination, have so far controlled, debauched and dictated legislation to the ruin of the great agricultural interest of the country.

Middlemen vs. Grangers.

The editor of the Vermont Farmer, who, it is said, is a Patron of Husbandry, gives the following sensible view of the relations of Middlemen and Patrons:

"Which is the most sensible man—the store-keeper who goes whining around that the granges are ruining him, who curses the farmers' papers, and stops his advertisements (thus taking of his own accord the direct road to bankruptcy), or he who has sense to recognize that the farmers have found out the advantage of buying for cash, and sets himself to meeting their demand and making money out of it? The farmers are sensible that there must be middlemen. They have no hostility to middlemen, either as a body or as individuals. What they are hostile to is paying more for their goods in one place than they can buy them for in another. They have found out that under a cash system goods may be bought from ten to seventy-five per cent. cheaper than they have been getting them. They have also found out that store-keepers who sell on credit in the old way cannot, or will not give a proper reduction to cash customers. Usually they cannot buy any cheaper at such stores for cash than on time. Consequently they have to find other places to trade. Briefly, the Grangers do not portend ruin to middlemen, but on the contrary great success to the middlemen who are smart enough to see what is wanting and supply the want."

Form Your Own Conclusions.

There remains with twenty-seven millions of people but one true course of action, which, if by them pursued, will most assuredly subvert the oppressive power of monopoly and awaken in the minds of thirteen million inhabitants of this nation the belief that representation and taxation must go together. But, says one, is not the laboring class well represented in our Congressional and Legislative Assemblies? Have not those representatives been sent and elected by the people? I, in return, would inquire of him, by whom are the revenues of this Government principally kept up? What class of people is it that remains the most exempt from taxation? What are the numerous ways devised in order to perpetuate in office corruptionists that the devil would hesitate to welcome to his den? We are unwilling to admit that men are at all times left to vote without being influenced by some hang-dog of modern scoundrelism. It is not unfrequently the case that, through bribery and the utterance of fallacious speech, multitudes of humanity, while under the influence of intoxicating drink, are, by the ballot, induced to give their strength toward the building up of anarchy, which the capitalists and Congressional thieves of this country cannot, and dare not, deny. Thus it is that, to-day, the industrial class have, by compulsion, been reduced to that condition for which no name is more appropriate than serfdom. The modus operandi by which to extricate themselves from the deplorable situation in which they are now placed, consists in no violent effort on their part to accomplish their desired object. It may require an unlimited time for them to make the necessary preparations formative for the occasion but by attention to those wise truths which give impulse to thought, and actuated by the undaunted spirit of the forefathers of this land, to unite in sentiment on the broad basis of pure and undefiled liberty, they will not only secure their rights peaceably, and in an effectual manner, but by so doing they will have built themselves and others a temple of justice not to be excelled by any other that may have arisen in the world.

What, then, is most essential for the toiling millions to achieve is, by co-operation, to scatter those fleecy scamps who have blistered exchanges and diminished production—robbed the poor of their earnings, and given them to monopolies, retarded education and built up mental, moral and physical prostitution, reduced the nation's currency to one-half that of France, ruined rich men by enticing them into reckless speculation, crushed our ship-building, thrown our carrying trade into the hands of the foreigner, given us in Europe a name of a nation of swindlers, and transformed the temple of our liberties into a den of thieves.—Cor. Industrial Age.

Effect of the Grange Movement.

A small editorial in one of the daily papers has done more to prove to us the advantages to be derived through the so-called farmers' movement, than all the high-flown sentiment that can be brought to bear on the subject. As no extract we can give will prove as satisfactory as the article itself, we reproduce it entire:

"The effect of the Granger movement and the railway legislation and litigation of Wisconsin and Iowa upon the value of railway property is admirably illustrated by the fluctuations in the stock of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. In 1868 the shares of that railroad was voted in Wall street at about thirty-six cents on the dollar. At that time Commodore Vanderbilt had just gained control of the New York Central, crowding out Henry Keep, who, with his foresight and ability, went West for a new hold. He chose the Chicago and Northwestern as the most promising to work up, and by strong resolute management, pushed the stock up to seventy, when death ended his labors. The road was by this time in superb condition, and the big operators of Wall street were handling its securities freely. 'Uncle Dan' Drew was 'short' of it when Jay Gould leaped into the arena and by a 'corner' forced the shares up to a point which made the good old Daniel profane, as was said. At that time the stock had a legitimate value of about eighty-two, and its management has since been as honest and able as possible. Notwithstanding this, notwithstanding its steady, excellent business, Northwestern shares have been weighed down with the legislative absurdities and uncertainties of Grangerism until they are now quoted at forty cents for common and fifty-six and one-half for preferred, only a few cents above its value when the road was taken up by Mr. Keep six years ago."

Now, if the writer of the above had gone to the trouble of telling us how much money was actually paid on these shares, we would be still better posted. We do not know the amount, but we freely confess that when stock fluctuates from thirty-six to eighty-two, while no money is paid in, there is a big haul somewhere and at the expense of honest people, unless our enemy of Grangerism calls Drew, Gould & Co. honest. We do not, and we hold that every dollar of reduction in the value of these shares will take away from these sharks part of their arguments in favor of their making large dividends. A share of stock worth thirty-six dollars can certainly not demand as much actual profits as a share the nominal value of which is eighty-two dollars. Let us hope that the "legislative absurdities and uncertainties of Grangerism," aided by the industrial classes in general, will continue to cut down the profits of the stock gamblers and money sharks, and give honest men their dues.—Coopers' New Monthly.

OREGON enjoys some extraordinary natural advantages. The yield of wheat this year has been excellent, the wool-clip has been good and commands good prices, while the salmon yield alone amounts to nearly $2,000,000. This latter industry is growing rapidly. There are already thirteen canning and curing establishments in operation at Portland, and two more in course of erection. There is but little danger, if proper precautions are used, of exhausting the supply of these delicate fish, for one full-grown female lays 6,000,000 eggs every year, and, if but a small proportion of the family reach maturity, the supply will exceed any demand likely to be made in many years. Blessed with an inexhaustible supply of salmon, and the absence of Joaquin Miller granted, what else can Oregon ask for?

GETTING IT DOWN TO A POINT.—Dr. H. was preaching on the crucifixion, and in the course of his discourse had so worked upon the sympathies of his auditors that many were in tears. After dwelling on the cruelty of that mode of punishment, the doctor spoke of the malefactor crucified at the Savior's right hand, who was so blessed as to receive pardon. "Brothers and sisters," said he, "who among us would not give all he possesses to-day to be thus favored? I would give 10,000 worlds if I could have been there with that thief. Yes," continued he, after a moment's pause, as if to reflect, "I would give 11,000!" The effect upon the audience of this additional bid may be imagined.—Advance.

A SCOTCH minister, when asked whether he was dying, answered: "Really, friend, I care not whether I am or not; for if I die I shall be with God, and if I live God will be with me."

RULES FOR CONDUCT.

Put on the airs of an eight-keyed flute,
If you're only a penny whistle;
Pass where you can for a garden rose,
If you're only a wayside thistle.

Blow, whenever you blow your horn,
So people can understand
That you may be sharp, but you won't be flat,
In society's great brass band.

Pass the plate or the hat in church
With the usual Sabbath air,
But move with a mild religious squeak,
That people may know you're there.

If you carry a nose six inches long
(And a beak can scarce be longer),
Believe it a sign of conception strong,
And the longer it is the stronger.

But if in the order of nasal tubes
Your organ is brief in measure,
Then, brevity being the soul of wit,
Consider your pug a treasure.

Love your neighbor, but mark the force
Of the gospel rule of grace;
The more you admire yourself, my friend,
The [illegible] your neighbor's place.

Chink your dime in the Deacon's pan,
As if you were throwing gold,
And give with an eye to the business hope
Of reaping a hundred fold.

Whether your reading is little or great,
Quote right or never quote;
Polish your uppers though down in the heel
And never indorse a note.

Always advance best hand, best foot
(Best hand, best foot your own),
And thus you may feast on the fat of the land,
While others enjoy the bone.

THE Danbury News man states that the panic has so far abated as to permit an Essex street man to return to ten-cent cigars, and he hopes in another month, if the brightness continues to increase, to get his boy's boots half-soled.

THE guardians of the peace of Columbus, O., are so zealous in the discharge of their duties that they take no note of personal mishaps, for it is seriously stated that one police officer there had his trousers stolen from him recently, while he was on duty.

"THE melancholy days are come" when defunct porkers with "the ends of their nose and the tips of their toes turned up to the roots of the daisies" (where they will never more root hog, nor die) are carried through our streets, cob in mouth, to be tucked away with buckwheat cakes.

THERE is nothing like dressing your local items in rhetorical finery, even if you have to come to plain English at the end. See an example: An Oswego paper describes a fire by saying that "the red flames danced in the heavens and flung their fiery arms about like a a black funeral pall, until Sam Jones got upon the roof and dashed them out with a pail of water.

A COLLEGE professor encouraged his geology class to collect specimens, and one day they deposited a piece of brick streaked and stained, with their collections, thinking to impose on the doctor. Taking up the specimens the professor remarked, "This is a piece of baryta from the Cheshire mines." Holding up another, "This is a piece of feldspar from the Portland quarries," and this, coming to the brick, "is a piece of impudence from some member of the class."

THIS is how it happened down in Southwest Missouri:

He found a rope, and picked it up,
And with it walked away.
It happened that to t'other end
A horse was hitched, they say.

They found a tree, and tied the rope
Unto a swinging limb.
It happened that the other end
Was somehow hitched to him.

A Perpetual Hot-Bed.

At Niederplants, near Swicknan, in Saxony, a vast bed of coal has been burning for over three hundred years. The ground above this subterranean bed of fire has become thoroughly warmed by this time, and an ingenious gardener has utilized it by planting on it a large nursery garden. Here he raises tropical plants of all kinds, with exotic fruits, which flourish with a vigor and luxuriance in the open air that the best forcing houses could not insure. His specialty is pineapples, of which he has a great variety. There are subterranean fires in other parts of the world which have been utilized in a similar way. Would it not pay, in certain cases, to take a hint from these accidental examples of underground heating, and warm large plots of soil by means of steam-pipes running under the surface?—Rural Carolinian.

HE WIPED 'EM.—This is what a man gets for being too literal in New York. He was drunk and wore exceedingly filthy boots. Having paused before a carpet store in the Bowery, about the entrance of which, on the sidewalk, was a tempting array of plain and fancy door-mats, he read the entreaty on one of them, "Please wipe your feet," and then proceded to comply with the request. An indignant proprietor pushed him into the muddy street; a policeman placed him on his feet, then clubbed him down again in the most approved fashion, and finally carried him off to the police-station.

The Democrats of Ohio, Pennsylva nia, Missouri and Illinois held Con ventions last Wed nesday.

Even Harper's Weekly admits that there is widespre ad feeling in the Re publican party th at a change in party rule is necessary for the interests of the country. I t h.s the correct idea of the situation.

The Beecher committee have sub mitted their re po.t to the public. It contains twelv e thousand words, and exonerates He nry. Why didn't they do it in two ive words? The public will hardly h ave the patience to wade through the dreary waste of verbiage.

The Ft. Wayne Sentinel says: The country is aroused. The shackles of tyranny h ave fallen from the ankles of Allen co unty's brave sons. Eloquence, poetry a nd song have been enlisted in the gr eat People's movement. The popula pulse has been felt and the popula heart has been auscultated, and now Walter and Kennedy the people's cham pion, have mounted their war hors es. Look out for driven wells and home poetry.

BEECHER'S jurymen have found a verd ct. They were a little late, for a larger and an impartial jury found a verdict several days ago; but neither the lateness of the verdict nor the verdict itself is of any consequence. There never was a greater farce of a trial than this Plymouth Church mockery. The jury find BEECHER not guilty.—They say he didn't commit adultery with MRS. TILTO N at the times and places alleged, nor at any time and places not alleged. They evidently ment to do their duty by t r r employer.

The Elections of 1874.

Here is a brief abstract of the elections which have thus far been held in 1874;

New Hampshire—Democratic Governor and Democratic Legislature.

Connecticut—Democratic Governor Democratic Legislature and Democratic U. S. Senator.

Oregon—Democratic Governor and Democratic State officers and Democratic Congressmen.

North Carolina—Seven Democratic Congressmen out of eight, large Democratic majority in the Legislature and Democratic state ticket.

Tennessee—Nearly every county Democratic.

Dito Kentucky.

There has been but one single defeat. The manufacturing firm of Brown & Ives carried the state of Rhode Island, These elections are indicative of what is to follow in the fall.'

The bitter feud between the negro Republicans of Louisiana, under the leadership of Senator Pinchback, and the carpet-bag Republicans, under the leadership of Gov. Kellogg, promises some "rich, rare, and racy" developments. At a recent Republican Caucus Convention, over which Gov. Kellogg presided, Senator Pinchback, after giving a full history of the bargain by which he was induced to withdraw from the gubernatorial contest in favor of Kellogg in 1873, said:

"I tell Gov. Kellogg, however, I am on the war path, and, be I admitted as Senator or not, I hold in my hands his gubernatorial crown for if ever I open my mouth, under oath, to Congress and the country and tell them how this Government was set up by the Kellogg, Durell, Packard, and North conspiracy, supported by such men as Carter, Billings, and others, who were present during all the arrangments for the conspiracy, this King William, the promiser, in the momentous issue of the coming Presidential campaign, will have to go under, for the Republican party can't survive the moral indignation of this country if ever the true history of this Louisiana usurpation is made known.

Senator Pratt voted for the Newspaper gag law. This law was designed to prevent the papers from exposing the rottenness of Congressmen and informing the people of the true state of affairs exsisting at Washington. Senator Pratt. it appears by his vote, wanted to keep the people in ignorance and the people wanted to know why Senator Pratt is afraid to have the newspapers tell the people what he is doing in his officials' capacity. The Republicans in endorsing Senator Prat confess that they do not want any more exposures. He also voted for the civil rights bill which is designed to compel the whites to admit the negros into their schools. The Republican paper at Augola of this bill says: "We have had many misgivings respecting the policy of the Civil Rights Bill and have frequently expressed them. The principal ground of them has been our inability to find any power in the National Constitution to control the owners of private property, such as steamboats, railroad cars and hotels. Within certain limits they may be controled or regulated by State Legislatures as they now are in some States; but we could never preceive how they could be legally controled or regulated by Congress. That some of the Southern whites are very insolent to and proscriptive of the freedom traveling on the steambeats or railroads and stopping at Southern hotels, we never doubted for a single moment. Indeed we know they have been and are: but we have looked upon that fact as one of the evils in the land which seems to be beyond the reach of any congressional remedy— as one to be corrected by the State where it exists in some manner, if it is to be corrected at all.

As to the effect of the measure upon the schools of the South, which are public institutions, if it should pass, we have not been so clear. The political equality of the freedmen which the whites is guaranteed by the amendments. Social equality with them is not. The question whether colord children shall be admited in the same schools with those of the whites, has a social as well as political aspect. It turns out that it is thought to be so far social that the Democrats made a point of it in the elections of North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee, and that too before the bill is passed or is very likely to be passed in its present shape by Congress. This negro question has been passed from point to point until it has reached a phase where the utmost prudence is demanded from our Senator and Representatives in Congress. It ought to be apparent to all of them by this time that nothing in the shape of social equality between the white and the blacks in the South can be forced, or even attempt without productiug the most damaging reactions upon the Republican party. And we think that they must preceive it now.

We have heard a great deal at one time and onother about the superior manner in which women would make and execute the laws provided they were put in possession of the ballot.—There have existed a class of skeptics who have replied that women are too emotional and illogical to take charge of those affairs which have, by common consent been entrusted to men from the beginning. The Crusade against the traffic in liquors was almost entirely conducted women and as might have been forseen, its result was the reverse of that sought by its advocates. Instead of promoting the cause of prohibitation it has put that event back many years. It has produced a feeling in this State which will eventually find its expression in the repeal of the Baxter law. The Beecher investigation shows a similar state of facts. Three-fourths of the women of the country acquit him.—They acquitted him from the start and tons of evidence would not shake faith in the slightest respect. To them Mr. Beecher is the sum of all that is good and Tilton the incarnation of that is bad. Beecher's denial of the charge is of more weight than ten thousand documents implicating him in guilt, backed by the sworn testimony of a hundred creditable witnesses. They belive implicity that Mr. Beecher is a good—a thorough good man, and as such he cannot commit the wrong attributed to him. They do not mean to be unjust to Mr. or Mrs. Tilton. but they seem to be imcapable of weighing evidence. Many men are equally incapable of forming an inpartial opinion. These people it is well to bear in mind, are of that class who are constant'y inveighing against the present order of things and boasting of the era of justice they would inaugurate were they are constantly talking of unjust and lawyers who are not above a bribe Perhaps in even nine out of ten of the country, a jury would upon the evidence before the Plymouth Committee convect Mr. Beecher of adultery.—These corrupt laws yers and unjust judges would do this act of simple justice, an achievement entirely beyond the power of the Plymouth Church Committee and all the church members of New England, together with the women in the United States in general. Indeed it has been said again and again that Beecher cannot convict.—The fact is an impossibility. Evedence is poohpoohed out of court. But conviction would be perfectly easy before a legal tribunal.

Corunna Items.

EDITOR COURIER—An item occasionaly from this part of the county may not prove uninteresting to your readers, and I send you the following to show your city that we are not dead in the shell:

In the way of trade we are doing a fair business, considering the general depression that prevails everywhere. As a grain market we rank second to no village on the Air Line road.

The U. B. Church building now in course of erection, does honor to the southern side of the village. When finished we can boast of two brick churches and a school house, the latter reflecting no small degree of credit to the township Mr. McIntosh, of your city, is the present supt., and there are about one hundred students in attendance.

This is without doubt the healthiest point on the Air Line road. Here people do not die, they simply "rust out" and the medical fraternity are not happy.

The pic-nic at Green's Corners last Friday was largely attended by our citizens generally.

In the ball match between our boys and the Kendallville "calves" the former were flounced out. Mr. M. Boland, our pitcher, was corked in the foot by an opponent, which accounts for their defeat

Some of our boys had a lively coon hunt the other week, and one of the party our friend Mart Shaffer, now mourneth over a dead purp. Geo Gregg goes alone but the story that he goes a coon hunting is a little mixed.

E. Orr has the finest Cotswold sheep in the country, and they are selling rapidly at $15 a apiece.

Why did Theo. McCormack steal Bro Park's roasting-ears? That's the question.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

NUMBER 26.

The wolves were howling around, and the Doc would not consent to lie down to sleep, unless we keep guard, promising to wake up at midnight and guard us while we sleep the balance of the night. As soon as he went to sleep; the "Doc ever dreaming that his precious life all unguarded. Other incidents might be related as told me by these pioneers,—of a five days journey to Union mills for breadstuff,—cutting their way as they went through the woods; Of a night job of road cutting, from dark till midnight, to get a load of provisions through, from near where Wm. Clark of Union now lives to where they themselves settled, and still live;—guided by a small compass set in a watch key, and driving two yoke of cattle so exhausted that they would lie down every little while, and then had to be fed and coaxed up again; of hard chopping all day, and then tramping down to Auburn, three miles through swamps full of water, and then back with a bushel of potatoes on their sholder, making the trips mostly in the night, so as to be chopping again by the break of day, &c &c. Most of these incidents would be interesting, had we not spun out our chapter already to such a length.

Mr. Altenburgh has lost an arm, and came very near losing his life, in conquering the forests giants. In chopping off a clearing, a tree fell on him, breaking his arm and some of his ribs. Two amputations and a year of the most intense suffering, was the result—and to this day, a severe neuralgic pain remains the consequence of the accident.

Union township has improved equally as fast as any in the county, Auburn has continued steadily to increase in size and wealth; and now the oldest inhabitant estimate its population at eighteen hundred.

Waterloo in the north part of the township is quite a brisk growing village on the Air line Rail Road. Business is rapidly gathering to that point and the inhabitants are generally moral and enterprising.

RICHLAND TOWNSHIP.

Richland is a full congressional Township. It has Little Cedar running diagonally from the North West corner, by the center, to the South line about midway of said line East and West. The surface of this Township is generally rolling, and in places, even hilly. The soil is chiefly somewhat sandy; though there in places considerable tracts of clay. Beech and sugar maple is the prevailing timber; yet interspersed with these, there is a good supply of walnut and poplar, oak and ash.

The first settler in the Township was Joseph Miller, mentioned heretofore. He settled in August 1836,—having cut his way in from where his father lived, in Jackson Township. Previous to moving in, he cut the logs for his house in one day; made the clapboards the next hav'g to chop off the timber two clapboard lengths for want of a saw then split it into bolts, and chop them in to before riving. He and two others put up the house without any other assistance, on the third day. He, and Mr. Vansickle, and Obadiah Whitmore also put up a house for Jacob Weirick and Joshua Feigler moved in, in October 1836. At the organization of the township, Mr. Weirick was appointed supervisor for the whole of it; and at the first election there were but six voters in the Township. Wm. Showers was elected for first Justice. William Solomon and Daniel Showers, Lyman Green, James McCrum, Wm. Beck, Daniel Webber, Henry Willie, Calvin and Erastus Corcans Haman Eangs, Japhet Ingraham Peter Reish, Ezra, William and John Connelly, Thomas Daily, James Blake, Samuel Haynes, and Peter Moody, were all early settlers, many of whom are still citizens of the Township.

Henry Willis moved in by the way of Wm B. Smith's who seemed to have kept a kind of emigrant's hotel. From Smith's he had to cut his own road, requiring all day to get through. He states that, soon after coming on, he tried in vain to get a pig to buy in the whole county.

Happily for him he settled on a sugar timbered tract of land where he had the opportunity of making maple sugar, which he took off, sometimes a three day's journey, and exchanged for breadstuff.

Which would you sooner do or go a buggy-riding? "Sooner milk." Two of our gay young men went down in the country last Sabbath and coming to where several young girls were milking, they wanted to know which they would sooner do, milk or go a buggy-riding. "Sooner milk" was the prompt reply. And that's what makes some of the boys laugh.

It turns out now that all the Democrats on the Independent ticket in Allen County are sore heads, have been defeated at some time or other for office. There is Walters, one of the greatest frauds in the city, out for Congress against Hamilton. This Walters is never satisfied unless running for office or participating in a law suit with his neighbors. We don't go much on such tickets.

Philip Philips.

Philip Philips the greatest singer of the age who is without a rival in singing hymns and sacred songs, will be in Waterloo and sing Friday evening next, Sept 4th. He has drawn immense houses in Europe and the principal cities of this country. We advise all our citizens who can to hear him.

There is considerable feeling against the Butler News because of the course it has taken to establish itself there. First starting out as an Independent paper and receiving assistance from all parties, it turns around, after being well established endorses the Republican party, at a time when the very rottenness of the party is being shown up. If Mr. Weamer wanted to run a Republican paper he should have done so at the start, and not masked his paper under a show of independence.

The Auburn COURIER of yesterday shows a large map on its first page which represents Auburn in the shape of a huge beer tank, located in the exact center of the universe.—Fort Wayne Gazette.

The beer tank used in the map above was the same used in the mammoth edition of the Gazette a few weeks ago, representing the exact location of the city of Fort Wayne. This co-incident may be a little unfortunate for our neighbor, and the name perhaps not entirely inappropriate.

There are already quite a number of horses on the ground, from this State Michigan and Ohio. Look out for a good time.

"The boy stood on the burning deck, when all but him had fled." The question arises, Where did the balance fire to? It is reasonable to suppose that the clothes of those who fled were more or less scorched by the fire—perhaps left behind them in their hasty move. It is natural to supose that the entire crowd "put out for E. Vodernark & Sons. where a large and complete stock of Boots & Shoes are to be found at the loest prices. They keep every thing in this line, and they cannot be undersold.

The second annual exhibition of the Cass County Agricultural Association commences, at Logansport, on Monday, September 7th, and continues through the week. Five Thousand Dollars in cash premiums are offered, and the exibition will, undoubtedly, be the finest in Northern Indiana. Half-fare rates have been made on all railroads for carrying of persons desiring to attend; also, for returning, free of charge, all articles on exibition. The program of the exibition is a very attractive one, and the ground said to be the first in the State.

There was a nice little pic-nic down in Hartel's bottom last Friday afternoon. It was composed of young folks of both sexes in the lovely spring time of life.—They were just old enough to enjoy themselves and soon established their reputation for gay, sportive and harmless young lambs. There is nothing so pleasant as to see young people enjoy themselves in a common sense way, and thus repairing to the shady woods of a hot summer day to indulge in innocent amusement has a refining influence, and there should be more such gatherings.

Convention Notes.

Thirty-eight seventieths of three hundred and sixty forty-five one hundredths is how much? The way they handled fractions last Saturday ought to serve as a warning to all coming mathematicians.

The prohibitionists were victorious in being recognized in the convention by having R. M. Lockhart for President.

When Auburn divided her vote in favor of Wilmington for Clerk, she acted in good faith; but when Wilmington came to vote, she stood almost solid against Auburn for Auditor. It was manifestly a sell-out.

A prominent Republican remarked on the nomination of Mr. Taylor for Representative, that he was superior to J. W. Davis in that he had favored the dissolution of the Union long before Jeff thought of it.

Senator Pratt was endorsed by the Convention, but senator Morton was left out in the cold. The State platform does not show such favoritism.

The Republicans at their Convention last Saturday, put in nom'nation the following ticket:

For Representative—E. H. Taylor.
Clerk—G. H. K. Moss.
Auditor—Isaac Hague.
Treasurer—N. Ensley.
Sheriff—W. L. Meese.
Commissioner—Henry Hood.
Coroner—G. M. Crane.
Surveyor—W. S. Bangs.
Assessor—Robt Culbertson.

FORT WAYNE, IND. Aug. 28th, 1874.

DEAR TOM—

I'm in a rhyming mood,
And when one's so 'tis understood
That prose grates harsh upon the ear
Like profane words from woman dear,
Or music sweet played out of tune,
Or midnight yellings of the loon.
Now Tom, my friend, you will excuse
This doggerel revelling of my muse,
For think it not epic poem
Or sentiment that's overflowing,
Or words for music set in rote
To suit each quavering littl. note.
My muse hath now a better end
A friendly letter to a friend.

But referring to letters, have you ever stopped to consider the great importance [illegible] speech and thought, but the inventive genius of man has given us a well defined and simple plan of giving expression to those thoughts by little cabalistic hieroglyphics called letters, each the essential part of a word properly arranged, and thus upon paper and wire by letters and signs we can transmute our thoughts and ideas from friend to friend, distance and time being no obstacle, both overcome by the inventions aforesaid—

What kicked up this curious caper
Of scattering brains all over paper,
Who was the man who first designed
The means of laying stress on mind?
Our very souls thus naked hurled
And opened to a gaping world,
Cadmus wise a learned Phoenician
Thought to teach the ignorant Grecian.
Left his home and went that way,
And told them what he had to say,
He scratched a figure and a mark
On a piece of birch wood bark,
Telling them it was the same
As the figure in his brain.
At the work the Grecians set
Until they formed the alphabet.
Then from this great inventive bowel
They hauled out consonant and vowel.
And so arranged this lettered herd
As to form and shape the word,
Then opened wide the boundless field,
And plenteously the harvest yield.
Time following up the great invention,
Nouns were formed with their declension
All parts of speech came running after,
This first and great Phoenician master.
The first that used this great machine
Wrote but in verse as will be seen,
Yet prose also did find its way,
In what the Godly man would say,
Now every where beneath the sun
From Afric's shores to fair Auburn.
The Alphabet is used to spell
The very thoughts that we would tell,
And words convey these thoughts in love
In prayer to him who reigns above.

The world progresses, and although many believe that the world was more intelligent thousands of years ago, and argue from relics found in Herculaneum and Pompeii that they evidence the superior culture of the artizans of that remote period, and speak of the "lost arts" with a sigh, I incline to the belief that the inventive genius of man has within the last century done more for the civilization, evangelization and christianization of the world than the "lost arts" if found intact could have done, and that notwithstanding the great backset given the cause of christianity by such hypocritical scoundrels as have recently been unearthed in Brooklyn, and who no doubt exist unknown and undiscovered in many other cities of less note, yet the moral condition of the world today presents a brighter and more uncouraging surface than ever known before. Church edifices are springing up in every city, town, village and clearing. The missionary field was never so crowded with anxious, zealous, self sacrificing embassadors of Christ and the general morale of the world better in the main. If the newspapers would, with the same degree of interest and avidity, give to their readers the good rather than the bad, if they were as voracious in showing up continually the bright and better side of life, instead of spending money for specials that make the blood curdle and palsey the nerves of the timid and weak, we would be induced to believe the glorious world he has given us for a temporary habitation not so cruel a botch and failure after all. To the pure all things are pure, Honi soit qui maly panse. To the cheerful, happy disposition the world with its sunlight and starlight, its flowers and fruits, its multifarious charms and glories so bedazzle his vision that he sees not its clouds, its storms, its ills or its everpresent death shadow, and per contra, to the morose, sullen, selfish nature, no sunshine can be discerned through the thick clouds of temporary adversity, or if seen at all, it wears a blood colored hue and betokens evil and calamity. The flowers seem edged in mourning, the birds all sing dirges and grave yards yawn continually to swallow him up. A cheerful heart is the reflection of contentment and ease honestly felt. How many live a miserable existence, enduring a cruel suspense all through life, with constant imaginary fears like apparitions ever present to annoy them, suspicious of every one, confiding in none, not even in a God. In many instances parties have been deeply wronged and feel their grievances keenly, perhaps malice with his serpent tongue has crept rudely from would-be friend and stolen his honor and the proof thrown rudely in his face, and to revenge his flush checked injury, in midnight clothed, stalks forth with bloody hand to glut himself on fears and doubly damned doubts that feed upon his soul for slow suspense is worse than quickened death and he that goes through life ever apprehensive lives no gratifying life dies no satisfactory death Life is sweet to the contented mind, short as it is. It is but the mere shadow of the existence of something material, the sun of fortune gives us shape and the cloud of sorrow destroys us. Like re-reflected objects we at times assume a pleasing form and then a most hideous one like shadows our imaginations sometimes makes us real objects and a moment proves us nothing, everything depending upon the barometer of our own feelings.

MR. EDITOR—As this is the day of l
cense in our town would it be out of plac to note the law on the subject. Of cours those who engage in this business desir to go according to law, for if their permi is not secured they are not eligible to th
"honorable" offfice.

What is the law? In sec. 4, of "A act to regulate the sale of intoxicatin liquors, &c." I read: "The whole num ber of votes cast for candidates for con gress at the last preceeding congression election in the tp. and the whole numbe of votes cast for councilman or trustee i any city or town in which the applica for permit desires to sell said intoxicati liquors, shall be deemed to be the whol number of legal voters of such ward, tow or township, a majority of whose nam shall be signed to the petition of such a pliearat."

Now, we are ready to ask who are th persons that are eligible to this roll honor, who may subscribe the name the mothers gave them, and by which the enjoy, and in hopefulness called them t her side, to the petition to establish th nefarious, soul-destroying traffic. Sham to the man who would so dishonor he whom he is not worthy to call by th
dear and sacred name, mother. But wh are they? 1st. They must be legal vote of the ward, town or township in whic this necessary, all-destroying delicacy to be sold. 2nd. Only those who vote at the last municipal election are legall entitled to put their names on the appl cation for a permit. Not a majority the legal voters of the ward, town or tow ship, not a number of the legal vote equal to or greater than the majority votes polled at last election, but a major ity of the persons who actually voted a the last election This is the reading the bill and this is the intent purpose an object of the bill as affirmed by Mr. Ba
ter. It seems that Mr. Fox has whol over-looked this provision in the law, an has secured by various means the name of voters, not legal voters, and non-res
dents, never considering whether he v ted or not at the last election. If not h name is illegally attached thereto.

Now, Mr. Editor, I think that those p sons who did not vote at the last electi in our town whose names are attached
Mr. Fox's application for a permit to s intoxicating liquors had better see th their names are removed from that pe tion before the Commissioners act up it, for fear their day of grace be pas and the day of reckoning come. What the use of having laws for the benefit society and not enforce them. And wh shall we think of a person who knowing secures the names of those who are n legal voters to his paper.

I may devote another article to t names, attached to this permit and the r lation they sustain to this accursed bu iness.

THE BAREFOOT BOY.

BY WHITTIER.

Blessings on thee, little man,
Barefoot boy, with cheek of tan!
With thy turned-up pantaloons,
And thy merry whistled tunes;
With thy red lip, redder still,
Kissed by strawberries on the hill;
With the sunshine on thy face,
Through thy torn brim's jaunty grace;
From my heart I give thee joy;
I was once a barefoot boy.
Prince thou art—the grown-up man
Only is republican.
Let the millioned-dollared ride!
Barefoot, trudging at his side,
Thou hast more than he can buy,
In the reach of ear or eye;
Outward sunshine, inward joy,
Blessings on thee, barefoot boy!

O for boyhood's painless play,
Sleep that wakes in laughing day,
Health that mocks the doctor's rules,
Knowledge never learned at schools,
Of the wild bee's morning chase,
Of the wild flower's time and place,
Flight of fowl and habitude
Of the tenants of the wood;
How the ground mole sinks his well,
How the tortoise bears his shell;
How the woodchuck digs his cell;
How the robbin feeds her young;
How the oriole's nest is hung;
Where the whitest lilies blow;
Where the freshest berries grow;
Where the ground-nut trails its vine;
Where the wood-grape's clusters shine;

Of the black wasp's cunning way,
Mason of his wall of clay,
And the architectural plans
Of gray hornet artisans!
For, eschewing books and tasks,
Nature answers all he asks.
Hand in hand with her he walks;
Face to face with her he talks,
Part and parcel of her joy,
Blessings on the barefoot boy!

O, for festal dainties spread,
Like my bowl of milk and bread,
Pewter spoon and bowl of wood,
On the door stone, gray and rude,
O'er me like a regal tent,
Cloudy-ribbed, the sunset bent;
Purple curtained, fringed with gold,
Looped in many a wide-swung fold
While for music, came the play
Of the pied frog's orchestra;
And, to light the noisy choir,
Lit the fly his lamp of fire.
I was monarch; pomp and joy
Waited on the barefoot boy!

Cheerily, then, my little man!
Live and laugh as boyhood can;
Though the flinty slopes be hard,
Stubble-speared the new mown sward,
Every morn shall lead thee through
Fresh baptisms of the dew;
Every evening from thy feet
Shall the cool wind kiss the heat;
All too soon these feet must hide
In the prison-cells of pride,
Lose the freedom of the sod,
Like a colt's for work be shod,
Made to tread the mills of toil,
Up and down in ceaseless moil;
Happy if their track be found
Never on forbidden ground;
Happy if they sink not in
Quick and treacherous sands of sin.
Ah! that thou couldst know thy joy,
Ere it passes, barefoot boy!

THE THREE BEAUTIFUL PRINCESSES.

Early in his reign, Mohammed, of Granada, had found among the captives in one of his forays into the territories of the Christians, a damsel of transcendent beauty. The fair captive, and the old duenna who had been taken with her, were consigned to the royal harem, and in due time the former made the Moorish sovereign (called the left-handed king) the proud and happy father of three lovely daughters, all born at a birth. Mohammed could have wished they had been sons, but consoled himself with the idea that three daughters at a birth were pretty well for a man somewhat stricken in years, and left-handed. As usual with all Moslem monarchs, he summoned his astrologers on this happy event. They cast the nativities of the three princesses, and shook their heads.

"Daughters, O king! said the sages, "are always precarious property; but those will most need your watchfulness when they arrive at a marriageable age; at that time gather them under your wings, and trust them to no other guardianship."

The threefold birth was the last matrimonial trophy of the monarch; his queen died soon after, bequeathing his infant daughters to his love, and to the fidelity of the discreet Kadiga—for such was the name of the duenna.

Acting upon the advice of his astrologists, the cautious monarch sent his daughters under the care of the Kadiga to be reared in the castle of Salobrena. This was a sumptuous palace surrounded by strong fortifications and situated on the summit of a hill which overlooks the blue waters of the Mediterranean sea. Here the princesses remained, surrounded by all kinds of luxuries and amusements. Years rolled on smoothly and serenely, the discreet Kadiga watching her precious charge with unremittting care. At a corner of the garden which clothed the side of the hill on which the royal castle of Salobrena was built, was a small watchtower, fitted up as a pavilion, with latticed windows to admit the sea-breeze. Here the princesses—whose names were Zayda, Zorayda, Zorahayda—used to pass the sultry hours of mid-day, taking their siesta, or noontide slumber. Here, as the sisters were one day inhaling the healthful breezes wafted over the azure bosom of the Mediterranean, their attention was attracted by a galley which came coasting along with measured strokes of the oar. As it drew near they observed that it was filled with armed men. The galley anchored at the foot of the tower in which they sat, and a number of Moorish soldiers landed on the narrow beach, conducting several Christian prisoners. The fair occupants of the tower peeped cautiously through the close jalousies of the lattice, which screened them from sight, and perceived among the prisoners three Spanish cavaliers, richly dressed. They were in the flower of youth, and of noble presence; and the lofty manner in which they carried themselves, though loaded with chains, and surrounded with enemies, bespoke the grandeur of their souls. The princesses breathed with intense and breathless interest. Cooped up as they had been in this castle among female attendants, seeing nothing of the male sex but black slaves, or the rude fishermen of the sea-coast, it is not to be wondered at that the appearance of three gallant cavaliers, in the pride of youth and manly beauty, should produce in their unsophisticated bosoms sensations closely bordering upon the agreeable.

"Did ever nobler being tread the earth than that cavalier in crimson?" cried Zayda, the eldest of the sisters. "See how proudly he bears himself, as though all around him were his slaves!"

"But notice that one in green!" exclaimed Zorayda. "What grace! what elegance! what spirit!"

The gentle Zorahayda said nothing; but she secretly gave preference to the chevalier in green.

Weeks and months glided on, the fair sisters thinking only of the captive cavaliers, and becoming daily more and more under the influence of the fatal passion which the memory of them strengthened and confirmed. The progress of this dangerous and subtle disease was not unperceived by the sharp-sighted Kadiga. The discreet old woman became alarmed at the mischief which she had not the power to counteract or remove, and resolved to rid herself of her responsible charge by intimating to Mohammed that his daughters had arrived at the marriageable age—the critical period at which the astrologers had warningly pointed.

As he sat one day on a divan in one of the cool halls of the Alhambra, a slave arrived from the fortress of Salobrena, with a message from the wise Kadiga, congratulating him on the anniversary of his daughters' birthday. The slave at the same time presented a delicate little basket, decorated with flowers, within which, on a couch of vine and fig leaves, lay a peach, an apricot, and a nectarine, with their bloom and down and dewy sweetness upon them, and all in the early stage of tempting ripeness. The monarch was versed in the oriental language of fruit and flowers, and readily divined the meaning of the emblematic offering.

"The critical period has arrived," said he; "I must gather them under my wing, and trust no other guardianship."

So saying, he ordered that a tower of the Alhambra should be prepared for their reception, and departed at the head of his guards for the fortress of Salobrena, to conduct them home in person. About three years had elapsed since Mohammed had beheld his daughters, and he could scarcely credit his eyes at the wonderful change which that small space of time had made in their appearance. During the interval they had passed that wondrous boundary line in female life which separates the crude, unformed, and thoughtless girl from the blooming, blushing, meditative woman.

He prepared for his return by sending heralds before him, commanding everyone to keep out of the road by which he was to pass; and that all doors and windows should be closed at the approach of the princesses. He then set out, accompanied by his precious charge on three beautiful white palfreys, and escorted by a strong guard.

The cavalcade was drawing near to Granada, when it overtook, on the banks of Xenil, a small body of Moorish soldiers, with a convoy of prisoners. It was too late for the soldiers to get out of the way, so they threw themselves on their faces on the earth, ordering their captives to do the same. Among the prisoners were the three identical cavaliers whom the princesses had seen from the pavilion. They either did not understand, or were too haughty to obey the order, and remained standing and gazing upon the cavalcade as it approached.

The ire of the monarch was kindled at this flagrant defiance of his orders. Drawing his scimitar and pressing forward, he was about to deal a left-handed blow that would have been fatal to at least one of the gazers, when the princesses crowded round him, and implored mercy for the offenders. Mohammed paused with uplifted scimitar, when the captain of the guard threw himself at his feet and exclaimed: "Let not your majesty do a deed that may cause great scandal throughout the kingdom. These are three brave and noble Spanish knights, who have been taken in battle, fighting like lions." "Enough!" said the King, "I will spare their lives, but punish their audacity; let them be taken to the Vermilion towers, and put to hard labor." While Mohammed had been making this harangue, the veils of the three princesses had been thrown back, and the radiance of their beauty revealed. Its effect upon the three cavaliers was instantaneous and complete. Quick as was this victory, not less singular was the fact that each of the love-vanquished cavaliers was enraptured with a special beauty. The cavalcade resumed its march and reached the Alhambra; the Spanish captives were conducted to their allotted prison in the Vermilion towers in the same fortress.

The memory of the noble cavaliers filled the fair charges of Kadiga with pensive and melancholy thoughts. In spite of all the luxury with which they were surrounded, they pined and faded. In vain did the anxious Mohammed ransack the Zacatin of Granada for the richest silks and most precious jewels. He gave it up as a hopeless affair, and gave carte blanche to the discreet Kadiga, in whom his confidence was unbounded. The wise duenna was skilled in diseases of the heart, and knew the best medicine for her pining charge. The day before she had discovered the locale of the Christian captives, and going privately to Hussien Baba, the big-whiskered, broad-shouldered renegado, in whose charge they were, and slipping a broad piece of gold into his itching palm, thus signified her wishes: "My mistresses have heard of the musical talents of the three Spanish cavaliers, and are desirous of hearing a specimen of their skill. I am sure you are too kind-hearted to refuse them so innocent a gratification." The cautious Hussien was about to suggest obstacles and dangers, but they were removed by the golden logic of Kadiga, and it was arranged that the cavaliers should be placed to work in the ravine at the bottom of the princesses' tower. The various scenes in the interesting drama which followed need not be detailed. By the generous connivance of Hussien Baba, the lovers held converse by song and flowers. Days and weeks flew by like so many hours, the mutual passion of the captives and their royal mistresses becoming strengthened by the very difficulties by which it was attended. At length there was an interruption in their telegraphic correspondence; for several days the cavaliers ceased to make their appearance in the glen. The three beautiful princesses looked out from the tower in vain. In vain they stretched out their swan-like necks from the balcony; in vain they sang like captive nightingales in their cage; nothing was to be seen of their Christian lovers; not a note responded from the groves. The discreet Kadiga was sent forth for intelligence, and soon returned with a face full of trouble. "Ah, my children!" cried the sorrowing duenna, "you may now hang up your lutes on the willows. The Spanish cavaliers are now ransomed by their families; they are down in Granada and are preparing to return to their native country."

The three beautiful princesses were in despair at the tidings. As soon as the first burst of sorrow had subsided, the faithful governess ventured to finish her communication. "Yes, my children, well may you grieve at the loss of such worthy cavaliers. Granada, alas! has not their equals. Would they had embraced the faith of Islam, and taken service under your father! There might have been hope. As it is, they are in despair, and could think of only one plan that would remedy your common misfortune."

"What was it, good Kadiga?" exclaimed the anxious princesses in a breath. "What was it? that we may lose none of their parting words."

"In the excess of their affection, they endeavored to persuade me to urge you to fly with them to Cordova, and become their wives!"

The three princesses turned alternately pale and red, and trembled, and looked down, and cast a shy look at each other; but doubts and fears were all silenced and removed by the potent arguments of love. The following night was the one appointed for their escape. Toward midnight, when the Alhambra was buried in sleep, the discreet Kadiga listened from the balcony of a window that looked into the garden. Hussien Baba, who was to accompany the cavaliers in their flight, was already below, and gave the appointed signal. The deunna fastened the end of a ladder of ropes to the balcony, lowered it into the garden, and descended. The two eldest princes followed her with beating hearts; but when it came to the turn of the youngest princess, Zorahayda, she hesitated and trembled. Every moment increased the danger of discovery. A distant tramp was heard.

"The patrols are walking the rounds," cried the renegado; "if we linger we perish. Princess, descend instantly, or we leave you."

Zorahayda was for a moment in fearful agitation; then, loosening the ladder of ropes, with desperate resolution, she flung it from the balcony.

"It is decided!" she cried; "flight is now out of my power. Allah guide and bless you, my sisters! Farewell!"

The two eldest princesses would fain have lingered, but the furious renegado hurried them away. A dark subterranean passage soon brought them to the outside of the fortress, where the cavaliers awaited them with fleet steeds. The lovers were disguised as Moorish soldiers of the guard, commanded by the renegado. The lover of Zorahayda was frantic when he heard that that she had refused to leave the tower; but there was no time to lose in lamentations. The two princesses were placed behind their lovers, the Kadiga mounted behind the renegado, and all set off at a discreet round pace in the direction of the pass of Lope, which leads through the mountains to Cordova.

They had not proceeded far when they heard the noise of drums and trumpets from the battlements of the Alhambra.

"Our flight is discovered!" said the renegado.

"We have fleet steeds, the night is dark, and we may distance all pursuit," replied the cavaliers.

They put spurs to their horses and scoured across the Vega. They had attained the mountain of Elvira, and were entering a pass when a bale-fire sprang up into a blaze on the top of the watch-tower.

"Confusion!" shouted the renegado; "that fire will put all the guards of the passes on the alert. Away! away! Spur for your lives, or they are lost."

Away they dashed, the clattering of their horses hoofs echoing from rock to rock, as they swept along the road that skirts the rocky mountain of Elvira.

"Forward! forward!" cried the renegado, as the watch-towers of the mountains answered the light from the Alhambra. "To the bridge—to the bridge, before the alarm has reached there!"

They doubled the promontory of the mountains, and arrived in sight of the famous Puento del Pinos that crossed a rushing stream, often dyed with Moorish and Christian blood. To their confusion the tower on the bridge blazed with lights, and glittered with armed men. Followed by the cavaliers, the renegado struck off from the road, skirted the river for some distance, and dashed into its waters. They were borne for some distance down the rapid current; the surges roared around them, but the beautiful princesses clung to their Christian knights, and never uttered a complaint. The party soon gained the opposite bank in safety, and were led by the renegado, by rude and unfrequented paths, through the heart of the mountains, so as to avoid all the regular passes. They succeeded in reaching the ancient city of Cordova, where the restoration of the cavaliers to their country and friends was celebrated with great rejoicings. The princesses were forthwith received into the bosom of the church, and, after being in all due form made regular Christians, were rendered happy wives.

After the flight of her sisters, the unhappy Zorahayda was confined still more closely, though she had no known inclination to elope. It was thought, indeed, that she secretly repented having remained behind, for now and then she would be seen leaning on the battlements of the tower, and looking mournfully toward the mountains of Cordova; and sometimes the notes of the lute were heard accompanying mournful ditties, in which she lamented the loss of her sisters and her lover, and bewailed her own solitary life. She died young, and, according to popular rumor, was buried in a vault, and her untimely fate has given rise to more than one traditionary fable.

DR. PRIESTLEY, who died in 1774, is spoken of as "the father of chemistry." The same claim was made by an Irish writer for Robert Boyle, who died in 1691, and whom the biographer declared to have been "the father of chemistry and the brother of the Earl of Cork." Both Boyle and Priestley were great chemists, and made important discoveries; but is impossible to determine at what period chemistry became so far developed as to deserve the name of science. It is supposed to have originated in ancient Egypt more than a thousand years before Christ.

The Great Diamond Swindler in Jail at Last.

Philip Arnold, of Elizabethtown, Ky., was arrested in Louisville a short time ago. The Courier-Journal of that city contains the following account of Arnold's offense and the arrest: The famous diamond swindle in San Francisco in 1871, with which Philip Arnold was conspicuously connected, is still fresh in the memory of the reader. The affair was the occasion of numerous newspaper publications for twelve months afterward, and the story of the great "sell" went the complete rounds of the American press. The story was in substance to the effect that Arnold, who moved to the West several years ago, was employed by a number of unknown capitalists and adventurers to "salt" a certain piece of ground in the norther part of New Mexico with rough diamonds, and then offer the land for sale as a genuine diamond mine. As it was related, Arnold went to London, bought forty thousand dollars' worth of diamonds in the rough, natural state, returned with them to New Mexico, and then, according to the programme, "salted" them over the ground. Next he went to San Francisco, and after representing his diamond field with glowing and extravagant accounts of its immense wealth, soon effected a sale of his interest therein, receiving a sum of money amounting to nearly $700,000.

A company was formed in San Francisco and New York to work the mine, and, soon after operations were commenced, it was discovered that the mine was a sham and the sale an immense swindle.

Arnold, after selling out, returned to Hardin county, his old home, and a few months later suit was brought against him in the Hardin County Circuit Court by W. M. Lent, of San Francisco, for the recovery of $300,000, alleged to have been paid Arnold for shares in the diamond mine. In the fall of 1873 the suit was removed to the United States Court in this city; but before trial was had the plaintiffs agreed to a compromise, Arnold paying Lent $150,000.

After this event the affair quieted down and so remained until Saturday last, when it came to light that the matter was still in an unsettled condition in California.

About a year ago a man named L. L. Treadwell caused an indictment to be found in San Francisco against Arnold for obtaining $75,000 under false pretences from him in a transaction similar to that which involved him with W. M. Lent.

The Dangers of Ear-Rings.

An inquest held at Liverpool the other day on the body of a little girl about eight years, the daughter of a sailor, conveys a lesson with regard to ear-rings, which is, at all events, worth the attention of woman. The unfortunate child, whose death formed the subject of inquiry, about three weeks ago underwent the operation of having her ears pierced with a stocking-needle. After the ears were pierced, two ear-rings belonging to her mother were put in them. A few days later a blister came behind one ear; then the jaws began to swell; worse symptoms ensued, and on Saturday last the child died. The medical evidence was to the effect that death had resulted from exhaustion consequent upon the intense inflammation caused by the piercing of the ears, and the jury rendered a verdict accordingly. Of course, if women choose to have their ears pierced, it would be impertinence on the part of man to remonstrate against the self-inflicted torture; but there can be no harm in suggesting that children might be allowed to reach years of discretion before they are called upon to follow the example of their elders and betters in this respect. It is, however, only fair on woman to admit that she did not invent the practice of ear-piercing. According to the Mohammedans, Abraham began it. In one of Sarah's jealous fits respecting Hagar, she said that she would not rest until she had dipped her hands in Hagar's blood. In order to quiet Sarah and enable her to redeem her promise without further upsetting her household, Abraham pierced Hagar's ears and drew rings through them. From that time ear-rings became the fashion.

Poor Women.

There is probably nothing, says the Nation, not even the sack of a stormed city, which brings out the devilish and animal parts of some men's nature as the unchecked control of another human being's person and feelings does. There are thousands of poor women in this city, without friends or hope in this world, who have to listen every night to the ravings and bear the blows and tortures of tyrannical beasts, compared to whom Walworth was harmless, and decent, and merciful; and yet the world knows nothing of their sorrows, unless when, now and then, some unlucky blow terminates their misery and their life together, and thousands of others pass their lives in higher stages of the same hell. What is the remedy for this state of things, except the general elevation of human nature, it would be hard to say. Legal remedies few people will care to discuss who seriously consider the condition of a woman whose youth and health have been passed in bearing children, and who has to face life without heart or hope, or training for any calling by which money may be made, and whose nearest friend has turned into one of those fiendish enemies by whom no male human being is ever pursued in civilized society.

Simple Cure for Boils.

Dr. Simon, a physician of Lorraine, gives us a new cure for boils, namely, by treating them with camphorated alcohol. As soon as the culmination point of a boil makes its appearance he puts a little of the liquid in a saucer, and, dipping the ends of his little fingers in it, rubs the inflamed surface, especially the central part, repeating the operation eight or ten times for about half a minute. He then allows the surface to dry, placing over it a slight coating of camphorated olive oil. He says that four such applications will, in almost all cases, cause boils to dry up and disappear; the operation to be performed morning, noon and evening. The announcement of so simple a cure for such a painful malady will bear repetition.

The Wonders of a Hen's Egg.

The following interesting observations on the changes that occur from hour to hour during the incubation of the hen's egg are from Sturm's Reflections:

The hen has scarcely sat on her eggs twelve hours before some lineaments of the head and body of the chicken appear. The heart may be seen to beat at the end of the second day; it has at that time somewhat the form of a horse-shoe, but no blood yet appears. At the end of two days two vessels of blood are to be distinguished, the pulsation of which is visible; one of these is the left ventricle, and the other the root of the great artery. At the fiftieth hour one auricle of the heart appears, resembling a noose folded down upon itself. The beating of the heart is first observed in the auricle, and afterward in the ventricle. At the end of seventy hours, the wings are distinguishable; and on the head two bubbles are seen for the brain, one for the bill, and two for the fore and hind part of the head. Toward the end of the fourth day, the two auricles already visible draw nearer to the heart than before. The liver appears toward the fifth day. At the end of seven hours more, the lungs and the stomach become visible; and four hours afterward the liver and intestines and loins and the upper jaw. At the one hundred and forty-fourth hour two ventricles are visible, and two drops of blood instead of the single one which was seen before. The seventh day the brain begins to have some consistency. At the one hundred and nineteenth hour of incubation the bill opens and the flesh appears in the breast. In four hours more the breast-bone is seen. In six hours after this the ribs appear, forming from the back, and the bill is very visible, as well as the gall-bladder. The bill becomes green at the end of two hundred and thirty-six hours; and if the chicken be taken out of its covering, it evidently moves itself. At the two hundred and sixty-fourth hour the eyes appear. At the two hundred and eighty-eighth the ribs are perfect. At the three hundred and thirty-first the spleen draws near the stomach, and the lungs to the chest. At the end of three hundred and fifty-five hours the bill frequently opens and shuts; and at the end of the eighteenth day the first cry of the chicken is heard. It afterward gets more strength and grows continually, till at length it is enabled to set itself free from its confinement.

Woman's Courage.

Williamsport was yesterday morning in a fever of excitement when it was announced that James Null had the night before been shot and killed by the wife of Mr. Joseph Ardinger, at their residence a few miles north of the town. The circumstances as near as we can gather them are as follow:—"Mrs. Ardinger, at about 9 o'clock on Tuesday night, accompanied by several of her children, went to the spring near the house for water, her husband being absent. On her way returning she was met or followed by Null, who, armed with a knife used insulting language and demanded admittance to the house. Mrs. Ardinger succeeded in getting in the house, shut the door in his face and locked it. Null then went to the rear door, and whilst attempting to force, or after he had forced it, Mrs. A., having in the meantime armed herself with a revolver, fired two shots. Null left suddenly and it was not known till the following morning that the shots had taken effect. He was then found lying about 50 yards from the house, dead, traces of blood following his path from the door of the house. When found he still retained the knife in his hand. Null was a disorderly and dangerous character, and his sudden taking off is a matter of congratulation in the neighborhood."—Hagerstown (Md.) Press.

French Coffee.

French coffee is much talked of, and the general supposition is that the peculiar French quality is in some filtering process, or in the way the element is extracted from the berry. But any intelligent housewife knows how to extract the element from the berry without any peculiar apparatus. Unless she sews it up as the French do, she will have nothing that will appear like French coffee. The French make their coffee so strong that one-part of liquor requires the addition of two parts to reduce it to the proper strength. This addition is made with hot milk. This large proportion of hot milk, in the place of so much warm water, gives the coffee a richness like unto that made by the addition of cream in the ordinary way. By this means hotels, and anybody that will go the expense of buying good milk, can have good coffee without cream.—Cincinnati Gazette.

THE Bishop of Zululand having toned up his people so that he considered it safe to leave them awhile, made a visit to England. When the cat is absent, the mouse will indulge in recreation; and while the Bishop was away the people took occasion to settle some old scores that had gathered bulk during his restraining presence. The young King Uludongo was poisoned at the instigation of his uncle, Umdwendwe, by one of the chief Indunas. The old Queen dowager thereupon immediately called together all the chiefs, and in the evening, at sunset, killed many of those implicated in her son's death, including the guilty uncle. She then dispatched a thousand warriors to the country of Umdwendwe, with orders to slay all the people, including woman and children, and the thousand warriors slew 4,000 Umdwendweans according to orders. Whether, when the Bishop goes to England again, he will take his people with him or kill them before he goes, is a question now under consideration.

A Spirit's Visit.

Some of our readers, says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, may remember a statement by Dr. Ditson, of Albany, copied into these columns some time since, to the effect that Charles Wise and wife, an aged couple living in Schenectady, driving home from Glenville early one evening, twelve years ago, were struck by an engine on the Central road and killed, and that a lady living in Schenectady was told of the occurrence about three-quarters of an hour before it occurred! The editor of the Schenectady Union has investigated the statement, and he believes it true in all its details. "The lady alluded to," he says, "is now a resident of this city, one of the most intelligent and respectable ladies in the place, whose word would be just as good as her bond. She is known by most of our citizens, and no one would think of questioning her word on any subject when she spoke knowingly." The Union repeats the story, as follows:

"At ten minutes past five, just forty minutes before the accident happened, and while the train that killed Mr. and Mrs. W. must have been twenty miles from said crossing, the lady in this city, already alluded to, heard her door-bell ring, which she answered. She found at the door an aged lady, or what appeared to her as such whose dress indicated that she belonged to a previous generation, and whom she did not know. She informed the stranger that she did not know her, the stranger making a similar observation with regard to her. The strange woman then told her to send down to the 6 o'clock train, as the dead bodies of her friends and neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Wise, were upon it. The old lady then left. The lady of the house told her husband, who was in the back yard at the time, who heard the bell ring, what had happened, but he did not believe it, and made the matter the subject of ridicule. But being urged a second or third time, he went to the depot. The train not having arrived he returned home, still more a disbeliever than ever. Concluding, however, to satisfy himself that the whole thing was a mere fancy, he went again to the depot, this time to find the train in considerable late, but, true enough, bearing the dead bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Wise, who were killed as above stated. As was previously stated, there is no telegraphic communication with the scene of the accident, and if there had been how could it have given notice here of an accident forty minutes before it happened? As was stated, the lady who received this information was not a Spiritualist. She subsequently described the appearance of the person who rang the bell to a sister of Mrs. Wise, who declared it to be a true description of her mother, who had been dead many years. We have repeated part that was stated in the article in the New York paper, in order to give the facts just as we learned them, and also to show that said report was essentially true."

The editor speculates considerably as to the mystery, and although he is not a Spiritualist, he intimates his profound belief first in the story, and next in the supposition that the mysterious visitor of the Schenectady lady was an embodied spirit. Now, then, will some scientist, or perhaps some one well versed in human nature and the prevalent desire to believe in the marvelous, take up this case and investigate it?

A Girl Dresses in Male Attire and Works in a Harvest-Field.

Col. J. C. Myers, owning an extensive farm about seven or eight miles west of Omaha, employed several harvest hands two or three weeks ago, at $2.50 per day each. Among the number thus engaged was a young, rather good-looking and smooth-faced chap, who attracted some attention on account of his very symmetrical build. He worked faithfully from morning till night in the harvest-field beneath the hot sun, and fairly earned his money. On Saturday last Col. Myers was considerably surprised upon accidently discovering that the supposed young man was a girl dressed in male attire. He at once accused her of being a female and demanded her reason for thus unsexing herself. She acknowledged the fact, and explained, that, owing to adverse circumstances, and her inability to obtain work at any reasonable compensation while attired as a girl, she had donned the garments of a man and had then no difficulty in securing employment at a remunerative price. This was not her first appearance in a harvest-field, nor was it the first time she had done the work of a man. Further than this she would not explain, refusing to give her right name, her home, or any other facts concerning herself.

Of course, under the circumstances, Col. Myers could not longer continue her in his employment, as the discovery had become known among the farm hands. He accordingly discharged her in the kindest manner, paying her in full for the labor she had done. She then bid her employer good-by and took her departure to seek work elsewhere.

Had she attended Trinity Church last Sunday evening, she might have been benefited by that portion of Dr. Garrett's sermon which strongly condemned the practice of young people donning the costume of the opposite sex, either for amusement or other objects. That habit was one that originated among the earliest heathen, who practiced it in their idolatrous orgies.—Omaha Bee.

A Lone Game.

A smart Troy, New York, billiardist picked up a countryman, and induced him to play a game of billards—one hundred points. The city boy took the cue, and run the game out without a stop. The countryman quietly laid down his cue, and started for the door. Said the billiardist, "Here, come back and pay for this game." "What game?" said country. "Why, the game we just played." "We?" said the countryman, "we? I ha'n't played no billiards, as I know of. I guess, mister, see'n as you played the game alone, you'd better pay for it alone!" Whereat the countryman walked out and the smart city boy cogitated.

How Children are "Raised."

What ought, what can a mother do, when a good, pleasant, careless husband constantly thwarts all her efforts to teach or govern the children, and yet cannot be made to see or feel what he is doing?

Let us illustrate and sketch from memory, not imagination:

"Mamma, please give me a piece of pie?"

"No, darling, one piece is enough."

"Half a piece, please, mamma?"

"No, Freddie, no more."

"A very little piece, mamma, dear?"

"No, Freddie, no."

"Do give the child a little piece; I'll risk it's hurting him."

And the mother gave it.

"Mamma, may I go out and play?"

"It's very chilly, and you have a cold. I don't think it is best."

"Bundle me up warm, mamma, and I won't take cold."

"I fear you will; you must play indoors to-day."

"Just a little while, please, mamma?"

"No, Freddie, you must not go out to-day."

"Do let the child go out. What a girl you are making of him. Women never were fitted to bring up boys. Dress him up warm, and let him run; it will do him good."

And Freddie went out.

"May I have my blocks in the parlor, mamma?"

"No, Willie; make your block-house in the dining-room. Miss L. is an invalid and I want the parlor very quiet."

"I'll be very quiet."

"You will intend to be, but you cannot help making some noise, and as Miss L. very rarely goes anywhere, I feel she will be very tired at best; so be a very good little boy and play in the dining-room this afternoon."

"I won't make a bit of noise, nor tire her one speck."

"You must play in the dining-room, Willie, and not say any more about it."

"Nonsense! it will do her good to see a happy little face; it will give her something besides her own pains and aches to think of. Let him bring his blocks in the parlor."

And he brought them in.

"What a torment that boy has got to be! It's teaze, teaze, teaze from morning till night. It's enough to wear the patience out of Job! If you don't whip him I will."

And he whipped him.

Query—Who ought to be whipped?—"Mother at Home."

Mistaken Philanthropy.

On circus-day evening a well-known, well-to-do citizen of this city, whose kindness of heart and deeds toward "God's poor" are in every man's mouth, though he himself is proverbial for his modesty, went up to the circus. Like the ancient Emperor Aurelian, he counts that day lost which records no good deed—something done which has made some one happy. On his way up he revolved in his own mind the deeds of the day, but could think of nothing he had done which had made any one glad, and his heart was full of regrets that he had accomplished nothing. Just as he approached the entrance to the tent he heard the man who collected the tickets order a little girl, perhaps 10 or 12 years of age, and evidently one of the poorest of the poor, away from the tent because she had no ticket. The child showed her grief in a glistening tear-drop, and turned regretfully away. Here was the chance, and our philanthropist grasped quickly at the opportunity. He approached the girl, and told her to follow him and he would take her in to see the circus. She expressed her gratitude in the best manner she knew, and followed him in. He took great pains in showing her all the animals, explaining their peculiarities to her, the country they came from, etc., regardless of the wonder it created among his friends. He then entered the circus tent; seating his protege by his side, and congratulating himself that he had made that girl's heart purer and happier for that day, at least. When the performance was about half through the girl got up and started to go out. "Why do you leave so soon, my dear?" asked our philanthropist. "Oh!" said she, "this is the d—dest poorest circus I ever saw. Get off my dress and let me go." Love's labor was lost, and the philanthropist was at last left with the conviction that his day was lost also.—Dubuque Times.

A Terrible Tragedy at Sea.

The Journal Officiel of Paris has received an account of a terrible occurrence at sea, the particulars of which are as follows:

On the 8th of June the Italian vessel Napoleon Camarero sailed from Macao with a crew of 40 men, 663 coolies for Callao, and 8,000 packets of fireworks. After a lapse of two days, the interpreter discovered a plot among the emigrants to seize on the ship. The Captain immediately ordered one-half of them to be confined in the hold, but the next day those who remained on deck armed themselves with knives, belaying-pins, pieces of wood, in short, anything they could lay their hands on, and attacked the crew, who defended themselves with muskets and revolvers. The coolies then massed themselves on the forecastle and set fire to the vessel, hoping that the crew would set to work at the pumps to extinguish the flames. During that time they had also freed their comrades, and murdered the few sailors they could get hold of. The Captain, seeing what they were doing, ordered the boat to be lowered, and left the ship with the remainder of his men. Some sailors who remained on board with the doctor, the magazine man and interpreter, were unable to prevent the flames from reaching the fireworks, and the ship blew up, scattering the fragments of the mutineers in every direction, under the very eyes of the escaped crew.

THE New York Herald remarks: "Many people think that since the abolition of the slave trade, as directly connected with the equipment of slave ships in New York and the hanging of Gordon in the harbor, that the traffic in human flesh had come to an end. Those who think so are laboring under a grievous error, for at No. 148 West Twenty-sixth street there is always a stock of babies on hand, who can be purchased for a consideration, varying from $15 to $25. They are advertised for 'adoption.'"

Russian Railways.

It appears from a statement in Russian papers that the Russian railway system covered, at New Year last, a total length of 15,842 versts, of which 5,262 versts were state-owned lines; 651 versts are in Finland. The figures refer only to lines already fully completed and worked; 1,740 versts more are in progress of construction, and 2,348 versts are projected. Of the fifty railway companies existing in the empire, only ten have constructed their lines altogether without Government assistance; the remaining forty are guaranteed—twenty to the full amount of their capital, the other twenty only to a partial extent. The entire sum annually guaranteed by the state in the shape of interest and repayment of capital amounts to 51,177,627 roubles. In 1873, 14,592,172 roubles, being 78.52 per cent. of the sum total, were actually paid out of the exchequer. The charters granted to railway companies are for the most part terminable after between seventy-five and eighty-five years. Some small companies have charters only for thirty-seven years.

A STORY is told, and it may be averred, says the Rock, that it is "founded on the fact," that in a certain cathedral city there once dwelt two ministers of the gospel—one, we will call him John Brown, and member of the Cathedral body; and another of the same name, a poor independent minister. The similarity of address led to some unfortunate contretemps; letters and parcels intended for one J. B. went to the other J. B. On one occasion the Cathedral J. B. became angry on opening a parcel not intended for him and he consequently addressed the following note to Mr. J. Brown:

"Sir—If you had not assumed a title to which you had no right, this mistake could not have occurred. Your obedient servant, etc."

The nonconformist bided his time in silence. Not long after this, however, he too opened a parcel intended for his High Church brother. It contained a considerable supply of manuscript sermons. Upon this the dissenting brother addressed the following courteous retort to the minor canon:

"Rev. Sir—If you had not undertaken an office for which you are wholly unfit, this accident could not have occurred. Yours obedient servant, J. B.'

Photography at the Bottom of the Sea.

Dr. Neumayer recently exhibited before the Berlin Geographical Society a photographic apparatus designed for the determination of the temperature and of the currents at great depths in the ocean. The invention is composed of a copper box, hermetically sealed and furnished with an exterior appendage made like a rudder. In the interior is a mercury thermometer and a compass, each inclosed in a glass receptacle in which are admitted traces of nitrogen gas. A small electric battery completes the apparatus. When the latter is allowed to descend attached to a sounding line, the action of the current on its rudder causes it to assume a parallel direction, thus indicating the set of the flow by the relative position of compass, needle and rudder. The thermometer of course shows the surrounding temperature. In order to fix these indications, a piece of photographic paper is suitably disposed near the glass cases containing the instruments. Then at the proper time a current of electricity is established through the gas in the receptacles, causing an intense violent light, capable of acting chemically upon the paper for a sufficient length of time to allow of the photography thereon of the shadows of the compass needle and of the mercury column. Within three minutes, it is said, the operation is complete, when the apparatus is hoisted and the paper removed.

The "Life-Dress."

Mr. C. S. Merriman, of New York, the patentee of the life-dress, has offered $500 to Mr. Paul Boyton, the diver, to to make a sea voyage in his suit, in order to demonstrate to the public its merits as a life-preserver. He has accepted the proposal, and on or about the 25th of September he will be carried from New York by an outward-bound steamer to a distance not less than 200 miles from land, when he will be dropped and left to the mercy of the waves until he shall meet a passing vessel. He will carry with him in a rubber bag sufficient rations, consisting of dried meats, etc., for one week as well as a good quantity of fresh water. He will also carry signal lights and flags, with a sectional flag twelve feet long for raising them, all of which are to be stowed away in the unlimited portals of the rubber bag, which is about two feet square, and is of little or no inconvenience, strapped to and floated at the side of the swimmer. The feat may be considered by many as challenging death, but Mr. Boyton is very sanguine of success, and says that he would willingly allow himself to be left a thousand miles out without the slightest fears regarding his safe recovery. In order to accomplish this object he has chosen the mentioned date as the one when he will be most likely to encounter the severe equinoctial gales.

Roaches and Borax.

A Pittsburgh correspondent tells how to get rid of our colony of roaches: "Sprinkle your desk and the floor with pulverized borax; let it remain some days without being brushed off the desk or floor, and, our word for it, 'brown roaches' will be completely vanished to appear never more." Oh, you be hanged. Didn't we try the borax, and didn't the roaches immediately hold a public meeting and adopt a series of resolutions thanking us for the kindness we had done them; and didn't all the other roaches in town attend the convention and determine to become permanent members of the colony when the meeting adjourned; and aren't they swarming around us this moment "as thick as Tewksbury mustard?" Give the scoundrels borax, and they think you are a mother to them—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Causes of Insomnia.

Researches lately made by Dr. Duckworth, an English physician, appear to show clearly that the brain is comparatively anæmic during sleep, and that the blood thus removed from the head is more freely supplied to the viscera and integuments. The most constant cause, and certainly the most frequent accompaniment of sleeplessness, says Dr. Duckworth, is an opposite condition—one of active and increased cerebral circulation. There may, he says, sometimes be a species of nocturnal dyspepsia, mild in its character, and producing actual suffering, but giving rise to persistent insomnia. There may be symptoms beyond dryness of the mouth, burning of the soles of the feet, and heat and throbbing in the head, these being probably due to a too acid condition of the contents of the stomach and upper part of the small intestines.

WINNING GOLDEN OPINIONS.—Perhaps no man living has won more golden opinions than Dr. Walker, as the enormous and widely increasing sale of his CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS attests. We never look into one of our exchanges but there is a panegyric of the Bitters staring us in the face. Our readers will say that there must be a reason for all this praise. They are right. The efficacy of this celebrated medicine is established by evidence which it is impossible to doubt. Among the thousands who have borne testimony to its excellence, there is not one dissentient voice. In very many phases of inorganic disease it seems to be unfailing. All diseases arising from a vitiated state of the blood are surely eradicated by it. It is an effectual remedy for pulmonary complaints, bilious, remittent and intermittent fevers, rheumatism and dyspepsia. It purges the body of all unhealthy humors, gives tone to the system, and where the vital powers are enfeebled, restores their functions to vigorous and healthy action. All this it does the more effectually because its operation is not interfered with by the presence of alcohol. The VINEGAR BITTERS is perfectly free from any such hurtful ingredient. We have always believed that plants contain the true remedies for disease, and all the remedies necessary. Dr. Walker is on the line of real progress, and we hope that he will not rest on his present discoveries. 5

WHOEVER makes the most promises is apt to carry the election.

Treating the Wrong Disease.

Many times women call upon their family physician, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with trouble of the breast, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctors, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder; and while they are thus only able perhaps to palliate for a time, they are ignorant of the cause, and encourage their practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patients are no better in the end, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and other complications made, and which a proper medicine directed to the cause would have entirely removed, thereby instituting health and comfort instead of prolonged misery.

From Miss LORINDA E. ST. CLAIR, Shade, Athens, O., Oct. 14th, 1872:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.—Your Favorite Prescription is working almost like a miracle on me. I am better already than I have been for over two years."

From ELLA A. SCHAFER, Zanesville, Ind., Aug. 3, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE—I received the medicine you sent me and began using it immediately. As a result of the treatment I feel better than I have for three years."

From MRS. JOHN E. HAMLIN, Odell, Ill., Mar. 19, 1872:

"DR. PIERCE—The Favorite Prescription has done me good, which I am very thankful for."

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—This medicine is used by construction companies for the benefit of their employes, when engaged in malarial districts. The highest testimonials have been given by contractors and by the Presidents of some of the leading railroads in the South and West. When men are congregated in large numbers in the neighborhood of swamps and rivers, Wilhoft's Tonic will prove a valuable addition to the stock of medicines, and will amply reward the company in the saving of time, labor and money. We recommend it to all. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly skin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxuriant tresses, they become irresistible.

Fell from a Railroad Car, and nearly broke his neck. Pat picked him up, rubbed him with Mexican Mustang Liniment, and sent him on by the next train. Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions, lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel-plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

On Everybody's Tongue.—Eulogiums of the great National Regenerator of Health, PLANTATION BITTERS, are on everybody's tongue. This gratuitous viva voce advertising is better than all paid-for puffing to which the owners of bogus bitters are obliged to resort. It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

THE FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

Headquarters for the Grangers.

They are just the customers we want to deal with, we will guarantee them No Middlemen shall eat the profits between them and us. We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb profit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade, so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen.

History of Thieving Contracts.

After having been driven, says the New York Sun, by the exposures of the press and an indignant public sentiment to repeal the Jayne jobbery, the Sanborn contracts, part of the back-pay grab, and other iniquitous legislation of the last Congress, the Republican leaders have the audacity to claim as a merit what they were compelled reluctantly to yield as a necessity. Mr. Morton, who sounded the key note for his party was bold enough to say in his recent speech:

"The detection and exposure of the Credit Mobilor, Sanborn and District of Columbia transactions were the voluntary and earnest work of the Republican party."

When a public man, holding the political position that Senator Morton does, thus outrages truth and wilfully falsifies recent and familiar facts, he only exposes the desperation of his cause and the recklessness of his character.

In the summer of 1872, when we first detected and exposed the Credit Mobiler, the Republican press and managers with a united voice denounced the charges as false; and the members of Congress who were subsequently convicted of corruption, and who sought to escape the penalty of that crime by adding to it flagrant perjury were the very first to rush into print with denials of any complicity, and solemn protestations of perfect innocence. And it was only when the proofs produced became irresitible, that they yield to an investigation and were whitewashed by Mr Poland's committee.

So too in the case of Washington Ring and their enormous frauds. The organs of the Administration at Washington and elsewhere not only upheld them, but the President and Cabinet considered in an illegal process to abduct Charles A. Dana, the editor of New York Sun, for those exposures, hoping by that outrage to silence criticism and to insure the continued success of a plundering combination. In spite of the proofs of appalling rascality and robbery, there would have been no investigation but for fear of the coming elections, and the upright man who moved it in the House—J. M. Wilson of Indiana—is still hounded by the confederates of the dethronged Boss for an honest discarge of his duty.

The Custom House corruption with all its ramifying roguery, was investigated twice in New York city by committees of the Senate, and in both cases the Republican majority endorsed the jobbery, found everything pure and proper, and issued a new license to protect extortion on commerce and the blackmailing of merchants.

All the scandalous legislation which has provoked such just and intense feeling everywhere, was deliberately designed to attain the very objects which have been so completely exposed. Burglars never entered upon their work with better preparation than did the Republican majority of the last Congress. The plans were all concocted in secret, and sprung with the perfection of machinery at the appointed hour. The excitement over the Credit Mobiler had hardly cooled before the back pay and salary steal bill of enormities was hurried through in the closing hours, as if to cap the climax of a long series of thieving schemes.

And now it is pretended by Mr. Morton and his followers that the Sanborn law was passed thoughtlessly and was repealed promptly. It remained over two years on the statute book, and it was not until four million dollars was extorted under it, of which but two hundred and fifty thousand went into the Treasure, and there was a loud demand by the press and the commercial community for repeal, aided by a wholesome fear of the elections, that the party yielded at all

They went into it with their eyes open, and the record is useful for revealing the means by which such infamous legislation was carried, and bringing before the public the men who ore responsible for it. When this project was first concocted early in 1872, it was presented to the Committe on Appropriations in the House and was refused. Then they carried it to the Senate, and got an amendment put in the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. The only explanation made there was that it proposed to collect money illegally withheld from the Treasury.

Mr. Pratt On The Question

The only report of Mr. Pratt's speeches we have seen is a very unsatisfactory and brief one, published in a Peru paper of last week. Accepting it, however as representing in the main Mr. Pratt's position on the financial question, we are astonished that a man of his usual fairnes and intelligence should so misrepresent his opponents as he is reported to have done in Peru. In the Senate, by his speech and votes, Mr. Pratt was a pronounced inflationist, and advocated that heresy with as much party zeal as any man in that body. He now changes front, and condemns the Indiana Democratic platform because it favors the redemption of bonds with greenbacks, a measure, he says, that will increase the volume of the currency nine hundred millions of dollars. Hence he is opposed to that scheme because it would effect the standard of values.

Mr. Pratt did not read far enough. The resolution says that the bonds should be redeemed and greenbacks issued from time to time, as the legitimate business interests of the country should demand, thereby preserving an equilibium in trade. It is identical with the doctrine advocated by Mr. Morton, in 1868, and approved by both the Republican and Democratic parties. The issuing of greenbacks to the extent of the bonded debt was never contemplated by the Democratic party and nowhere urged by it. It has, however advocated the repeal of the National banking law, and the substitution of greenbacks for national bank notes. To this Mr. Prats is opposed, but without reason, as he contents himself with merely stating a general objection to such a policy. The Democratic reason for this policy is that: 1. It would distroy a great monopoly that is quietly but certainly gaining the possession and control of the legislation of the country, and menaceing the interests of the agricultural and mechanical classes, 2. That it would give the country but one paper currency, the payment of which is pledge by the people themselves. 3. That it would cut off eighteen millions of dollaas in gold annually paid in the way of interest to the bond holders. 4. It would be release and make subject to taxation the capital now looked up and exemted, in government bonds.

Mr. Pratt's argument is more in the nature of a special plea in the interests of the national bank and the bondholders, than those general ones pretaining to the people. He thinks it wrong to lay hands upon the banks, as they have in good faith investeu their money in that line of business. Admit it; Has not the business man, in equal good faith, invects his capital in some line of business which is subject to the mutations of time and the laws of trade? Are not these the attendant risks every man takes upon himself, in engaging in any enterprise? The people have justly complained that Congress has favored the capital of the country at the expense of its industry, and to substantiate this well wrounded charge, the point to the national bank system, that under the protecting care of the goveanment has become an immense and poweaful monopoly, able to secure any kind of congressional legislation its interests demand. Does Mr. Pratt say this is just and that at should be continued? That the good faith of the people is pledged to so monstrous a doctrine? If so, it is time that both he and his party are roted out of public places.—Pharos.

The Pulpit War-Whoop.

From the Congregationalist

Please to notice. It is a cry, or shout. We do not hear at all refer to the pious whine with which some white cravatted speakers bewail to the evil spirits of the age; nor the holy nasal tone which some men who are veery sensible follows out of the desk invariably of unocusiously, assume when they get into it; nor the sepulchral squawk which now and then, some conscientious reprover goes down into the double bass to emphasize; but what we have in mind is the loud and growing, the selfsatisfied and irrepressible, the exuberant and ear-stunning, the turgid and tremendous howl-growl; tha sonorous stentorian, uproarous obstreperous clang, clangor, peal swell rear, blast, hubbub and hullabaloo with which some of our great pulpit orators balabor an audience, under the impression that there can be no sincere and effective preaching of the Gosple unless soaldelivered that a deaf man with cotton wool in his ears might be warranted to hear it at the distance of half a mile, or thereabouts. This is what we refer to.

We call it the pulpit whoop.

How County Officers Play it.

The Indianapolis Sentinel and Journal were recently discussing the relative expenditures in democratic and republican counties, during which the Sentinel made the following pungent thrust.

"To show the effect that a board of republican commissioners may have on the precentage of a democratic county it will be sufficient to cite the case of Fountian. This county stands very high in the Journal's table. It is democratic and yet the republican board governs it. Its expence for stationery during the year ending June 30th, amounted to $6,000 while many of the democratic counties of the State such as Madison, Knox, Jackson and Shelby were suyplyed at the rate of from $1,500 to $2,000. This county had a contract with the Sentinel for furnishing $2,000 worth of stationery and repudiated the agreement with the company refused to forward a county official a suit of broadcloth and charge the cloth as stationery. The Fountain board of commisioners immediately thereafter entered into a contract with the Journal for $3,500 worth of stationery, and that virtuous establishment is on record as drawing $875 for one quarter although only $62 worth of stationery was furnished.

The Oldest Voter Heard From.

The following extraordinary statement is given in the Bloomington Ind correspondent of the Louisville Courier Journal, where it appears just as here printed; Having notice in several journals articles claiming for their various localities the honor of having in their midst the oldest voter, I concluded to put in the claims of Monroe county, Indiana. Living near Bloomington is our venerable old friend Wm. Ross, who, according to his own account and family record, was born at Guilford Court House, North Carolina May, 17, 1759; consequently he is one hundred and fifteen (115) years old the 17th of last month (May). Father Ross is in splended health, visits Bloomington frequently during plesant weather of Summer, kills squarrels with his rifle, chops wood, works his own garden and says he feels as young as he did half a centuay ago, Father Ross was not in the Revolutionary war but was an eye witness of the battle of Guilford Court House, North Corelina, and makes no claim to having been a member of the military family of Gen, Washington, or of ever having seen the General. He has voted for ninty-four years, dut does not remember how many votes he has cast within that time, but must been well on to two hundred times, and had invaribly voted the regular democratic ticket and never fails to pay his taxes. He is certainly the oldest man in the State if not in the world."

A Plea for the County Paper.

From the Brooklin Reporter

The county paper is the best read paper in the world. No other contains the marriages and deaths, to say nothing of divorces and births; no other gives the time for the next ball, picnic, dramatic association meeting (?) or political meeting; no other discusses the affairs of the town and county, the arrival of new goods on the murchants' counters, or a new hat on the editor's desk. Without a paper in the town that has ever injoyed a well managed one feels indeed lost.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER preached at the Twin Mountain House, N. H., on the 30th ult., to a congregation of over 1,000 persons. His sermon was pronounced one of his most successful efforts.

FRANK MOULTON has addressed a card to the public, through the New York papers, explaining his reasons for appearing in Plymouth Church to hear the report of the Investigating Committee, and protesting against the rough manner in which he was treated by the congregation. He winds up with the following threat: "I will add that the hearing, which was last night denied to me in the place where I had the right to demand and expect it, I shall ask for from the public at large in a few days. The only delay in the publication will arise from the preparation of fac simile copies of letters and papers. I have sought for four years, for the sake of the innocent children of two families, to shield Mr. Beecher from the exposure of his crime of adultery, but Mr. Beecher, his committee, and his church have united to compel me, for my own self-protection, to reveal him to the world, as I shall shortly do, in a still worse light than in which he now stands."...It cost New York city the enormous sum of $50,000,000 to run its municipal government for the year ending Aug. 1.

They took his pocket-book and $5, and then tied him on the track with a rope, over a small culvert, and left him. He succeeded in getting the ropes that held his body united, but before he got the rope that bound his left foot loosened an approaching passenger train was upon him. He in that desperate moment, threw his body off the track. The train passed over and severed his leg from the body. He was picked up next morning by the conductor of a passing freight train and revived sufficiently to make the above statement. He afterward relapsed and died at 9 o'clock a. m. There is no clew to the perpetrators of the crime.

COL. DAVID NORRIS, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Southwestern Missouri, 65 years of age, was brutally murdered last week, in Baxter county, by a young man named William P. Dickson. LATEST advices from Shreveport confirm the report of the murder of the twelve political prisoners taken from Coushatta, while on their way to the former place. Coushatta is the county-seat of Red River parish, and the men killed were F. S. Edgarton, Sheriff; H. T. Twitchell, Tax-Collector; Clark Holland, Register; Gilbert Cone, Deputy-Sheriff; W. F. Howell, attorney at law; and [illegible], Tax-Collector of Desota parish, all white, and six colored men whose names are not known. The Comptroller of the Currency will add this series to the already lengthy list of national bank notes to be called in for cancellation, the rule being to call in and abolish by cancellation the whole issue of each denomination of a bank that is successfully counterfeited.

ILLINOIS DEMOCRATS AND LIBERALS.

The Illinois Convention put in the field the following ticket: For State Treasurer, Charles Carroll, of Gallatin county; Superintendent of Schools, S. M. Etter, of McLean, nominee of the Independents. The following brief platform was adopted:

First—The restoration of gold and silver as the basis of the currency, the resumption of specie payments as soon as possible without disaster to the business interests of the country, by steadily opposing inflation, and by the payment of the national indebtedness in the money of the civilized world.

Second—Free commerce; no tariff for any purpose but for revenue.

Third—Individual liberty and opposition to sumptuary laws.

Fourth—The right and duty of the State to protect its citizens from extortion and unjust discrimination by chartered monopolies.

Fifth—Rigid restriction of the Governments, both State and National, to the legitimate domain of political power by excluding therefrom all executive and legislative intermeddling with the affairs of society whereby monopolies are fostered, privileged classes aggrandized, and individual freedom unnecessarily and oppressively restrained.

Gen. Lieb offered the following additional resolutions, which were adopted:

WHEREAS, The Republican party has ignored the just claims of our disabled soldiers and violated its pledge repeatedly made whereby thousands of these noble wards of the nation are compelled to live upon the cold charity of the world,

Resolved, That we now demand that all the pensions of our crippled soldiers shall be so increased as to shield every one of them from daily want, without compelling them to take refuge in a so-called Soldiers' Home.

Resolved, That the present system of pension agencies is vicious and detrimental to the interest of those it is pretending to protect, and should be thoroughly investigated by Congress.

THE REPUBLICANS OF MICHIGAN.

The Michigan Republicans nominated the following ticket: Governor, John J. Bagley; Lieutenant-Governor, Henry H. Holt; Secretary of State, E. G. D. Holden; Treasurer, William B. McCreery; Auditor-General, Ralph Ely; Attorney-General, Andrew J. Smith; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Daniel B. Briggs. The platform adopted affirms the continued confidence of the people in the Republican party, and expresses a determination to see the doctrine of equal rights adopted before it thinks of disbandment. It demands that "in all financial legislation, Congress shall keep steadily in view the resumption of specie payment, to the end that, at the earliest day practicable, the promises to pay of the Government may be equivalent in coin in like amount through the commercial world." It expresses the belief that "banking, under a well guarded national system, should be free, the volume and locality of issues being regulated by the business law of demand; and denounces repudiation in every form or degree, holding the pledged faith of the republic sacred and inviolable in both letter and spirit."

THE KANSAS REPUBLICANS.

The Kansas Republican Convention nominated for Governor the present incumbent, Thomas A. Osborne. The platform recites the record of the Republican party from its organization to the present time, especially noting its action and achievements during the war, and subsequent reconstruction, and other measures for the welfare of the country, and commending in strong terms its rare courage in investigating official delinquencies, and punishing official dishonor in its own ranks; expresses the opinion that the public debt should not be reduced spasmodically, but gradually and surely; reaffirms the policy announced by the party in the National Conventions of 1868 and 1872; favors such legislation as will make national banking free to all; demands the lessening of the number of State officials; denounces the salary grab; declares that all railroad corporations are the creatures of the State, and that it is the duty of the Legislature to protect the people against extortion and secure transportation at reasonable rates; favors the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the control of the War Department; denounces drunkenness as "one of the greatest curses of modern society," and favors such legislation as will be most effectual in destroying the evil; declares against a third Presidential term; and affirms that the public lands are for the use of actual settlers, and condemns any further grants of the public domain to railroad or other corporations.

THE DEMOCRACY OF OHIO.

Appended is the ticket nominated by the Democratic Convention of Ohio: For Secretary of State—Wm. Bell, of Licking; for School Commissioner—C. S. Smart, of Pickaway; for Judge of the Supreme Court—W. J. Gilmore, of Preble; for Clerk of the Supreme Court—Arnold Green, Cuyahoga; for Member of the Board of Public Works—Martin Schill, of Ross. The platform affirms the adherence of the party "to its ancient principles of securing equal rights and exact justice to all men, and to all States" of the Union, and its opposition to "every attempt to usurp any of the powers reserved by the Constitution to the States respectively and to the people thereof;" declares "in favor of such an increase of the circulating medium as the business interests of the country may from time to time require, and that sound policy and justice require that no less than one-half of the customs duties should be payable in greenbacks;" favors the abolition of "the frachise of the national banks to issue a paper currency as soon as the same can safely and prudently be done, and that the notes so overdrawn by the banks be substituted by the Government with a legal-tender currency;" declares that the 5-20 bonds ought to be payable in legal-tender notes; opposes "all combinations that tend to increase the cost of transportation beyond a fair remuneration to the carrier;" opposes any further grants of the public domain to railway corporations, and favors the policy that looks to the ownership of these lands by actual settlers; opposes the Civil Rights bill and the third term principle; and closes by "arraigning the Republican party for its extravagance and profligacy," etc., etc.

PENNSYLVANIA DEMOCRATS.

The Democratic State Convention of Pennsylvania nominated W. B. Ross for Supreme Judge, and adopted a platform of principles, the important features of which are the demanding of restrictions upon national banks, denouncing attempts to procure decisions from the Supreme Court adverse to the new Constitution, and opposing mixed schools, believing that co-education of the whites and blacks would be detrimental to both races.

MISSOURI DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

The Democrats of Missouri, in their convention at Jefferson City, nominated the following ticket: Governor, Charles H. Hardin; Lieutenant-Governor, Norman J. Colman; Secretary of State, M. K. McGrath; Auditor, Thomas Halladay; Treasurer, Joseph W. Mercer; Attorney-General, John A. Hockaday; Register of Lands, George Deigle; Superintendent of Public Instruction, R. D. Shannon; Supreme Judges, W. Hough, for the long term, and Wm. Napton, to fill vacancy.

The platform declares that the 5-20 bonds ought to be paid in greenbacks, and favors a repeal of the National Banking law and the substitution of greenbacks to the extent of the national bank currency. It also declares that "the legal-tender notes of the United States, in addition to being receivable in payment of all debts and demands of every kind due to the United States and to individuals, should be made receivable for duties on imports." In regard to the railroad question, it demands "such legislation upon the subject, both State and national, as will effectually secure the industrial and producing interests of the country against all forms of corporate monopoly and taxation."

NEW JERSEY REPUBLICANS.

The Republican State Convention of New Jersey met in convention at Trenton, on the 27th ult., and unanimously nominated George A. Halsey for Governor. The platform approves the past record of the Republican party, eulogizes President Grant and his administration and favors a speedy resumption of specie payments.

Report of the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee.

Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, was densely packed on the evening of August 28, when the Investigating Committee reported. Probably over 3,000 people were present, and many had to leave for lack of accommodations. The following is an abstract of the committee's report:

They find in detail an acquittal of Mr. Beecher on the charge of adultery with Mrs. Tilton at the times and places specified in Tilton's accusation; that Mr. Beecher never committed an unchaste or improper act with Mrs. Tilton; that he has committed errors of judgment that he will now admit, and which he must regret most of all; and that there is nothing in the evidence that should impair the confidence of Plymouth Church in the Christian character and integrity of Henry Ward Beecher. The errors of judgment to which the committee refer are: That Mr. Beecher did not take counsel with some of his Christian brethren instead of a man of whom he knew so little, and who has proved so unworthy as Moulton; and that he should have been so unguarded in his relations with the Tilton family that Mrs. Tilton had an opportunity to fall in love with him.

The report is quite lengthy, and concludes as follows:

First—We find from the evidence that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher did not commit adultery with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, either at the time, times, or at the place or places set forth in the third and fourth subdivisions of Mr. Tilton's statement, nor at any other time or place whatever.

Second—We find from the evidence that Mr. Beecher has never committed any unchaste or improper act with Mrs. Tilton, nor made any unchaste or improper remark, proffer, or solicitation to her of any kind or description whatever.

Third—If this were a question of errors of judgment on the part of Mr. Beecher, it would be easy to criticise, especially in the light of recent events. In such criticism, even to the extent of regrets and censure, we are sure no man would join more sincerely than Mr. Beecher himself.

Fourth—We find nothing whatever in the evidence that should impair the perfect confidence of Plymouth Church or the world in the Christian character and integrity of Henry Ward Beecher. And now let the peace of God, that passeth all understanding, rest and abide with Plymouth Church and its beloved and eminent pastor, so much and so long afflicted.

Committee of Investigation.

BROOKLYN, Aug. 27, 874.

The report of the Committee of Investigation, with the statement of conclusions, upon being read to the church, was adopted amid shouts of acclamation.

The following resolutions were also unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the evidence laid before the Examining Committee not only does not afford any foundation for putting the pastor of the church, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, upon trial, but, on the contrary, establishes, to the perfect satisfaction of this church, his entire innocence and absolute personal purity with respect to all the charges now or hereafter made against him by Theodore Tilton.

Resolved, That our confidence and love for our pastor, far from being diminished, are heightened and deepened by the unmerited sufferings which he has so long borne, and that we welcome him with a sympathy more tender and a trust more unbounded than we ever felt before to his public labors among us, to our church, our families, our homes, and our hearts.

During the reading of the report frequent interruptions were caused by applause, which followed the reading of certain passages sustaining Mr. Beecher, and outbursts of laughter were drawn by any allusions to the mutual friend, Moulton, and his participation in the matter. The concluding portion of the report and summing up of the committee were received with the waving of handkerchiefs, hats, and whatever else came handy, and the applause which greeted its ending was almost deafening.

In response to a call, Mr. R. W. Raymond made a short speech. Referring to Mr. Moulton's part in the affair, he said: "Mr. Francis D. Moulton has tried to poison the minds of men against Mr Beecher." This brought Mr. Moulton to his feet, who glared at the speaker, and exclaimed twice in a loud voice: "You're a liar, sir; you're a liar, sir." Much confusion ensued, men and women standing up, the latter mounting on seats and joining in the cry with a hearty good will of "Put him out;" "Shame, sir," etc., etc., mingled with loud and prolonged hissing, in the midst of which Mr. Halliday came forward, and making himself heard above the din, partially restored order, saying: "Gentlemen, let him sit still and hear the truth;" but Moulton still remained on his feet saying: "I dare you to put me out." A couple of police officers put in an appearance behind Mr Moulton, and he resumed his seat.

Order being partially restored, Mr. Raymond continued: "Well, now I want to say something to you about blackmailing." [Cries of "Yes, go for the blackmailer."] He claimed that Mr. Tilton did not know where the money came from, but it was evident that Mr. Moulton paid him the money out of his pocket. Was it upon his insinuations, garbled language and letters? Was it upon this, he wanted to know, they were to wait and doubt? With regard to the pistol, it was not pretended by Mr. Beecher, or advanced by Mr. Moulton, that under the influence of the pistol he was hurried or intimidated into any action. The story of the pistol was just this: It went to show the character of a man who went to call upon a minister with his pistol. He concluded his address by stating that, come what might, they would all stand by the man who had stood up so nobly for them.

The Chairman then put the question on receiving the report of the committee, and on adopting the resolutions offered. On motion it was passed by a standing vote, with the waving of hats and handkerchiefs when the "ayes" were called for, but when the "noes" were called Frank Moulton only rose, and was greeted with a perfect storm of hisses, and another uproar succeeded, but was calmed in a slight degree when Mr. Gilbert rose and offered resolutions tendering thanks to members of the committee for the faithful and impartial manner in which they had performed their duties, and also to the counsel of the committee for their valuable services. This was also adopted.

A motion was made to adjourn, but Mr. Halliday announced that the proceedings would terminate with the singing of the doxology.

After the close of the meeting, Moulton started out with two or three friends. A crowd immediately surrounded him, uttering intense hisses, calling him names, and shouting "Put him out!" "Trample on him!" and like expressions, and when he was passing through the inner door several of the crowd attempted to strike him. A squad of policemen interfered and shielded him from the insane mob, giving him an opportunity to get to the outside door. He started along the alleyway, which leads from the rear door, where the mob again attempted to get at him and do him violence.

Pistols were flourished and men tried to lay hands on him. Policemen braced themselves, waved their clubs, and threatened that if the people did not cease their outrageous proceedings they must charge. On reaching the outer gate, a crowd met them from the front, and another critical moment was at hand. A new force of police also appeared, and probably saved Mr. Moulton's life, and this alone saved it. He was carried to his carriage by the officers. Cries of "Lay him out!" "Kill him!" "Shoot him!" resounded on every hand. The crowd surrounded the carriage, men blocked the wheels with their arms and attempted to stop the vehicle, but the police succeeded in beating them off, and he was driven home in safety.

Hot Air and Cool Rooms.

Because, when the air of the streets marks 30 or 40 degrees in the Fahrenheit scale a room over-warmed by a fire can be cooled by opening the windows; the average British householder adopts the ready conclusion that whenever a room feels hot the way to cool it is to let in the external air. Accordingly in these piping times he, and still more often she, opens the sunny side of the house, and lets in air at a temperature carrying from 100 to 120 degrees or so. Then, because in a very short time the room, naturally enough, becomes much hotter than it was, it is considered that the windows are not opened widely enough, and the supposed error being remedied, a still larger quantity of hot air is let in. And so we find materfamilias sitting with a very light muslin upon her frame, and a great deal of perspiration upon her upper lip, her face the color of an Orleans plum, and her condition of mind to the last degree dejected, simply because she persists in disregarding the most elementary principles of natural philosophy. We tell her that if she will open the windows on the shady side of the house only, and keep the others closely shut, her dwelling will be at least not hotter than the shady side of the street, whereas by her arrangement it acquires the heat of the sunny side. We tell her, also, that if her house be large and the inmates few, she may live in a delightful state of coolness by only opening the windows at night and keeping them closed during the day. Her house will then be some 10 or 15 degrees lower in temperature than the streets, and convey very much the refreshing effects of a cool bath upon entering it. We tell her all this, and she is very much interested. At our next visit we find every window open and the house full of red-hot air. "It stands to reason," she says triumphantly, "that you cannot possibly cool a house without plenty of ventilation."—Lancet.

John Kelly's Ride.

Yesterday morning a man named John Kelly was taken to the Third Precinct station-house in an insensible condition. He was found in a freight car by some tramps, who entered the car at Schenectady, Sunday night, for the purpose of stealing a ride to this city. They heard the groans of an apparently dying man, and at first were alarmed, but on investigation Kelly was discovered. One of the tramps poured some liquor down Kelly's throat, and on the arrival of the train at West Albany they procured a couple of sandwiches for him. These he devoured rapidly. He was helped from the car, when it was found that he could not walk, for he fell to the earth insensible.

He was picked up and placed on a car and brought to the station-house, as stated, from whence he was carried on a stretcher to St. Peter's Hospital. Under the care of Dr. Hart, he was speedily restored to consciousness. On being questioned, he related substantially the following story as to how he came in the position found:

My name is John Kelly, and I am now 23 years of age; three years ago I enlisted in the regular army, and was assigned to the 2d cavalry, from whence I was discharged about four weeks ago; the regiment was then stationed at Camp Douglas, in Utah; from there I went to Omaha, and unfortunately got in with a rough crowd, and it's a pretty rough place. I staid about there drinking and gambling until all my money, about $300, was gone, then I thought I would try and reach home in Philadelphia; I started and made my way to Davenport, Iowa, stealing a ride when I could, and walking the rest of the way. I arrived at Davenport last Wednesday, and could get nothing to do or to eat; early Thursday morning I entered the car in which I was found, before it was locked up, having noticed the day before that it was bound East; I secreted myself in the oats, and soon after the cars started the dust from the oats, owing to the motion of the car, soon filled my ears, nose and mouth, so that I could not breathe. While confined in the car, I made two attempts to open the door, but was unable to do so. I became insensible and knew nothing more until last night, when I was aroused by a racket outside the car, and soon after the door opened, and three or four fellows entered. They were making a noise, and I endeavored to tell them to stop, when they discovered, and dragged me out of the oats. I had nothing to eat or drink from Wednesday noon until this morning, when the fellows who came in the car gave me something. My folks all live in Philadelphia, and my father is proprietor of the York House, near the Pennsylvania Central depot.

Kelly, who appears to be a stout, athletic young man, seemed a while later but little the worse for this terrible ride of a thousand miles, and will undoubtedly recover, although considerable care must be taken. But for his opportune discovery by the tramps he would have continued on to New York, and in all probability been taken out dead, as he could not have survived many hours longer in the condition in which he was found. All the food he ate on Wednesday before starting from Davenport was two pears. The walk from Omaha to Davenport was about three hundred miles, making in all about thirteen hundred miles he has traveled since he left Omaha three weeks ago.—Albany Argus.

How Thimbles Are Made.

The manufacture of thimbles is very simple, but singularly interesting. Coin silver is mostly used, and is obtained by purchasing coin dollars. Hence it happens that the profits of the business are affected instantaneously by all the variations in the nation's greenback promises to pay. The first operation strikes a novice as almost wicked, for it is nothing else than putting a lot of bright silver dollars, fresh from the mint, into dirty crucibles, and melting them up into solid ingots. These are rolled out to the required thickness, and cut by a stamp into circular pieces of any required size. A solid metal bar of the size of the intended thimble, moved by powerful machinery up and down in a bottomless mold of the outside of the same thimble, bends the circular disks into the thimble shape as fast as they can be placed under the descending bar. Once in shape, the work of brightening, polishing and decorating is done upon a lathe. First, the blank form is fitted upon a rapidly revolving rod. A slight touch of a sharp chisel takes a thin shaving from the end, another does the same on the side, and the third rounds off the rim. A round steel rod, dipped in oil and pressed upon the surface, gives it a lustrous polish. Then a little revolving steel wheel, whose edge is a raised ornament, held against the revolving blank, prints that ornament just outside the rim. A second wheel prints a different ornament around the center, while a third wheel with sharp points makes the indentations on the lower half and end of the thimble. The inside is brightened and polished in a similar way, the thimble being held in a revolving mold. All that remains to be done is to boil the completed thimbles in soapsuds, to remove the oil, brush them up, and pack them for the trade.

The Ring Finger.

Swinburne says in his "Treatise of Spousals": "The finger on which the wedding ring is to be worn is the fourth finger of the left hand, next to the little finger; because by the received opinion of the learned and experienced in ripping up and anatomizing men's bodies there is a vein of blood, which passeth from the fourth finger into the heart, called vena amoris (Love's vein); and so the wearing of the ring on that finger signifieth that the love should not be vain or feigned; but as they did give hands each to the other, so likewise they should give hearts also, whereunto that vein extended."

ALL American citizens about to travel out of their own country should provide themselves with regular passports before leaving home.

FARM AND HOME.

The Rural Life.

The farmer who, in days of old,
From house to house his produce sold,
Well-ripened fruit and sheaves of gold,
Seemed to us children of the town,
A trifle coarse and wondrous brown.
We wondered how his ample hand
Became so horny and so tanned,
And deemed his heavy shoes would ill
Befit the light-heeled dancer's skill;
But they who 'neath his roof should try
The test of hospitality,
His honesty without a flaw,
His love of liberty and law,
Whose [illegible] from view,
The [illegible] diamond pure and true.

He need not mark with anxious eye,
The fluctuant market's usury—
Nor has he need to watch or wail
The lightness of the baker's scale—
His own sweet loaves from oven's maw,
Shall careful wife or daughter draw,
Well-pleased the household board to see
Crowned by her active ministry.

His fields of grain that richly spread,
His towering maize, with tasseled head;
His lowing herds that freshly pour
The creamy nectar's balmy store;
The poultry roaming proudly blest,
The ivory treasures of their nest;
The bees that hoard in cone-like bower
The honeyed essence of the flower;
The garden roots that bide their time,
The fruits that fall, the vines that climb;
A plenteous aliment supply,
Which even Parisian luxury,
With all its wire-drawn art and fame,
Perchance might scorn but need not blame.

Ho! for the flax-field's blossoms blue,
And lustrous leaf surcharged with dew;
Its fibrous stem the wheel shall stir
Of many a thrifty cottager.
Ho! for the white flock wandering nigh
Through pastures green, with patient eye;
Their silken fleece, by woman's care
Transmuted for her household dear,
Arms them the keenest blast to bear;
And well such useful labors cheer
With sweet content her sheltered sphere.

For [illegible] from home and distaff drew
Not thread alone, or warp and woof,
But strength to bear and will to do,
That kept neuralgic pains aloof.
The arm that in the dairy wrought,
Gained muscle firm by action free;
While buxom health and cheerful thought,
The priceless gifts of industry,
Inspired the vigor that sustains
The mystic nerves and flowing veins;
Lends to the cheek a ruddy glow,
And keeps the forehead fair,
Even though chill age hath sifted snow
Amid the lustrous hair.

How the Farmer Should Wage War Against the Chinch Bugs.

A Kansas exchange says: "On the subject of the chinch bug we solicit information for publication. This insect is even worse than weevil, the Hessian fly and the rust combined. It is one of those prolific breeders that produces devastation by actual force of numbers. A little observation will teach any one that they are to a certain extent local. The farm that is overrun this spring and summer with the nuisance must, in the very nature of things, prove the larva bed of the future chinch bug crop. Under this phase of the case what should be done? Is it necessary that the farmer should cease to till his ground, and thereby starve the bug out? or would it not be more sensible to inaugurate a war on the insect, even if it should prove to be an inch deep over the farm? It is one of the most permanent pests that attack all new countries, and for twenty years waged war on the farmers of Illinois. A systematic process of cremation in that State reduced the insect to subjection. Trenching between crops, and covering the bottom of the trench with combustible matter, hay or old dry grass, and catching the crop on the migration from field to field, will destroy them by the bushel. The more you destroy on the farm the less larvæ you have for the next crop, and in their passing from wheat to oats and from oats to corn, a careful system of trap-trenching between fields will leave the bug at your mercy.

"We simply throw these thoughts out as ideas we have gathered from reading on the subject, and looking at it from a common-sense standpoint. We want our readers to think and act on the subject of chinch bugs, and declare systematic war on them. The army worm was circumvented by the trench, and after burning the stubble and using the trench the crop of chinch bugs on the farm can be very materially thinned out. Don't sit down and permit yourself to become a victim of the bugs. If the bugs must take you, die like a man, with your armor on."

The farmers of Douglas county are now making war on the chinch bug. Mr. Ray digs a trench as is recommended above, perpendicular on the side of the field to be attacked. The upper edge of the trench is rounded off and tar is spread upon it. The chinch bugs, immigrating from the opposite field, are thrown back by the tar into the trench where they accumulate and are destroyed every morning. This removes the bug effectively.

Wheat Field.

O—O—O—O—O—O—O

Corn Field.

EXPLANATION.—Figure one represents a wheat field that the chinch bugs have destroyed, and they start for the corn field (Fig. 3). The farmer has taken the precaution to lay a train of coal tar, as represented at Fig. 2 in the diagram. At a distance of thirty or forty feet apart in this train holes are dug. The bugs will reach the tar but will attempt to pass around it, and in doing so will fall into the holes, where they will accumulate to the depth of five or six inches, and can be destroyed.

Sheep and Happiness.

The New York World says: Happy is the farmer who, remote from markets, has a few fat wethers to kill at this time of year. Happy the farmer who has a good ice-house filled with ice, in which to keep such meat fresh and sweet until it is consumed. Happy the farmer who knows the value of even a small flock of sheep on the farm as a means of keeping down the growth of bushes and weeds in his pastures. Happy the farmer who knows that sheep in an orchard are far better and more profitable than pigs. Happy the farmer who has no lawn mower, who has learned that a few sheep, even if they are tied to a stake or hurdled, will keep down the grass and weeds to a proper length about his home. Happy the farmer who believes in the economy and profit of keeping sheep as an important agent in keeping up the fertility of his farm, even though his main reliance is upon grain crops. Happy the farmer who has a good flock of sheep whose wool will bring him 45 cents per pound this year.

Farm Machines.

Knowledge of machinery is becoming one of the most important requisites in a farmer or a farmer's help. No machine should go upon any farm without the farmer comprehending it in all its parts, the requirement and relation of each part to the other, how to adjust and care for it, how to remedy difficulties that may arise, and keep the whole machine in proper working condition without the aid of a machinist, unless in exceptional circumstances. It should be the first duty of the hired help to learn the same lesson, if he is to be intrusted with the machine's use. This is urged as a matter of economy. It is frequently the case that a non-observant farmer loses the time of his men and his own, besides making a bill at the blacksmith's or machinist's, when a little gumption and ten minutes' time properly applied would have saved all loss.

Protecting Horses from Flies.

A French pharmaceutical chemist has discovered a way to protect horses from the attacks of flies. His invention consists in rubbing the horses, especially on the parts most subject to attack, with a little concentrated oil of laurel. There is not the slightest danger in its use, and the cost is said to be very small. Another repellant, suggested by the same person, is a solution of 60 grammes (one pound and five ounces avoirdupois) of asafœtida in two glasses of water and one of vinegar. If horses be well washed with this, not a fly will settle upon them, as the strong odor of the asafœtida drives the flies away. This drug has no deleterious qualities as an external application, and may be used unhesitatingly by horsemen.

Potato Digger.

The Agricultural Gazette gives the following description of a potato digger that has been brought out in England: In construction it is simply a common plow with the breast and wheels removed, and potato-raising fittings substituted in their place. Thus, instead of the land and furrow wheels, a ridge or drill-roller is put on. The object of this roller is to roll down the ridge, clearing it of potato haulm, etc. On one side a peculiar skim coulter follows, paring down the earth close to the potatoes. Instead of the common turnover, a potato one is put on which turns up the ridge or row, throwing the potatoes all to one side. Then follows the self-acting rotatory harrow, which by its peculiar action leaves the tubers on the surface behind, ready for being picked up by the gatherers into baskets, the carman emptying the baskets, when full, into his cart.

The Temperature of the Ocean.

Dr. Carpenter recently delivered a lecture before the London Royal Institution, on the "Temperature of the Ocean," showing, from the soundings made by the Challenger Expedition, that the difference of climate between Northwestern Europe and the North American Atlantic seaboard is due not to the course of the Gulf Stream, but to the circulation of the waters of the ocean between the poles and the equator. The shores of Northwestern Europe have the benefit of the northward movement of the warm superficial stratum, while the temperature of the American coast is lowered by the surging up against it of deep glacial underflow. The fact, he says, comes out most clearly from the Challenger soundings, which had been suspected by the United Coast Surveyors—that the cold band which separates the Gulf Stream from the United States coast is really continuous with the cold strata that lie at some depth beneath the Gulf Stream, and this continuity explains the presence of the cold band which was previously wanting; for, as any flow of water from the equator toward either pole will tend toward the East in virtue of the excess of easterly momentum it brings from a part of the globe where its rotation was rapid, so any flow of water proceeding from either pole toward the equator will tend toward the west, in virtue of the deficiency of easterly momentum which it derives from a part of the globe where its rotation was less rapid. In this urging upward of the deeper and colder stratum lying beneath the Gulf Stream, we have very distinct evidence of its southerly movement. The precisely similar cold band which has been observed by Capt. St. John to separate the Kuro Liwo, or warm Japan current, from the coast may be fairly attributed to the same cause.—From Popular Science Monthly.

The Wasp Waist.

There is no doubt that a "small waist" is admired of all men and all women. No matter how the physiologists or the physicians may talk, women have always compressed their waists and expanded their skirts, and they always will until public opinion pronounces for the heavy figure. It has never influenced a fashionable woman yet to hear that the Venus de Medici has a large waist—she has been told so ever since that faultless image of female beauty was disinterred. She merely shrugs her shoulders and draws her lace tighter. She knows very well that if she went to a ball with that figure of the Venus, no man would ask her to dance. Nor is the small waist furor alone confined to the women of civilized lands, so-called. The small foot of the Chinese women is a local peculiarity; the small waist or the striving for it, is universal. Even the grave Humboldt describes the beauties of Java as eating a sort of clay called ampo, by which they become very much reduced in size. It kills them finally, but what of that.—Appletons' Journal.

The Black Hills.

The Black Hills lie at the junction of Wyoming and Dakota, northwest of Nebraska. Gen. Custer's expedition left the Northern Pacific at its present western terminus, Fort Abraham Lincoln (marked Fort Clark in the maps), on the Missouri. It marched up the valley of the Little Missouri and then took a general southerly course to the Black Hills. These hills, surrounded as they are by the "Bad Lands," yet inclose within their "rugged, rocky, jagged peaks of solid granite" a series of rich valleys, watered by abundant springs, crowded thick with flowers hitherto born to blush unseen, and stocked with bear, elk, and deer. The floral luxuriance seems to be remarkable. Gen. Forsyth's diary is full of descriptions of it. He writes: "Wild flowers abound in every direction, and our horses wade knee-deep among them. . . . The whole valley is carpeted with flowers. . . . The vast quantity of flowers crowd out the grasses and grazing is only fair." The country has hitherto been unknown. Different exploring parties have skirted its edges, but Gen. Custer was the first to examine it thoroughly. The engineers who accompanied him have mapped the whole country. He has discovered a good wagon route connecting the rich land inside the hills with the plains. Access would thus be comparatively easy for settlers. A few days' journey by wagon from Fort Lincoln would take them to their future homes. Gen. Forsyth sums up his views of those homes in these words: "The scenery is beautiful, grass splendid, water fine, and climate delightful; I hope to see the day when there will be any number of brave settlers and fine farms there." The soil is rich. There is plenty of timber and building-stone. The climate is equable. The summers are not extremely hot. There are no signs of freshets along the bank of the streams, so that the snow fall is probably very light and the winter very mild. Even in the dry season there is plenty of rain. Grass is abundant and nutritious. Wild fruits thrive well. The danger from Indians in not great, provided settlers go in well-armed parties. At the same time, it is to be remembered that the Indians have a title, guaranteed by treaty, to the whole section. Until that title is extinguished, white men have no right to settle there. Gen. Sheridan has accordingly directed the military authorities in Minnesota to stop all expeditions to the Black Hills which have not been authorized by the Secretary of the Interior. A Secretary more trammeled by law and usage than Mr. Delano would not dream of granting permits for the invasion of an Indian reservation by gold-hunters, and it is not probable that even he can be persuaded to a course so contrary to common prudence and justice. Eager pioneers would be wise to wait until the country has been thrown open to settlement by act of Congress; but this is too much to expect. For the present, the regard of individuals for their own skin and bones may keep all meddlesome white men at a safe distance from the raging Sioux and their reported treasure-grounds; but if ever it shall become a tolerably safe undertaking otherwise, there will certainly be no lack of adventurous spirits to risk the displeasure of Mr. Delano and his subordinates.

We have purposely abstained, so far, from mentioning gold as one of the attractions of the region. We believe that it is the last and the least of them. The hasty search of the two practical miners who were with the expedition detected rich diggings of gold in the eastern range of the Black Hills. Of the country near Harney's Peak, Gen. Forsyth says: "The very roots of the grass would pan five cents to the pan." As yet, however, there is no proof that the precious metals exist in large quantities. There may be a number of "placers" and nothing else. In that event, a rush of miners would result in the beggary of most of them. Gold-seeking pays very poor returns as a general rule. It almost inevitably demoralizes its votaries. California has never recovered from the recklessness of the "argonauts of '49."—Chicago Tribune.

Gazing at the Comet.

A young couple were out on a door-step on Gospel Ridge last Sunday night, looking at the comet now visible in the northern heavens. At least it was evident the lady wanted to see, because she was overheard to tell the young gent to "keep his face out of the way so she could see the comet!" Then there was a noise like the sudden drawing of a horse's hoof out of the stiff mud, and then—and then—well, the old man thrust his head out at the front door of that house, and the young astronomers turned their backs to each other, and began counting the stars aloud with great vehemence. The old man told them that the spheroidal mass which they had been so diligently contemplating on the ethereal dome scarcely demanded any more of their united attention that evening, and the young man would very much oblige him by peregrinating in the direction of his own local habitation at that immediate period of time, or he would enable him to see stars with more multitudinosity. The young man "got" at once.—Portland (Or.) Herald.

NOT while one human heart beats will the tales of woman's devotion to the objects of her affection cease to be told. In the absence of our poet we will attempt to note in sober prose, though with profound emotion, an instance of this devotion in the Chicago fire. A woman with heart-strings torn with agony watched the roof of her house glowing with prodigious flames. Those dear to her still remained in the building; was it any wonder that her eye lighted with an almost maniac glare, and her frantic movements showed all the torture she was enduring? It was too much—too much. Before the alarmed bystanders could stop her she had rushed desperately into the flaming house, animated by an heroic self-sacrifice. Let us rejoice that it was rewarded; she emerged unharmed, carrying in her noble arms the innocent creatures she had saved—four cats howling and clawing like mad.—New York Tribune.

Carrying Babies.

The Asiatic Indian woman carries her baby in a blanket hanging in front, something below the waist; the Bengalese woman, with the child astride low down upon the left hip, and her left arm supporting its back. The figure seems quite indifferent as to the difficulties in this style of carrying, which must be a highly artistic performance if done so cleverly in reality.

The Brazilian woman carries hers in a somewhat similar manner, also in full dress, sitting astride her neck.

The Chinese baby is carried upright upon the back, in a blanket; and the South African in a bag in front, formed by a blanket, round the hips of the mother.

The Lower Australian woman carries hers by swinging it in a blanket over one shoulder upon her back, while the North Australian woman carries hers bound upon a board, after the style of candy-models in confectionery stores.

The Lapland baby is carried in a sledge-shaped cot, made of leather. It seems to have been chucked in feet foremost, and then a frame tied over the opening for its face, whether to prevent it from crawling out, or to keep the dogs from kissing it, is more than can be imagined.

The most unique style is that of the Esquimaux woman, who wears wide, high-top boots, and puts the baby, right end foremost, down in the outside of one them, and doubtless, according to Dr. Kane's description of her style, carrying her cooking and eating utensils in the other.

The North American woman carries her papoose strapped to a board, and that strapped upon her back by a band over the forehead.

Address of Gov. Palmer.

We print below the remarks of ex-Gov. John M. Palmer, upon taking the chair as presiding officer of the Liberal and Democratic Convention, at Springfield, Ill.:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—I had no expectation until since I entered this hall this afternoon to take any part in the deliberations of this body than as a simple member. When I was informed that I had been selected to preside over this body, my first impression was that the selection was not a proper one. Party conventions, if they accomplish the objects for which they are convened, should be composed of men who agree in the great objects which they have met to promote. So far as I am concerned, I have been for years acting with a political organization with which I differ at present. For years, indeed, until 1872, for many years I did not act with, many of the gentlemen that I see before me to-day. It is true that in the earlier days of my life I acted with the Democratic party, and I see before me many gentlemen by whose side I have waged ruinous warfare against what I believed to be serious error. We were separated by questions that have passed away, and we are reunited again to-day on principles that were cherished by me then, and that were simply lost sight of by more pressing and earnest questions. This convention to-day is composed in a measure of men who have hitherto differed in regard to questions that were of moment; yet they were temporary and have passed away. This convention has assembled with the view of reorganizing, with the view of addressing our minds to the present demands of the hour. It is called that we may forget the prejudices of the past, and unite now for the vindication of correct principles and bring the country back to its original position. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the duties of a free citizen are of ever-recurring obligation. It is not enough for you or myself to say that we did our duty twenty, or ten, or one year ago, or yesterday. The duty of a free man is now at this moment. It makes no difference, gentlemen, what were my views of public policy five years ago or ten years ago. It can make no difference to you what were the party names that we bore five or ten years ago. It is your duty and mine, having an eye single to the glory and honor of our country and to the well-being of our fellow-citizens, to learn the duties of this time, to discharge the duties of this hour as becomes free men and citizens responsible to God and to our own country for the manners in which we perform them. Gentlemen, for ten or fifteen years, while the people of this country have been excited over civil war and other struggles that separate us from a large portion of the country, false principles of government have bee accepted instead of the ancient truth of republican government. Abuses have grown until we are not to-day certain whether this is indeed a democratic, republican government, or whether we are upon the eve of a change that shall deprive the people in form, as they are already deprived in fact, of the right and power to govern themselves. [Applause.] The object of this assembly to-day is to inaugurate anew the struggle to win back for the people good government—not only good government, but one giving to the people the right to govern themselves. Gentlemen tell me that good government can be obtained by this measure or that. I tell you that the only government worth having is that government administered by free men, of which they themselves are at once the rulers and the subjects. I am content to submit to bad government, if it is a government of my own. I am not willing to submit to any other government, except that of the Supreme Being, if it assumes to be a master. I desire to unite with men of all past political positions—with old Democrats and old Republicans—to win back and establish democratic-republican institutions in this country, where the people shall govern themselves; where the people shall have that which they earn, and shall not be required to surrender any more of their earnings than they themselves think just to bestow. Presiding over a convention composed in this manner is somewhat novel to me. Many gentlemen I see before me are Democrats, and, gentlemen, while I have had occasion to differ with you in times past, I learned two years ago what sacrifices you could make for your country. I mean two years ago, when you had consented to vote for Greeley, you made large sacrifices, such sacrifices as patriots alone can make for the advancement and welfare of their country. I know, gentlemen of the Reform party, you have made every sacrifice of mere feeling to advance the welfare of our country. Let me assure you in that you evince your patriotism, and that you place country first, and in the future, when the political history of this country is written, it will be recorded that the Democratic party, for the sake of restoring free government, in voting for Greeley in 1872, performed an act of magnanimity, of patriotism, unheard of in this or any other country. Gentlemen, you are required to make no such sacrifice now. The prejudices of the past are gradually disappearing, and free men are seeing, eye to eye, and will toil, shoulder to shoulder, for the advancement and well-being of the country. [Cheers.] This is not an occasion on which I could ask you to listen to me a moment longer. I am informed that your committee are about ready to report. While I preside, I shall preside with fairness and impartiality. I ask you to assist me in enforcing the rules of order. Let us have order; let us have free speech; don't let us hurry; let us take time—the world was not made in a day. If gentlemen desire to address you upon any question, none of us are too old to learn. Let us be patient, forbearing, regardful of the rights of each. Let us deliberate here to-day, so that we shall leave no heartburnings, no resentments, no feeling when we go out. One word more. Don't let us go out to defend. Defend nothing. The worst policy for a political party is to defend. I think it was Napoleon who said, "While the enemy is looking after your flanks, let him remember that he has flanks himself. Aggression, aggression, aggression; and in 1876 you will restore this Government to the control of the people themselves. That will be the result of your determined efforts. [Cheers.] Gentlemen, the convention is now organized and ready to proceed to business.

The Platform of the Independents of Nebraska.

WHEREAS, It has been demonstrated that political parties, as at present conducted, have failed to redeem their solemn pledges to the people, and have failed to inaugurate reforms conducive to the general welfare; and

WHEREAS, We are desirous of absolute freedom from entangling alliances which compromise principle for expediency, and are seeking the early restoration of a pure Government with public morality as a foundation;

NOW, THEREFORE, We, the Independent Convention of Nebraska, assembled at Lincoln, Aug. 19, 1874, do announce the following declaration of principles to the citizens throughout the State who are in favor of advocating such reforms in the administration of public affairs as shall best secure exact justice to all:

First—We are opposed to any policy or legislation which seeks speedy resumption of specie payment in the present financial condition of the country; we strenuously demand that the faith and credit of the nation be maintained inviolate; that all public debts be liquidated under and in pursuance of the laws by which they were created; we further hold it to be the duty of Congress to provide by appropriate legislation that the volume of currency shall be adequate to the commercial wants of the people, and that the same be equitably distributed among the States.

Second—That it is the duty of the Government, as respects inter-State commerce, to limit the tolls for freight and passage to such reasonable rates as will provide an equitable percentage on the capital actually invested in the railways.

Third—That the Government, for the protection of property, whether corporate or private, should be sustained by an equal and uniform system of taxation; that the State and national revenues should be economically collected without any unnecessary multiplication of public officials to be maintained at the expense of the people, already burdened with oppressive taxation.

Fourth—We are opposed to such legislation as grants royal privileges to capital, by the exercise of which labor is crushed and illegally defrauded of its legitimate profits. We hold it to be grossly unjust that bounties should be paid to the wealthy while the labor which produces it is manacled by legislative enactments, the result of political intrigue and corruption.

Fifth—We ask such legislation, State and national, as will effectually secure the industrial and agricultural interests from odious exactions and wrongful discrimination by corporate powers.

Sixth—We favor an equitable, uniform license law.

Seventh—We hereby pledge ourselves to abide by and carry out, in spirit and essence, the principles here enunciated, to the end that official corruption may be checked, and the State and National Governments be ultimately committed to the keeping of those who regard public duties as a sacred trust, to be administered in the interests of the whole people.

A brace of old fashioned prairie chickens, for which we are indebted to T. C. Mays, the geniral editor of the Courier, reminds us that the auburn haired hunters have returned. Their success fully equal their effort. Three hundred and eighty-seven and a half chickens were slain. They were all shot in the neck—the chickens. After supplying their numerous friends in Logansport, the hunters left for Northern Indiana with three or four birds and any amount of feathers in their caps.

Nothing unusual occured during the hunt, except the killing of an unusual amount of chickens. The boys got right down to their work. They went out for game and fun wasn't on the programme. After the first two hours no man in the party shot at a single bird. They could all see "double," and the common inquiry, after shooting was: "Where did that other chicken fall? After the fruitless search, the disappointed nimrod would empty a bottle of wrath, and proceed. This occurred so often that the wrath was exhausted on the first day, and a messenger was sent to Ward & Carney's for more.

As the hunters was "raised in the woods" in the vicinity of Auburn, they were struck with the beauty of the prairie and expressed the kindest regard for the men who "planted in the grass" They crossed the prairie without losing their way, but on their return trip they were not so fortunate. By the carlessness of one of the party in neglecting to adjust the cork, the compass was unboxed, and they had great difficulty in getting their veerings. They finally found their bearings on the ground, and, after a six hour rest struck for tall timber. Mayor McFadin and T. M. Guggenheimer, of this city, claimed that they were not tired, and only rested on account of the rest.

All in all, it was as jolly a party of clever gentlemen as ever emptied a canteen or sent a chicken to grass.—So far in the number of birds killed, Logansport must yield the palm to Auburn, but in all things else pertaining to chicken hunting, our boys can hold them level.

Logansport Pharos,

FORT WAYNE, IND. Sept. 7th, 1874.

DEAR COURIER—

As you show no signs of tiring of my correspondence I am induced to send you another epistle from this charming little city A city evidently destined to be one of the largest and most populous in this the fifth state of the Union, with more real genuine yankee life and go-ahead-ativeness than any place of its size in the country. The foreign element largely predominates here. The Germans numerically the greater, they having three newspapers in their own language, all prosperous and well sustained. In riding about the place and noting the hundreds of buildings in course of erection in every quarter of the city, you will find at least ⅔ of the number are owned by Germans. They are a thrifty, industrious economical people, intelligent and ambitious, love life and its enjoyments and are stimulated with real yankee enterprise in developing and improving the city. They are proverbially a law abiding people, hesitating long and solemnly before commencing litigation, preferring to submit to unjust exactions, (if not rubbed in too deep) rather than allow themselves to become involved in tedious and disagreeable law suits. Their taxes are seldom delinquent, and I am persuaded in my own mind, that if our Real Estate Exchange, after a proper reconstruction, would expend the necessary efforts in encouraging migration to this point, by stationing an Agent in N. Y. with head quarters near Castle Garden to invite the settlement among us of this industrious class of people, our farms and factories could be soon manned by an assiduous people whose life and labor would stimulate a sympathy for and with us and in time our interests become their interests mutual and identical. This idea is not original with me, I am aware that other cities are pursuing this course, have their salaried emissaries drumming up recruits to populate their towns and counties. Many of our neighboring cities of the west are succeeding in this grand enterprise as is statistically shown by the steady healthy growth of their population and the marked increase of their agricultural and mineral productions.

The Hibernia boys too, resident here reflect no discredit upon the Emerald Isle. Some of the wealthiest and most opulent business men of our city have flooded their veins with celtic blood. The names of Hedekin, Fleming, Cody Kane, et al are synonyms of business activity and have done much to build up and beautify the place in which they have honestly acquired their substance and lived their lives. The French are less numerous, yet the few hundred scattered about the city have all the marked characteristics of their countrymen, and are french in every sense of the word. They tenaciously cling to their national beverage, dine on frogs each day, save Friday, and season their food with the odoriferous garlic. Their chief Ruler and Counsellor is Monsieur Carier of Nancy, while the names of Benoit, Begue, Peltier, Dubois and Bourie have ever been as honored titles with them. They too as a class are regarded as a meritorious element in our cosmopolitan community being frugal, sedulous and reliable in all the manifold relations of life. There are many local celebrities in literature art and science, who in time I propose to appropriately notice, although apparently obscure and unknown to the outside world, yet their semi-hidden genius is known and recognized in our own locality and we congratulate ourselves that they have deigned to make this humble little city their abiding place.

It takes all manner of men to constitute a metropolitan community, diversified tastes and opinions, varied sentiments upon politics theology and the minor matters of social life and reform go to relieve the monotony of life. The newspapers daily give us the ideas of would-be-reformers upon different subjects, ever agitating the feverish brain of this restless people. never quiet, never at ease, ever turbulent and only at peace when peace is most disturbed. Men are queer beings anyway, ambitious, self reliant, defiant, daring perils for name and fame and riches, but how few imperilling "their lives their fortunes and their sacred honors" for the better and more enduring part?

Man! who can define him
Only He who did design him.
An Angel, excellent, etherial
A perfect brute, gross and temporal,
The essence of the Eternal God
The creature of continual blood
A spark of the Divine whole
A substance damning to the soul
A combination good and evil
First of God and then the Devil
Perfect made to imperfection
Happiness and then damnation.

Much has been written and spoken of Man, he has and ever will continue to blow his own trumpet, herald his own fame. The Historian, the Sculptor the Painter, the Poet, all in their separate labors have been employed to write, chisel, paint and sing into notice the true greatness of this wonder working Man and yet in what does that greatness consist? Does it lie in the skillful use of the poisoned steel, does its throne stand midst a sea of human blood? Does its light appear about the head of Rome's fiddling Nero, Englands Richard, or France' Robespierre? Did it exist in an Alexander or even a Napoleon, or of literature in the writings of Ovid, of Volney or a Byron? No, and yet all of these have their advocates to the claims of greatness.—Such have always employed the pen of the historian, the chisel of the sculptor, the pencil of the artist, and the genius of the poet. If then, such examples have no claims to greatness, if we must pass by such as have bathed a kingdom in blood, who have held as it were a nation trembling before the guillotine, who has wept that there were no more worlds to conquer, who took from the church of Rome her power and bade the Pope bow down at his impious feet, who has changed the character of a nation with his pen and given a new impetus to the liberties of his country. If such are to be overlooked where are we to find the characters of true greatness? In the lives of those whose precepts and examples fill the lids of the Sacred Volume, in the fathers of our country, in the writings of everyone who exerts a pure moral and religious influence over the destiny of a people, in him, who, for conscience sake votes the pure Democratic ticket. And now, while we are writing of Man, we would not ignore his Rib. In our own locality women of late have sprung to the surface armed cap a pie with shield and buckler to give battle to the liquor vender and trample his traffic under their dainty little feet, a hopeless fruitless task. Yet she too is brave and in her appropriate sphere has done and is still capable of doing much good. Patiently struggling on through the dark ways of the world, like the Sun's disk from the night gloom of its ecliptic planet, now comes she forth the life bearing the light and heat of the world political systems. She conquers not with the sword, she fills not the pores of mother earth with the warm blood of Kingdoms and of Nations. She ascends her throne not amid the glittering arms of deadly weapons or the loud clarion ring of open mouthed trumpets but by the constant breath of her own purity, creates an atmosphere in which she progresses in her Divine work of conquest, and like our glorious Goddess of Liberty she stands forth, her head encircled with the olive-branch of peace and in her hand the even balanced scale of truth and virtue, justice and mercy. She was destined by God for noble work, but not such degrading labor as hounding men from saloons to Justice Courts and back again, fired with feelings that have their birth far from the blue vaulted heavens. Argumentatum ad verecundiam.

The political cauldron is fiercely bubbling in this county. The candidates are actively working, and making themselves agreeable in divers ways For the office of County Clerk it is a triangular fight, the other contestants are evenly paired. The crusaders have fortunately for themselves and the country succeeded, after a bitter struggle, in securing upon both tickets avowed temperance men, so that in the general scrimmage at the polls on the second Tuesday of Oct. they will as a voting element remain passive as to the offices of Recorder Auditor, Treasurer, Sheriff, Coroner and Criminal Judge. Rudisill, Ring, Kock and Edsall will be the retiring officers from the four corners of the Court House (the people know). But more anon.

Kellogg is fixing things for the coming elections in Louisiana. He has appointed a new Board of Registry, consisting of seventeen members. Of these, eleven are in the Federal service and the others are in the amenable only to the powers that be. By the Registration law of the State, about which there was such a storm of indignation at the last election, Kellogg has it in his power to make the election returns what he chooses they shall be. Only acceptable men will be registered in the first place, and in the second place names can be added or stricken off afterwards at the option of the Board of Registration. This Registration of law, so unjust in its operation, Kellogg promised to abolish. He has not fulfilled his promise, however and we are again to witness the prostitution of the machinery of a State government to a corrupt set of men, to the end that the party now in power may retain a hold upon the country. How long will the people suffer these outrages.

Pioneer Sketches

—or—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 27.

This was a very common expedient with the first settlers. Messrs. Altenburg and Walsworth tell me that they pursued the same traffic, much to their advantage in Union, and, but for sugar and saw logs, I do not know what the settlers would have done to relieve their very pressive wants. It was well indeed that they had this means of sweetening their bitter experiences of pioneer life.

Peter Moody settled quite early, away up by the North line of the Township, where he enjoyed for a time the ardent wish of Cowper, viz "A lodge in one vast wilderness.

Richland Township, has fully kept pace with the others, in the march of improvement. Though much of its fertile land fell at first into the hands of nonresident speculators,—yet the judicious system of taxation, compelled those landsharks, to sel out to the actual settlers, who have subdued the very heavy forests and are now receiveing a rich tribute from the fat soil. Under the administration of the excellent board of township trustees good frame school houses are erected in every district. The Air line branch of the Michigan and Northern Indiana Rail Road runs through the Northern part of the township, Mr. Hines. has laid out the village of Lawrence, (Iba P O,)and, by the liberal system of donating lots to actual settlers, and of furnishing lumber for building,—from his good steam saw mill,—he has caused it to improve with great rapidilty.

Corruna is another village in this Township on the Rail Road. If a good country around these two villages and energetic tho'gh going proprietors can make them cities surely that will be their final destiny.

Since you are writing sketches concerning the early settlers of the various Townships of this county for the benefit of prosperity, I feel it a duty to add my mite so please have patience as I must go out of the bounds of the county, and also note some things that happened before any settlement of DeKalb, though they are inseparably connected with its settlement

Samuel Houlton, (my oldest brother) and Isaiah Hughes went into co-partnership to build a saw mill, in the wilderness of Fish creek, in February, 1827. The firm hired David Williamson, John Kilgore, Francis A. Blair and myself to work with them. They gave us axes, a little provision, and fire works, and started us where Binnersburg now stands to cut a road through North West to tne Indian village on the St. Joseph (the present side of Denmark). We started and the firm was to follow with the teams the next day. We cut on till dark, and when we stopped to build a fire, behold the flint, which I had put in my pocket to strike fire, was not to be found. We were wet up to our knees, and, it being very cold, we all expected to perish without fire. The boys threatened to whip me, as they said it was d——d carelessness losing the flint. Said I, "boys the night will will be dark as Egypt; we must make fire or perish. Let us all hunt and if posible find the stone to strike fire with." They said I was a fool, to think of finding a flint in those swamps-

We had worked hard all day, and were tired and hungry, but I well knew there was not a minute to be lost; so I started to hunt for a stone, while they went to eating. It was growing dark rapidly.—I struck a small ravine.—followed it and at last found a little stone nearly round, with no sharp edge. Feeling along awhile and finding no other, I went back, got the "spunk" and knife, and after a few strokes, had the satisfaction to see it take fire, and soon we had a good blazing fire. The boys who cursed me and were almost ready to kill me for losing the flint now with tears rolling down their cheeks asked my pardon. Such is the instability of poor feeble man. We cut the road to the mouth of Fish creek, and the team came on. We then went to work and made a perogue of about two tuns burden and crossing the river, built a cabin twenty feet square. When our provision began to fail, Samuel Houlton took Blair, and went down to the river in the perogue. They started to go east of the state line, on the Maumee. Hughs Williamson, Kilgore and myself staid.

Root & Company opened out their new store at Fort Wayne last Saturday, and such a crowd was never seen in a store before. It is really a gorgeous establishment and will pay to visit it.

The Columbia City Commercial says—Last week's Courier was nearly all occupied with a well gotten up review of the business interests of the town. With its three railroads Auburn is bound to become a flourishing "burg."

The bridge at Defiance on the Baltimore road will be completed in a few days and then a regular train will be placed upon the line as far west as Albion. Our citizens are waiting with great patience.

The Northern Indianian says, The Courier presents a very fine showing of the business interests of Auburn, which town, we learn, is improving at a rapid rate, under the impetus given it by railroad enterprise.

Our good old farmer friend John Davis Esq., residing a short distance north west of Auburn, brought us in a Granger melon the other day, weighing over 40 lbs. It was a buster and sound to the core, and therefore a fair representative of the doner. Many thanks.

A conservatory of music has been organized here with W. Griswold as Prest. H. M. Casebeer, Sec'y and Treas., J. T. Kinsey, prin. and Miss M. E. Balcom as assistant. The first lesson will open Oct. 7th. We will have more to say of its object and purpose hereafter.

Strayed—From the residence of the subscriber, 3 miles south-east of Auburn, last June, a light red line-backed heifer, with some white spots, 3 years old, short crouple horns, had on a small sheep bell A liberal reward will be paid for information concerning this animal.

Wm. McClellan.

The Ligonier Banner says, The Auburn Courier last week contained a long essay on the growth and prosperity of that ancient burg, from the pen of Mr. C. C. Sink who will be remembered as a Lutheran minister in charge of the Albion congregation some years since.

NOMINATION.

We have just time to announce the nomination of Hon. Freeman Kelly, at Kendallville, yesterday, on the 3rd ballot. His election is generally conceded. Every farmer and laboring man should support him because he is of them, and was not nominated because he was a lawyer and a good speaker.

That great work of natural deception, called Hansley "showed" here last Saturday, and did not deceive many either.—He was here a year or so ago and he did not like our notice of him then, but we don't see any chance to improve it now. We believe him to be a third class fraud and the press will do well to give him a wide birth.

The Steuben County Fair is to be held on the 25th and 30th of this month at Angola. Our neighbors do not give very liberal premiums for fast horses, and speed will not be an interesting feature of the fair. Five dollars premium in a free to all race, with two dollars fee, is hardly in keeping with county fairs generally. Yet we hope they will have a good fair.

Henry Hood, the nominee for Commissioner, is one of our most thorough and successful farmers, and if elected to the office will lend energy and ability to the Board, and guard well the property of the county—News.

There seems to be a studied effort to avoid in the above, any allusion to the qualifications of Mr. Hood, in a particular way. It is well known to many that Mr. Hood is not a man of learning or ability, and is not qualified for the position, being scarcely more than able to write his own name. Let us have able men as well as honest men.

Butler, Ind. Sept. 5th, 1874

Mr. Editor—Your item this week in regard to the course the News, of this place, has taken, meets with hearty approval here. I was a subscriber to the News when it pretended to be neutral, but when it flopped over, I went to the office, paid up my indebtedness and stopped it. Thereupon the editor attacked me through its columns in a most ungentlemanly manner, and for no other reason than that I had refused to take the bastard sheet. It has been heretofore held that every man has a right to invest his money as he pleases and I acted on this principle. Why should I be abused for exercising this right? The fact is the editor has made a great mistake, and this chagrins him, and he now vents his spite upon those who are disgusted with his course. I can deal with a fair Republican but a blather-skite never.

H. Maxwell.

The Races.

The races announced for Waterloo last Friday and Saturday would have been a success as to numbers had not the rain interfered. As it was there was but a slim attendance the first day, and some very poor races. In the first place, several horses from Toledo, about the record of which no one seemed to know anything came in on the 3:15 and and 2:50 minute races, With horses that could and doubtless have made their 2:40, if one could trace them back a year or two. There was no other way but to let them in and they took first money. In the 2:50 race there was considerable jockeying, the horse getting fourth money, should have had second. The best time made in the 3:15 race was 3 minutes in the 2:50 race 3:04.

On Saturday the weather brightened up but the track was heavy. The first race was for pacing, there being four entries. Best time made 2:43¾, White Stockings winning the race. A trot was fixed up which came off after the pacing. The attendance was quit good. In the selection of judges we think men should be selected from abroad, when it can be done and in our opinion no officer of an association should act in that capacity.—When the races are on the grounds of the society to which he belongs. We offer this as a suggestion.

Corunna Items.

Editor Courier—On Friday evening last John H. Baker, the Republican candidate for Congress, held forth to a very slim audience at the Hall. The burden of Mr. Baker's argument was directed toward the currency question in the Democratic platform, in which the eloquent John undertook to arraign the Democratic party before the bar of public opinion as inflationists and the destroyer of the nation's currency. Mr. Baker may be a great man as an expounder of the currency question, but upon this occasion he signally failed to convict the Democratic party, and only proved the fallacy of his undertaking. The Republican candidate for congressional honors, in the 13th district will need change the string to his banjo, if he would "draw" and retain an audience.

In the item respecting the joke played upon Bro. Park, it seems that we were misinformed in one particular. 'George' was the man that got the corn and not McCormack, the shoemaker. Inasmuch as Mr. Mac, the aforesaid shoemaker feels grieved thereat, and has threatened to "mash" your correspondent, we feel constrained to make the correction.

Corn-cutting was commenced in this part of the country and; the yield is generally reported to be good.

The correspondent of the Butler News appears to be troubled about the gossiping tendencies of our village people. He ought to go west.

Rural.

The admission fee to the Exposition for the first three weeks, has been reduced to twenty-five cents. For the last week of live Stock show and Exposition it will be fifty cents.

The Board has offered a premium of a $150 to the county making the best display of orchards, garden and field crops, with a view of bringing the counties in the State into direct competition, that the respective merits of each may be shown and contested.

Every person having any article of merit is cordially invited to add to it the collection, and thus aid in making the Indiana Exposition the most attractive place to visit in this country.

After Prairie Chickens.

A small party among whom was found, Dr J. H. Ford, J. L. Davis, F. D. Ryan, S. Swibart, Geo. Brandon, S. C. Swineford, S. J. Lock, of Waterloo, and ourself, started for Logansport on Monday of last week to indulge in a grand hunt. At Logansport the party was joined by His Honor, Mayor McFadden, and T. M. Guggenheimer of that city, and thus reinforced we proceeded at once to lay in supplies, for our objective point was miles away on the praries, and it required the nicest taste and best judgement to select just what was needed. It was a more difficult job than the Captain of an Ohio river boat had when his mate, with $40 in the treasury, asked him what should be purchased with this amount for the out-going trip. "Put $5 in bread and the ballance in whisky," was the prompt reply.

It was more difficult for us, because unlike the Captain we had never been over the ground before. Bacon, bread, onions, coffee, salt, pepper, cheese, crackers, lemons and a liberal quantity of "Godfrey's Cordial" to counteract rheumatism, was duly packed away, and off we started, about 7 o'clock in the morning, for the happy hunting grounds, Mayor McFadden in the lead, and an able corps of dogs following in his wake.

Proceeding by rail for some distance we transferred to several teams in waiting and started for our camping grounds over-looking a beautiful prairie which was to yield up its "living freight to the unsparing hand of the frisky hunter."—We camped about noon when our sceuts mounted on fiery, untamed steeds, sleek and swift, came in with glowing accounts of numberless chickens within every range After a famous dinner, in which Vanderbilt or Astor, of New York, would have given a million dollars to have participated with the same zest and heartiness that we did, we formed a skirmish line, and dashed among the beautiful prarie flowers, the dogs a frisking to and fro and everybody in capital humor. Soon up flies the game, and ten splendid fowling pieces in practiced hands belched fourth at irregular intervals, until down goes the sun behind the prairie, when hostilities cease and the mellow notes of the hunter's horn calls us to camp. Seventy three of the speckled birds are our trophies. They are dressed and properly cared for, but we have but little hope of saving them without ice from the terrible heat of the day.

Now comes the joyous scenes of the camp, lit up by numerous bonfires, made vocal by peals, of merry laughter, and happy song. Blankets are spread and a jolly group is formed and with jokes and incidents, and an eloquent and tender discourse by the Mayor, the evening is passed as happy as mortals could wish it.—But there is no rose without the thorn. Just as we were about to retire, a low stifled moan was wafted to us on the still night air, and then comes a naration by Mayor, of a wild animal with a calico tail that is said to have escaped from some menagerie, and as it became apparent to each listener that we were in the jungles of Africa as it were, each cheek paled and there was a general rush for Godfrey's Cordial, "and the colored troops fought nobly," responded to with "Here's to your good health and your families." In order that our readers may be assured that this is not a creation of the brain, we give the following extract from a paper in Burton county:

"There is a high degree of excitement in the central and Western part of the county, about some variety of wild, ferocious beasts that have been playing sad havoc among the domestic animals in the vicinity of Sugar Grove. It has been seen frequently for the three last months, and seems to be daily becoming more bold and forocious. It is estimated that it has distroyed $300 worth of stock within the last three or four months. We mention yearling and one two year old colt, one calf, and quite a number of hogs for John Ross; four calves killed and one fatally injured for Mr. Hooyer, and many calves occationally a yearling and any amount of hogs for Mr. Sumner and sundry of his tenants. Last Sunday a large number of people including several from town and vicinity, went out to visit the scene of his depredations, and if possible scar the depredator himself. "He was seen of many but it being the Lord's Day no one was so wicked as to shoot at or otherwise disturb him.

The animal is described of a dark dun color, with a dark stripe down the back and down the sholders, small erect ears about seuen feet long, with a tail and a bunch of hair on the end, powerful limbs making enormous leaps of tweny feet as it runs. Its back measures 4-2x5-2 inches in size, having been measured by quite a number of persons. Of the large number of persons who have seen it, all think it must be larger than a lynx, and from the absence of the tufts of hair at the tips of the ears, also the ears being smaller than the lynx, it is probaply an American panther or else an animal that has escape from some menagerie in some more thickly settled part of the country and has made its way into the thinly part of this country.

After placing our pickets, we retired with a short exhortation from the Mayor, to live so as to die and reach the place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. "Give us a rest was the general response. In the morning bright and early, ere the rosy dawn had lit up the variegated scene stretched out before us—we were all stretched out—the horn sounded, the dogs were let loose and a rush was made for the prairie and the rapid firing soon indicated lively work. The boys came into breakfast in good shape, for a good square meal, of birds, and other refreshments. A long march was made westward this day, which was very warm and some of the party got lost, and there was no water to be had. The dogs became exhausted and holes were dug in swampy places and the dogs let down by their tails to lap the water to keep them alive. Finally a party was sent out from the main party to find the main party to find the truants, and after a tedious search found them in camp.—Night came again as joyous as ever and all went well until about two o'clock in the morning, when we were aroused by a fearful roaring, and in the twinkle of an eye there rushed through the camp a terrible annimal, that looked as large as a two year old bull, throwing — dirt with all its feet, ears hanging down like a 'bacco leaf, tail slashing through the brushes when we heard the cry of "lynx, lynx," and good sized trees were soon in demand. One of our heavy weights made for a slender quackenash, and when about 14 feet up, snap went the butt and down he come, making everybody beleive that the lynx had him. He never said a word he just yelled. The marks were on his hand the next morning. Nobody seemed sleepy after that until morning. When there was some good sound snoring done, led by that prince of snorers, S. C. The next day we had the intese satisfaction of seeing a man swallow a snake while drinking from a pool of water. It was only a small one, and after eating a few onions, washing it down with Godfrey's Cordial it cameforth followed by a frog, two or three striped spiders, that he knew nothing about, and feeling grateful to the snake for their discovery. One evening as the Mayor was getting some wood, he picked up a stick, under which he discovered a 'massasoga" with 7 rattles. These little incidents always contributed largely to the comfort and happiness of the party, were looked as victories, and a sense of quiet reflection always crept over us when we lay down on our straw beds to sleep, and this was rendered the more exquisite from the admitted fact that rattlesnakes love straw too. After three days of capital fun we struck camp and with our trophies started for the city, but we lost most of our game from the excessive heat

Everyone of the party felt under many obligations to His Honor, the Mayor, Mr Carey and the Journal and Pharos offices for special favors and courtesies extended and hope in a few days to reciprocate in such a manner as to show an appreciation of their attention. Until then au revoir

The Albion New Era says: Last Saturday was a memorable day in the annals of Albion. The long-talked-of event—the completion of the Baltimore, Pittsburg & Chicago Railway, occurred then. The iron track was completed to Orange street · the switch was affixed, and the side-track commenced; an extra train arrived and unloaded a pile of telegraph poles, and arrangements for the opening of regular business went rapidly forward At noon, the Albion Band escorted the corps of tracklayers about 100 in number from the depot grounds up Orange street to the new brick lately erected by L. G. Vorden, adjoining the Worden House, where two long tables stood with a free dinner, donated by the citizens to the men who imediately respresented the successful consummation of one of the greatest enterprises of the 19th century. Arrived and in their places at the bountiful they listened to an eloquent and appropriate address of welcom by Nelson Prentiss, Esq.; and then, amid the strains of music from the band, proceeded to partake of Albion's free hospitality.

In the evening at the Bradley House a free supper was given to the men who dug through the hills and filled the valleys, and leveled the road-bed for the reception of the ties and rails which are to bear the long trains of commerce and travel from the Atlantic to the queen city of the lakes,

SARAH JANE SYLVESTER.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

'Twas on a summer evening
A little while ago,
That Sarah Jane Sylvester
Stood waiting for her beau.

She was a rustic maiden
Of nearly seventeen,
Her hands were plump and rosy,
Her face looked rather green.

When she was in a dreamy
And sentimental state,
Her favorite amusement
Was swinging on the gate.

The world was still about her,
The folks had gone to bed,
Down by the gates he listened
For Selah Bucklin's tread.

She clasped her hands together
Her lover she descried;
He strode up to the gateway
And stood (the other side).

And soon, in tender whispers,
They talked, as lovers do;
The stars were shining o'er them,
The moon was shining too.

At length he popped the question,
She sighed and hung her head,
Said she, "Why! Selah Bucklin,
Jest think what you have said!"

He drew her nearer to him
He kissed her rosy cheek,
When—suddenly she threw him
Away, and gave a shriek!

Down on the ground before her
Tall Selah Bucklin bowed,
To "stop" he did implore her,
From "screamin' out so loud."

"You'll scare up all the neighbors,
Don't holler, Sarah Jane,
I didn't mean ter tetch ye,
I never will agein."

But louder yet she shouted,
Nor heeded what he said;
From out the bed-room window
The old man popped his head.

And like a "Bull of Bashan,"
He bellowed, "What's to pay?"
"Lord knows," said Selah Bucklin,
While Sarah swooned away.

He gazed a single moment
Upon the senseless girl,
His heart was in a flutter,
His brain was in a whirl.

Then on the grass he laid her,
And when the task was done,
Adown the dusky highway
He nimbly "cut and run."

While from the farm-house doorway,
The old man in despair,
With his suspenders flying
Behind him in the air,

Come "tearing" down the pathway
To where the young girl lay.
(The sound of Selah's footsteps
Had nearly died away).

The father knelt beside her,
A sudden moan she made;
Said he, "Sal, what's the matter,
What made ye so afraid?"

Then amid her tears she murmured,
In hysterical alarm:
"It's—an—awful—caterpillar,
An'—he's—crawlin'—up—my—arm!"

A CONTEST WITH FOILS.

Just thirty years ago I arrived in St. Petersburg, with the intention of establishing myself as a fencing-master in the capital. Introductions from distinguished individuals of my own country enabled me to make a friend of Count Alexis W.; and that nobleman interested himself greatly in my success. Not content with procuring me several pupils, he urged me to petition the Emperor for the valuable and honorable appointment of fencing-master to a regiment; and, toward that end, gave me a letter of recommendation to an aid-de-camp of the Czarowitsch Constantine, who was then at the Castle of Strelna, near Petersburg.

The morning after, I hired a droschki and set out for Strelna, armed with my credentials. I reached the convent of St. Sergius, the saint most venerated in Russia after St. Alexander Nieuski. A few minutes afterward I arrived at the castle, and was soon ushered into the apartments of the Emperor's brother. In one of those I discovered him standing with his back to a large fire, and distinguished by the most forbidding countenance I ever beheld. He was tapping his boot with his riding-whip, and the undried splashes of mud on his pantaloons indicated that he had but recently returned from a ride or a review. At a table near him was seated Gen. Rodna, pen in hand, and apparently writing under the prince's dictation.

The door was scarcely closed when he Czarowitsch, fixing on me his piercing eyes, abruptly said:

"What is your age?"

"Six-and-twenty."

"Name?"

"G——."

"You want to be a fencing-master to a regiment?"

"May it please your highness, such is the object of my ambition."

"Are you a first-rate swordsman?"

"I have fenced in public several times since my arrival in St. Petersburg, and your highness can easily ascertain the opinion of those who were present."

"I have heard of you, but you had only second-rate fencers to contend with."

"Which gave them just claims upon my forbearance, your highness."

"Forbearance!" he repeated, with flashing eyes, and a scornful curl on his lips; "but if less considerate, what then?"

"I should have buttoned them ten times for every twice that they touched me, your highness."

"Ha! and could you do that with me?"

"That would depend on how your imperial highness might wish to be treated. If as a prince, it is probable your highness would touch me ten times and be touched twice. But if your highness desired to be treated like any other person, the ten hits would be achieved by me, and the two by your highness."

"Lubenski!" roared the Czarowitsch, rubbing his hands; "Lubenski, bring the foils! We shall see, Sir Braggadocio!"

"Is it possible your highness would condescend—"

"My highness orders you to touch me ten times if you can. Do you want to back out already? Now take this foil and mask. Guard!"

"Is it your highness's absolute command?"

"Yes, yes!"

"I am ready."

"Ten times," repeated the prince, as he attacked me—"ten times, mind you; less won't do. Ha! ha!"

Notwithstanding this encouragement, I kept merely on the defensive, contenting myself with parrying his thrusts without returning them.

"Now, then!" cried he, angrily, "what are you about? You are playing the fool with me. Why don't you thrust?"

"Your highness! the respect—"

"Confound your respect, sir! Thrust! thrust!"

Observing through his mask that his cheeks were flushed and his eyes bloodshot, I took advantage of the permission granted, and touched him three times running.

"Bravo!" cried he. "My turn now. Ha! A hit! a hit!"

He had touched me. I then touched him four times in rapid succession, and was then touched once.

"Hurrah!" he cried, exultingly. "Rodna, did you see that? Twice to his seven."

"Twice to ten, your highness," replied I, pressing him very hard. "Eight, nine, ten! Now we are quits."

"Good, good!" cried the Czarowitsch, approvingly; "very good. But that's not all. The small sword—not enough—no use to the cavalry; want the saber. How could you defend yourself, on foot, against a mounted lancer? Parry a lance thrust? Eh?"

"I think I could, your highness."

"Think so! Not sure, eh?"

"Pardon me, your highness, I have no doubt of it."

"Lubenski!" again shouted the prince.

The officer appeared.

"A lance and horse! Quick!"

"But, your highness," I interposed.

"Ha! you are afraid?"

"I am not afraid; but with your highness I should experience equal reluctance to be the victor or the vanquished."

"All nonsense and flattery. First trial was capital. Now for the second."

At this moment the officer appeared before the windows of the palace, leading a magnificent horse, and bearing a lance in his hand.

"Now, then," exclaimed Constantine, as he dashed out of the room, and made me a sign to follow him. "Give him a good saber, Lubenski; and now, my Englishman, mind yourself, or you'll be spitted like one of the toads in my summer-house. The last lived three days, Rodna," added he, turning to that General, "with a nail through his belly."

So saying, the prince sprang upon his steed. With great skill, he put the animal through the most difficult evolutions, at the same time executing sundry parries and thrusts with his lance.

"All ready?" he cried, riding up to me.

"Ready, your highness," was my reply; and he, setting spurs to his horse, galloped off to the further end of the avenue.

"Surely, all this is a joke?" I said to Gen. Rodna.

"By no means," was the reply. "You will either lose your life or gain your appointment. Defend yourself as if you were on a battle-field."

Matters had taken a much more serious turn than I had anticipated. Had I considered myself at liberty to return blow for blow, I could have taken my chance without uneasiness; but finding myself bound to control, as well as to use, a keen-edged sabre, while exposed to the sharpened lance of a reckless and royal antagonist, the chances of the diversion were decidedly against me. It was too late, however, to draw back.

I summoned to my aid all the coolness and address I possessed, and prepared to face the Czarowitsch, who had already reached the end of the avenue and turned his horse about. The animal advanced at full speed, Constantine being crouched down upon his neck in such a manner that he was nearly concealed by the abundant mane.

When he reached me, he made a point at my breast; but I parried his thrust, and, bounding on one side, horse and rider, carried away by their impetuosity, passed by without doing the slightest injury.

"Very good! very good!" he said; "try again."

Without giving me time for objection or remark, he took space for his career, and, after asking me if I was ready, returned to the charge with great fury. As before, I kept my eyes fixed on his, and not one of his motions escaped me. At the decisive moment I parried en parle, and by a spring to the right made his second attack as harmless as the first.

Uttering a howl of disappointment, the Czarowitsch entered into the spirit of our tilting match as ardently as if it had been a real combat, and had, moreover, made up his mind that it should terminate in his favor; but when I saw him retracing the ground for the third assault, I resolved that it should be the last.

Again he advanced toward me with whirlwind speed; this time, however, without contenting myself with a mere parry, I dealt a violent back-handed blow on the pole of the lance, which was severed by the stroke, and Constantine felt himself disarmed. Then, quick as thought, I seized the bridle of the horse, and by a violent jerk threw him on his haunches, at the same time placing the point of my sabre on the breast of the rider.

Gen. Rodna uttered a cry of alarm; he thought I was going to kill the Prince. Constantine also had the same impression, for the color left his cheek for an instant. Stepping a pace backward, and bowing to the Grand Duke, I said: "Your Highness has now seen what I am able to teach to Russian soldiers, and whether I am worthy to become their professor."

"Yes, by my soul, you are! Never saw a braver fellow; and a regiment you shall have, if I can get it for you. Now follow me," he added, as he threw himself from the saddle, and led the way to his apartments.

When there, he took up a pen and wrote at the foot of the petition to the Emperor, which I had fortunately in readiness:

"I humbly recommend the petitioner to your Imperial Majesty, believing him in every way worthy of the favor he solicits."

It is only necessary to add that, after some short delay, I was fortunate enough in procuring the post I so anxiously sought.

THE SECRETS OF LAW-MAKING.

Revelations of a Reformed Legislator.

Hon. George Lewis, Representative in the Michigan Legislature, from Bay county, delivered a lecture recently in Bay City, on "Legislating," for the benefit of the Methodist Church of that city. He said:

GENTLEMEN AND LADIES: I could have said ladies and gentleman had I wished to conform to the customary style of orators, speakers, and lecturers, but I did not nor do I intend to. I have had lots of trouble with female women in all my lifetime. I never could endure to be dictated to and have always had a yielding disposition toward them, and for the sake of peace was always willing, when I couldn't help it, to submit tamely to their encroachments. However, I will not anticipate; I will attend to the women as proceed. [Cheers.]

In giving this lecture, my friends and fellow-citizens, I have two objects in view, virtually killing two birds with one stone, as the old farmer said when he stopped at the mill in returning from his wife's funeral, and took home a load of lumber. The two birds I propose to kill by this stone—or lecture—are, first, make money for the church so they may meet their liabilities and become an honorable and honest church; and, second, give an account of my stewardship to my constituents; they have a right to ask, demand and expect that of me, and I would be recreant and faithless to my trust if I failed to show my hand when called out. It was proposed at first that our Senator (J. D. Lewis) should rise and explain in connection with myself, and thereby place his record before the public. If he had said anything he was sorry for and was glad of it, let him come up flat-footed and own the corn. Airing would do him no good, and repenting might bring trouble on his peaceful conscience. He is of good address, and I am slow of speech; he is literary, but I am not, but I don't think he has the best of me there. [Applause.] There were many bills passed and not passed, of a local and general nature, during my legislative career, that I would like to explain, but it will be impossible for me, in a single evening, to dwell for a brief period and at length on any, and I will give only a passing notice of a few. [Approbation.] The most important bill of the session, and the one I feel called on to consider more fully and at length because of its vast, varied, and insignificant importance, is that which relates to the subject of dogs.

If there are any ladies present who dislike my method of treating this subject, I hereby apologize, and, if necessary, will shed tears. [Cheers and sympathy.] Buell, of the upper peninsula, introduced a law to regulate labor and meal-time. I think it became a law. Ripley, of Saginaw, favored the bill in an elaborate speech, which killed it. Then we had a milk bill which did become a law. It is a very important and well-known law, and I presume but a few of you are aware there is such a law. The main features of said law are:

"That whoever shall knowingly sell to any person or persons, or shall bring to be manufactured to any cheese or butter factory in this State, any milk diluted with water or in any way diluted, or milk from which any cream has been taken, or milk commonly known as 'skimmed milk,' or shall keep back any part of the milk known as 'strippings,' shall be be subject to fine and imprisonment, etc." [Loud laughter.]

There is a law I have no doubt you all will rejoice over, with, perhaps, the exception of a few milk-sellers who keep back strippings and adulterate milk by mixing the same with common water.

I opposed that bill because, first, I did not think it could be enforced; second, my constituents sell milk, therefore it might interfere with my interests or my wife's, which is one and the same thing; and, third, it did not go far enough. It should punish thin cow's milk as well as adulterated or watered milk. Thin cow's milk is the meanest kind, and should be looked after and made to suffer. [Prolonged merriment.]

There was another bill introduced to prevent babies from eating matches. Richardson, of Detroit, opposed the bill—was afraid it would interfere with the demand. I expected his opposition would cause it to prevail, until Wilber offered his amendment, which provided as follows:

"Each box of matches shall be labeled 'Poisonous,' and kept from babies' mouths. All matches are poisonous. Antidote for the same, onion syrup and goose oil."—Dr. Bartholomew. [Cheers.]

The same Wilber, the author of the goose oil amendment, soon after made a tremendous speech on a resolution in relation to a ship canal across the lower peninsula. Shaw offered a resolution authorizing 1,000 copies to be printed for the use of the House. Dr. Bartholomew offered an amendment that the "onion syrup and goose oil prescription be added to the resolution and printed with Wilber's speech," which amendment prevailed. The doctor got all he asked for, but was not happy. [Applause and laughter.]

There was another dog bill passed, but its provisions are violated and held in contempt by the dog men, the friends of the dogs, and the dogs themselves. That law requires that every dog must wear a collar with the name of the dog's owner engraved thereon. I wrote an amendment and got my partner, Welch, to offer it, which required the dog's name also to be engraved on the collar, so that when a man met a stray dog he would know the owner's name and likewise the dog's name, and could thereby open friendly negotiations with him (the dog) in a legitimate manner. And there were some members who never could see a good thing unless originated by themselves, therefore my amendment did not prevail. [Laughter.] Shaw introduced another dog bill. I supported the other, but opposed this. I presume to have been consistent, I should have supported this, but there is no use trying to be consistent if you wish to be honest. I prefer honesty to consistency. [Cheers and murmurs of satisfaction.] The fact is, you can't always see the same things alike at different times, and under different circumstances; to be honest you need not; to be consistent, you must. I hate and detest the word consistency. It is always getting honest politicians into trouble. For instance, we had a bill to protect muskrats, and one to protect fish. They were similar in many respects; both favored protection, and to have been consistent I should have favored both, but I didn't. I was honest. [Cheers.] I opposed the rats and favored the fish. I presented the fish bill, while the rat bill was introduced by a Granger. The fish bill prevailed, but the rats were slaughtered. But I find I am digressing again, and I guess I am getting myself into a muddle. [Laughter.] There is nothing like sticking to the main question, which is always tedious and tires an audience. I never got arrested but once during my whole legislative career. The Sergeant-at-Arms and myself once had different opinions as to duties. I wanted to oversee the Senate, and he thought I belonged lower down. His opinions prevailed. I came near being caught another time. I wanted to go home, and didn't want to ask for an excuse, so I concluded to steal out quietly and run. It was almost train time, and just as I got started a green member fresh from the country made a motion for a call of the House, and they hurried me gently back from the depot. [Furious applause.] Going to the Legislature is very similar to going to jail, with the difference in favor of the jail. The gentleman who serves a term in the Legislature is expected to do everything everybody wants him to, and is watched and criticised beyond decency; while the gentleman who serves a term in jail is allowed to pursue his avocation quietly, and when his term expires he can walk out like a man, and not be called to account for his conduct while carrying out the will of his constituents. [Cries of "Too true," and laughter.]

The Legislature is composed of a third house, sometimes designated the "lobby." This house does the heavy work of the session, furnishes most of the whisky, and is able to get on the outside of a fair share of it. Ladies are eligible as members of this house. Mrs. —— was a member in good standing in 1873. She worked with an energy and will that made even John Harmon take a back seat. She was working for her rights. This lady had a bill drawn up in a good and workmanlike manner, providing that "when a husband leaves his wife with good and sufficient cause, etc., the Circuit Court in chancery might decree a support equal to her dignity and importance." She solicited the aid of Butler, a lobbyist of the third house. He encouraged her, but thought the Legislature a better place to introduce the bill. Butler presented her to Cobb and left her to do her own talking. Cobb thought Ripley could more appropriately present the bill; an introduction to Ripley relieved Cobb. It was now thought her troubles were at an end, as Ripley could have no excuse to saddle her off on anybody else; but Ripley himself was actually intimidated. He palmed her off on Shaw, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Shaw did assist her, and got a bill passed, slightly modified.

The Siamese Twins Outdone.

On the night of the 1st of August, Mrs. Mary Hess, wife of David Hess, living at Pottsdam, Miami county, gave birth to twins, who as a natural curiosity excel the far-famed Siamese. The children were both males, fully developed, their combined weight being 13½ pounds. Each had a separate circulation, and they were in all respects two distinct persons except the union between them, which was about as follows:

The distance from the base of the skull to the point of union was 1½ inches on each side. The length of the union was 4½ inches, extending to the umbilicus, there being but one for both. The nipples were 2½ inches apart, and the nipple of the left child was on its back. It was 6 inches from the joint of the right shoulder of the right child to the left shoulder of the left child. The circumference of the union was 18 inches, and the entire length of the children was 19 inches. The bond of union between the two was a bony substance.

Both children were born dead, but before the interment photographs of them were taken, and a picture of them in India ink is on exhibition at the gallery of the Messrs. Tresize, on East Fifth street, in this city. Mr. Hess, the father, is a blacksmith, and large sums of money wery offered him for the bodies of the children, but he declined them, and, after the burial, a guard was placed over the grave to prevent them being stolen away. They were afterward secretly removed and buried in another place unknown to any person but the parents. The mother was three days in labor, and was attended by Drs. Sigerfoost and Bobbs. She has been up and well for some time.—Dayton (O.) Journal.

A GENTLEMAN who has been recently traveling in the lower counties tells us the following amusing story: He was stopping over night at a house where the partition walls were particularly thin. The adjoining room was occupied by a mother and her daughter. After retiring the mother began to rebuke the daughter for an alleged partiality to somebody named John, which soft impeachment the daughter denied vigorously.

"But," said the mother, "I saw him kissing you at the cow-pen yesterday morning, Amanda."

"No, ma, he wasn't kissing me at all."

"Why, did you have your head so close up to his for, you deceivin' critter?"

"Well, you see, ma, I had been eating pitallas (the fruit of a species of cactus), and you see, ma, I got some of the prickles in my lips—and—and—"

"And what, you wicked, wicked critter?"

"And I couldn't get them out myself, you know, and John pulled them out with his teeth—but he didn't kiss me nary time."

AN alleged lunatic was consigned to an asylum by his wife and friends. A gentleman said to a lady who doubted the victim's insanity: "What do you think, madam, of his lying on his back in the barn yard and permitting the hens to feed off his body?" "Why, nothing more," responded the lady, "than that 'like many other married men, he was henpecked.'"

A Famous Battle-Ground.

A temperance mass meeting was recently held on the ground where occurred the battle of Tippecanoe in 1811, at which meeting an address was delivered by Hon. Will Cumback, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Indiana. The following description of the field is furnished by a correspondent:

In company with a friend, I walked leisurely over the ground for the purpose of recalling the history of the celebrated battle and viewing the spots which once drank up the blood of so many noble men. The battle-ground proper embraces between thirty and forty acres, and is inclosed by an iron fence. It lies on the borders of Burnet's Creek, seven miles northeast of Lafayette, Ind. Beautiful shade trees are scattered through it here and there, and a rich green turf covers the entire grounds. At one side a large grove offers protection from the burning rays of an August sun to a company of ten thousand or more. Above is as pure an atmosphere as any one need desire to breathe.

On these grounds, changed but little in appearance from what they were half a century or more ago, the army under command of Gen. Harrison encamped on the night of the 6th of November, 1811. Says John B. Dillon, in his "History of Indiana:" "The army encamped in order of battle. The men were ordered to sleep with their clothes and accoutrements on—with their fire-arms loaded and their bayonets fixed. It seems, however, that the principal officers of the expedition did not expect that the Indians would, on that night, make an attack. But about two hours before sunrise, on the 7th of November, an attack was made so suddenly that the Indians were in the camp before many of the men could get out of their tents."

Every one who knows anything about the history of the early Indian wars knows how fiercely this noted battle raged, and how many men fell to rise no more. As I stood on the small piece of elevated ground where, it is said, the Indian prophet encouraged his followers by singing a war song, I imagined I could hear the voices of Cols. Daviess and Owen, cheering on their men also, until the fatal bullets did their work. "Near this corner," said my friend "is where the gallant Warrick fell, pierced through the body. He insisted on remaining at the head of his company, although death was stamped on his pallid features."

The merry laugh of a few romping girls attracted my attention to another part of the grounds. "Major Daviess fell there," remarked a country gentleman familiar with the field, "and a little further that way (pointing north). Col. Owens, of the Eighteenth Kentucky, received his wound which so soon proved fatal."

"Here is where the men charged," continued the same gentleman, "and right by that tree five Indian chiefs were found dead." There seemed to be scarcely a square foot of ground within the inclosure that was not marked by some important event which occurred on that memorable day, and I do not wonder the field is visited so often and by so many scores of strangers.

Your Chin.

A pointed or round chin indicates a congenial love. A person with such a chin will have a bean ideal, and will not be easily satisfied with real men or women.

The indented chin indicates a great desire to be loved; hunger and thirst for affection. When large in woman she may overstep the bounds of etiquette and make love to one that pleases her.

A narrow square chin indicates a desire to love, and is more common among women.

The broad square chin indicates violent love, or at least devoted attachment.

The broad round chin indicates ardent love, combined with great steadfastness and permanence of affection.

The retreating chin is indicative of the want of attachment, and but little ardor in love.

The chin, in its length and breadth, indicates self-control, self-will, resolution and decision, etc.

Carnivorous animals have the upper jaw projecting, while those of a graminivorous nature have the lower jaw projecting. In man with a projecting upper jaw, will be found large destructiveness and love of animal food; when the lower jaw projects, then the love for vegetable food.

A Drowned Rat.

A lady living in the country had her attention drawn one day to some rats in an outer room, surrounding a pail which had been prepared for the pigs. Observing them carefully, she soon discovered that a young rat had fallen into the pail, and that his friends, to the number of five or six, were in consultation as to the best means of rescuing him. The lady called others of her family to witness the rats' manœuvres, while they continued busily at work, regardless of the presence of spectators. By twining their feet together (the hind feet of the foremost rat being entwined with the fore feet of the next, and so on) they formed a chain extending over the side of the pail. The foremost rat, supposed to be the mother, then reached down, grasped the young one in her arms, and both were drawn out on the floor. Unfortunately their deliberations had occupied so much time that the young rat was drowned before he was extricated, and apparently the intelligence of his friends did not extend so far as to attempt resuscitation.

BRUTAL.—Kicking is a favorite mode of fighting in the northern counties of England, more particularly in Lancashire, where, as the poorer classes wear wooden shoes, a vigorous kick will frequently have fatal consequences. The most strenuous exertions have been made by the authorities to stop the vicious and cowardly habit, but the punishments awarded by the law are not thought to be sufficiently severe to meet the case. Flogging is now proposed as the only remedy, and Parliament is to be petitioned for an act to empower magistrates to award this punishment.

LIGHTNING-ROD venders are sad now that metal roofs are discovered to be an absolute protection to houses in thunder storms.

Reminiscences of the Founder of the "Herald."

Strolling into the Town-Clerk's office, the other day, I was shown a receipt given by the late James Gordon Bennett, founder of the New York Herald. The receipt was given in acknowledgment of having received the sum of $18.70 for two and a half months' teaching in 1816. Mr. Bennett passed through Steuben when on his way from Halifax to Boston, and, on arriving here, being hard up, he taught the village school. Bennett showed a good deal of theological lore, and held a strong argument with the old orthodox deacons of the town. He also evinced great proficiency in teaching. He suddenly left town one night. It was afterward ascertained that he had taken passage on board a vessel for Boston. The next thing heard from Bennett was in the shape of the New York Herald, copies of which paper have ever since been taken in this town, more because the people respected Bennett's friendship than on account of any love they bore toward the paper.—Steuben (Me.) Cor. of the Boston Globe.

A Strange Story.

Miss Lyda Byres' father, of Oskaloosa, Ia., lately wrote a letter to one of his daughter's lady friends in Bloomington, Ill., stating that Lyda was dead. She had been seized with illness soon after returning home from the Normal school at Bloomington and died suddenly. It made much grief among the companions of the young lady's Normal school course. Several days after a letter came addressed to the same young lady of Bloomington, apparently by the hands of her dead friend. Opening the letter she found that her supposed dead friend had both written the letter and signed it. The letter stated that she had been struck down by illness, was pronounced dead, put in a coffin, her grave dug, and the hour for the funeral appointed; but she was luckily not buried for the very good reason that she woke up in time to render the last ceremony quite unnecessary. She was very glad of it and quite well again. She supposes it was a trance that looked like death.—Burlington (Ia.) Gazette.

"TOM, what in the world put matrimony into your head?" "Well, the fact is, I was getting short of shirts."

REV. E. H. HOPKINS, of Jackson Center, Shelby Co., O., says: "My wife had the consumption for ten years, and had been confined to her bed for some time. I heard of Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, and after using four bottles, she was able to do the work for her family."

THE BEST EVIDENCE.

The following letter from REV. E. S. BEST, pastor M. E. Church, Natick, Mass., will be read with interest by many physicians. Also those suffering from the same disease as afflicted the son of the Rev. E. S. Best. No person can doubt this testimony, and there is no doubt about the curative powers of VEGETINE.

NATICK, Mass. Jan. 1, 1873.

Dear Sir—We have good reason for regarding your VEGETINE a medicine of the greatest value. We feel assured that it has been the means of saving our son's life. He is now seventeen years of age; for the last two years he has suffered from necrosis of his leg, caused by scrofulous affection, and was so far reduced that nearly all who saw him thought his recovery impossible. A council of able physicians could give us but the faintest hope of his ever rallying, two of the number declaring that he was beyond the reach of human remedies, that even amputation could not save him, as he had not vigor enough to endure the operation. Just then we commenced giving him VEGETINE, and from that time to the present he has been continuously improving. He has lately resumed his studies, thrown away crutches and cane, and walks about cheerful and strong.

Though there is still some discharge from the opening where his limb was lanced, we have the fullest confidence that in a little time he will be perfectly cured.

He has taken about three dozen bottles of VEGETINE, but lately uses but little, as he declares that he is too well to be taking medicine.

Respectfully yours, E. S. BEST,
MRS. L. C. F. BEST.

The range of disorders which yield to the influence of this medicine, and the number of defined diseases which it never fails to cure, are greater than any other single medicine has hitherto been even recommended for, by any other than the proprietors of some quack nostrum. These diseases are Scrofula and all Eruptive diseases and Tumors, Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, and Spinal complaints, and all Inflammatory symptoms, Ulcers, all Syphilitic diseases, Kidney and Bladder diseases, Dropsy, the whole train of painful disorders which so generally afflict American women, and which carry annually thousands of them to premature graves; Dyspepsia, that universal curse of American manhood; Heartburn, Piles, Constipation, Nervousness, inability to sleep, and impure blood.

This is a formidable list of human ailments for any single medicine to successfully attack, and it is not probable that any one article before the public has the power to cure the quarter of them excepting the VEGETINE. It lays the ax at the root of the tree of disease by first eliminating every impurity from the blood, promoting the secretions, opening the pores—the great escape valves of the system—invigorating the liver to its full and natural action, cleansing the stomach and strengthening digestion. This much accomplished, the speedy and the permanent cure of not only the diseases we have enumerated, but likewise the whole train of chronic and constitutional disorders, is certain to follow. This is precisely what VEGETINE does, and it does it so quickly and so easily, that it is an accomplished fact almost before the patient is aware of it himself.

VEGETINE is sold by all Druggists.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL

Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL
THROAT AND LUNG
DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE or ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

All who have known or tried Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's remedies require no references from us, but the names of thousands cured by them can be given to any one who doubts our statement. Dr. L. Q. C. Popping the Question.

Don't be too sudden about it. Many a girl has said "no" when she meant "yes," simply because her lover didn't choose the right time to pop the question gently.

Take a dark night for it. Have the blinds closed, the curtain down and the lamp turned most out. Sit near enough to her so that you can hook your little finger into hers. Wait until conversation begins to flag, and then quietly remark:

"Susie, I want to tell you something."

She will fidget around a little, reply "yes," and after a pause you can add:

"Susie, my actions must have shown—that is, you must have seen—I mean you must be aware that—that——"

Pause here for awhile, but keep your little finger firmly locked. She may cough and try to turn the subject off by asking you how you liked the circus, but she only does this to encourage you. After about ten minutes you can continue:

"I was thinking as I came up the path to-night that before I went away I would ask you—that is, I would broach the subject nearest my—I mean I would know my——"

Stop again and give her hand a gentle squeeze. She may give you a yank so get it away, or she may not, in either case it augurs well for you. Wait about five minutes, and then go on:

"The past year has been a very happy one to me, but I hope that future years will be still happier. However, that depends entirely upon you. I am here to-night to know—that is to ask you—I mean I am here to-night to hear from your own lips the one sweet——"

Wait again. It isn't best to be too rash about such things. Give her plenty of time to recover her composure, and then put your hand on your heart and continue:

"Yes, I thought as I was coming through the gate to-night how happy I had been, and I said to myself that if I only knew you would consent to be my—that is, I said if I only knew—if I was certain that my heart had not deceived me and you were ready to share——"

Hold on—there's no hurry about it. Give the wind a chance to sob and moan around the gables. This will make her lonesome and call up all the love in her heart. When she begins to cough and grow restless, you can go on.

"Before I met you this world was a desert to me. I didn't take any pleasure in going blackberrying and stealing rare-ripe peaches, and it didn't matter whether the sun shone or not. But, what a change in one short year! It is for you to say whether my future shall be a prairie of happiness or a summer fallow of Canada thistles. Speak, dearest Susie, and say—and say that—that——"

Give her five minutes more by the clock, and then add:

"That you will be—that is, that you will—I mean that you will be—be mine!"

She will heave a sigh, look up at the clock and over the stove, and then as she slides her head over on your vest-pocket, she will whisper:

"You are just right I will!"—M. Quad, in Our Fireside Friend.

A Model Farmer's Wife.

Matilda Fletcher thus describes a farmer's wife who is not only beautiful and wise, but possesses several cardinal virtues in addition: "The most beautiful woman I have ever known was a farmer's wife, who attended to the household duties for a family of four, and also assisted in gardening and the light farm work; and yet I never saw her hands rough and red, and never even saw a freckle on her nose. Impossible! you say; how did she manage? I never asked her, but she had some envious neighbors who went slouching around with red, scaly hands, sunburnt faces, and hair matted with dust and oil, who let me into the dreadful secret. They informed me with many an ominous shake of the head that she was just the proudest minx that ever lived; that she actually wore India-rubber gloves when she used the broom and scrubbing-brush and always when she worked out-doors; that she also had a bonnet made of oil-silk, completely covering the head, face and neck, leaving only apertures for seeing and breathing, thus securing perfect freedom from sun, wind and dust. Did you ever hear of such depravity? She also fastened her dish-cloth to a stick so that she need not put her hands in hot water. For the same reason she accomplished her laundry work with a machine and wringer. And then to see her in the afternoon tricked out in a fashionable white dress, with a bright-colored ribbon at her throat, and a rose in her hair, entertaining in the parlor, as though she was the greatest lady in the land, was more than their patience could endure. And her husband! He had such a satisfied expression that it was a perfect aggravation to ordinary people to look at him. He deserved to be happy because he encouraged and helped her to cultivate beauty in herself, her family, and her home; and I don't know but her success principally belonged to him, because he brought all the new inventions that could lighten her labors and all the delicate and pretty things she needed to adorn her home, and when she was sick he wouldn't let her touch work until she was well and strong. Strange as it may seem, at such times he actually devoted himself to her with as much care and tenderness as he would if she had been the most valuable horse on the farm."

Playing it on a Clerk.

A certain lawyer's clerk had been in the habit of taking an afternoon nap, in the absence of the boss. On such occasions he has been in the habit of putting up his placard on the front door: "Gone to the Clerk's office." Some young men who had witnessed the performance concluded to play a joke at his expense. Accordingly, they watched him last Saturday afternoon, and, after he had put up the usual sign, and dutifully laid him down on his lounge, they removed it and put the following in its place: "On the lounge in the back room asleep—don't knock—will wake up at 5 o'clock. Call then." A number of persons read the notice and went away wondering what the country could be coming to, when a young man could thus fritter away time. At last the young man awoke from his dreams, and his feelings may be imagined when he saw what had been done.—Paterson (N.J.) Guardian.

California's Biggest Nugget.—How much we owe to California! Her precious metals have enriched thousands of our fellow citizens, and have proved the main stay of America in times of national pecuniary embarrassment. Her mining industries have given employment to myriads of mechanics and laborers. She is the land of promise to the fortune seeker. But the Golden State has lately sent us a new treasure. Her last nugget is Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters. The health-giving principles contained in this curative are a more precious boon than gold. In all affections of the liver and stomach, remittent and intermittent fevers, rheumatism, and pulmonary diseases, it may be relied upon. As a blood-depurent and invigorant it is unequaled, purifying the circulation and infusing new vigor into the debilitated frame. It conquers that most unyielding of all complaints—dyspepsia, and we know of no other remedy that can accomplish this. Its entire freedom from alcoholic spirit, which retards and neutralizes the effect of any medicine, and which forms the basis of many of the pseudo bitters and tonics, doubly enhances its value to the sick. The papers of the United States vie with one another in doing honor to Dr. Walker. We, too, add our voice, and say, all honor to the man whose science and skill have enabled him to draw from the vegetable kingdom such a balsam for human suffering.

Receipts for Making Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery:

Something over a year since, a periodical issued in Berlin, Prussia, and laying claims to a scientific character, published what was represented as being the formulæ or receipts for making Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The people were left to infer that these had been deducted from a careful chemical analysis of the medicines, which are rapidly growing in popular favor in that as well as in this and most other civilized countries. The receipts were evidently invented by those jealous of the reputation and large sale which these medicines are rapidly acquiring and who are pecuniarily interested in endeavoring to check their sale. So ridiculously preposterous are those receipts that medicines compounded after them could never have gained any reputation or sale in any country, for they would be so caustic, poisonous, immediately and positively injurious, as in every case to be promptly condemned by the people on the first trial as miserable, dangerous and wicked humbugs. Whereas, it is a well-known fact that all my medicines enjoy the reputation, honestly earned, of being not only efficacious, but perfectly mild, pleasant and harmless in effects. Notwithstanding, however, that the bogus receipts were so ridiculously preposterous as scarcely to have been believed by the most unscientific, thoughtless and unsuspecting people, yet strange and incredible as it may seem, a paper of high scientific pretensions, published in this country, copied the fictitious receipts from the German paper. This they evidently did without a moment's reflection, for that much consideration, given by an intelligent mind, to the receipts and the properties and effects of the mixtures that would result from such a compounding of well-known caustic and poisonous chemicals and drugs, would have condemned them as bogus fabrications, and the pretentious publishers of the paper that originally inserted them, as either knaves or fools. On my attention being called to the matter, in order that some thoughtless and over-credulous people might not be deceived and misled by seeing such an announcement in a paper laying claim to a scientific character, as well as to clear myself of the imputation of being guilty of perpetrating a wicked fraud upon the people, as such announcement, if uncontradicted, would imply, I, as proprietor and manufacturer of the aforesaid celebrated medicines, went before a magistrate and made oath to the fact that the said receipts were utterly false. My affidavit was sent to the publishers of the paper into which the bogus receipts had been copied, and in a subsequent issue an editorial notice was given of my denial. But, notwithstanding such correction and denial, made under oath, certain individuals, who lounge around and infest our large cities, gaining a livelihood by perpetrating all kinds of catch-penny frauds upon the credulous, were thereby given the hint that, as my medicines were universally popular, by advertising for sale bogus receipts for making them, they could get lots of ignorant people to bite at their bait. One Frank M. Reed, of 139 Eighth street, New York, who publishes "Love and Courtship Cards," a "Fortune Teller and Dream Book," "The Mysteries of Love Making," "How to Woo and how to Win," and various other swindles, sends his dupes the following in exchange for their stamps. It is copied from the papers alluded to and is as follows: "For Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, take eight grains Carbolic Acid, seven grains of Camphor, and two and a half grains of common Salt, the whole to be colored with a little Prussian blue." This makes a powerful caustic mixture as unlike Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy (which is perfectly unirritating, mild, soothing and pleasant) as light is from darkness. As "a burnt child dreads the fire," if any have been so foolish as to have burned their noses sore with this caustic compound, thinking that they were using the same as Dr. Sage's celebrated Catarrh Remedy, they will, it is to be hoped, profit by the lesson thereby taught them and not be so ready next time to bite at every catch-penny advertising dodge that swindlers may offer them. For Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery the bogus receipt reads: "Take four drachms purified Honey, fifteen grains extract poisonous Lettuce, thirty grains of Opium, three and a fourth ounces dilute Spirits, three ounces water. Mix." Of the ridiculous bogus formula I will say, as I did under oath, not one of the medicinal or poisonous ingredients therein given enters into the composition of my Golden Medical Discovery! And furthermore, I will say that I defy all the chemists in the world to ascertain, by chemical analysis, the composition of any of my Family Medicines, as they cannot be analyzed so as to determine their ingredients, many of which are new in medicine and, like nearly all vegetable extracts, there are no known reagents or chemical tests by which their presence can be determined. If any further proof is wanted to satisfy any person that the receipt given above is utterly false, let that person have the mixture, as given, compounded and, not only will it be seen to be entirely unlike my Discovery in appearance, but if a further test is wanted, by taking a dose of it, it will be found to produce drowsiness and stupor, whereas my Discovery, in ever so large doses, produces no such effect. Others, located in different cities and engaged in advertising for sale bogus receipts for making my medicines, send those that bite at their bait other and various ridiculous formulæ. One sent out by a villainous knave, located in Chicago, gives the chief ingredient of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy as being Blue Vitriol, which is only equaled in absurdity by another issued by parties in Philadelphia who say that the ingredients composing Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are "burnt Alum, white Vitriol, Sugar of Lead, and Prussiate of Iron," and that my Golden Medical Discovery is "simply Syrup and Tincture of Ginger." In refutation of all the various and ridiculous bogus receipts for making my medicines that have ever been, or may hereafter be published and circulated, I would say that I have, in dealing with the people, ever been governed by the maxim that "honesty is the best policy," and that "success makes success;" for it is because some sufferer has obtained relief and cure, and that sufferer has sent another to me; and it is because thousands have been cured that they have recommended me and my superior remedies to other thousands of sufferers. In this way I am constantly making living advertisements for myself and medicines. It is a common thing to hear people say that plenty of advertising will make a success out of anything, whether it has any merit or not. Nothing could be farther from the truth. It is with this delusive idea actuating them that thousands have rushed headlong into advertising, only to find themselves bankrupt in a little while. Not more than one in five hundred, who engages in advertising medicines, ever makes a financial success out of the undertaking, for the reason that a medicine to be successful must possess unusual and extraordinary merit. It is not enough that it should be a remedy of fair efficacy; it must possess superior and wonderful remedial properties, for if it does not, those who use it with the most sanguine expectations will condemn it. They will expect much of it, and it must be equal to the test, or it will prove ruinous to the proprietor. For, although a great display of advertising will, many times, create a considerable immediate demand for the article advertised, yet if that article does not possess real merit, the demand will be only temporary; the fraud will be detected, and the reaction will upset the proprietor and all his high expectations, long before he is able to recover the amount of money already expended. With this view of the subject, I have felt warranted in contracting for hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of advertising in the newspapers of this and other countries, feeling perfectly assured that the merits of my remedies were so great as to insure a financial success out of such a bold undertaking. And in this I have not been disappointed, for my sales have increased steadily year after year, until they will this year largely exceed half a million dollars' worth of my medicines. This grand success, I am certain, could never have been attained had the medicines not possessed superior and wonderful merits.

The Toledo Blade, in an editorial article, has truly said, alluding to my business, that "great success is never achieved without merit. An article that holds the field year after year, and the sales of which increase regularly and rapidly, must have absolute merit."

The article continues: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., occupies our entire eighth page to-day with his various articles. We admit it because we know the doctor, and know of his articles. We know him to be a regularly educated physician, whose diploma hangs on the wall of his office, and we know that he has associated with him several of the most eminent practitioners in the country. We know that parties consult him, by mail and in person, from all the States in the Union every day, and that they are fairly and honestly dealt with. We know that his medicines are sold in enormous quantities in every State in the Union, and very largely in many foreign countries.

"This grand result has been accomplished by two agencies—good, reliable articles—articles which, once introduced, work, easily, their own way—and splendid business management. They have succeed because they ought to have succeeded."

In conclusion, I cannot offer a better refutation of the slanderous reports published concerning my medicines, than to call attention to the testimonials on file in my office, which are open to the inspection of the public. They are from all parts of the world, and express the gratitude of thousands that have been afflicted with Chronic Catarrh, Lingering Coughs, various Blood Diseases, affecting the skin, flesh and bones, severe diseases peculiar to females, and many other forms of obstinate diseases, and have been cured by the use of my Family Medicines, after suffering for years and being pronounced incurable by eminent physicians.

Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. A Means of Grace.
Rev. Milton Ressler, of Marseilles, Ills.—says: I have no scruples about recommending Kress Fever Tonic. I rather regard it as a means of grace in this locality, because many of my best parishioners are kept by Ague, from church; besides it makes men cross, peevish and unsocial and any medicine which will cure such ills, should have the benefit of the clergy. I know Kress Fever Tonic will cure, because I tried it myself and have seen it tried, and I gladly do what I can to introduce so reliable a medicine to my friends." Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Sad Story.

A little boy having heard a beautiful story about a little boy and a hatchet, and how, because the little boy would'nt tell a lie, he, in time, got to be President of the United States, was very much impressed by it. Now it so happened that on the last day March he was just ten years old, and his father asked him what he would like to have for a birthday present. Very naturally the boys answer was, "a little hatchet, if you please, papa."

The father bought him a little hatchet that very day, and the boy was so delighted that he actually took it to bed with him.

Early next morning he got up dressed himself, took his little hatchet, and went into the garden. There, as luck would have it, the first thing that caught his eye, was his father's favorite cherry tree. "My eyes!" exclaimed the little boy to himself, what a time my father would make if I were to cut that tree!" It was a wicked thought, for it led him into temtation There was the tree—tall, straight and fair,—standing invitingly before him—just the thing for a sharp little hatchet. And there was the hatchet, strong and sharp, just the thing for a favorite cherry tree. In another instance the swift strokes of an axe was heard in the still morning air, and, before long, a small boy was seen running toward the house. His father met him at the door.

"My boy, what noise was that I heard just now? Surely you have not been at my cherry tree!"

The boy stood proudly before him, but with down cast eyes and flushed checks.

"Father, I cannot tell a lie. That cherry tree is—

"Say no more," said the father, extending his arms. "You have done worng my son; and that was my favorite tree; but you have spoken the truth. I forgive you. Better to—

This was too much. The boy rushed into his father's arms.

"Father;" he whispered, "April fool! I haven't touched the cherry tree, but I 'most chopped the apple stump to pieces."

"You young rascal, you!" cried the father, "do you mean to say you have not chopped my cherry tree? April fool your old father, will you? Take off your coat, sir."

With a suppressed sob the little boy obeyed. Then shutting his eye, he felt his father's hand descend upon his shrinking form.

"My son," said the father, solemnly, as he stroked the little shoulder, "its the first of April. Go thy way."

An Hour in a Detroit Police Court.

Margaret Frabam why is this thus ask His Honor, as an aged woman stood at the bar.

I couldn't help it sir, she sadly said, folding her hands, and dropping her eyes.

I see gray hairs, wrinkles of age, and signs that you are rapidly drifting into the grave, he continued,' and yet you get drunk and hurrah for General Jackson, and rouse the neighbors from their beds,'

' Pleas sir, it was a small drunk, she explained.

And yet you have been here before, and I have let mercy overpower justice. I am ashamed Margaret, to to think in this nineteenth century of civilization, a woman forty years old should be brought in here charged with drunkenness.

I'll do better sir.'

I hope so, Margaret, I hope you will dash the cup from you and take a solemn vow never drink anything stronger than river water.

I will, sir.'

And though the bloom of youth may not return to your cheeks, again, you will feal younger in spirit, and life will seem to you like a grand picnic at Belle Isle with frosted cake piled up ten feet high. One farther remark and I am done—I shall send you up for ninty days.

She desired to appeal to a higher court. Bijah led her awry and told her that her friends cou'd not get her out on a writ of habeous corpus any time they wanted to.

A sweet voice singing, broke the silence of the court. It was a female voice, and in low, sad tones it sang the plaintive melody:

> Hickory, decker dock,
> The mouse ran up the clock;
> And jack fell down and broke his crown
> Ten thou sand miles awry.

T'is the voice of the broken hearted Jane Mooney, said Bijah, and he went in and led her out.

Mrs. Mooney, is it true that you were overcome by the spiritual influence of fermented liquor acting upon your nervous system? inquiring His Honor.

It wasn't she said. It is true that she had just got up from the supper table and was going around the corner to see about a new dress. when an officer captured her and made the base charge.

The officer had his say, to the effort that Mrs. Mooney was as drunk as a Boston Alderman at a clam bake but he acknowledged that it was her first offence, and that perhaps she could have reached home if let alone.

I shall suspend sentence this time, said His Honor, but don't think for a moment, Mrs. Mooney, that you have bluffed this Court. The doubt is in your favor, and thus I let you go, repeat the offence, and the equinoctial games of autumn won't have a chance to ruin any bonnets for you.

They won't eh? she sneered elevating her eyebrows and breathing hard but Bijah whispered to her that it was dangerous to trifle with justice, and that she had better rush madly toward the pure air of liberty.

More Singing

As the door opened there was a sound of shuffling, and a voice sang.

> Oh! siter. what did mother say,
> when she went down to Put-in-Bay.
> She told me always to be good,
> And never, never run away."

Was that you, James Williams? asked His Honor, as the prisoner came out.

It was—po you worst, oh! cruel executioner! cried James,

And were you drunk?"

Drunk I was, and now drive the poisoned dagger deep into the aching breast.

And you havn't fully recovered yet?

James stood back, and waiving his long right arm to and fro he said.

> They come around me here and say
> My days of life is o'er—
> That I shal mount my noble steed
> And lead my band no more.

They come and—

I want to know whether you are guilty or not guilty, broke in the Judge

If I had me brave retainers here I should say no, I am thy victim, and I answer that were drunk. Drunk! Aye! the fumes of that accursed wine still float through me weary brains, and I see strange sights before me eyes,

You don't see any thing that looks like the House of corrections, do you? ask the Court.

I see a bastile crowded with innocent victims, who cry to me for re-ven-ge! answered James.

Well, in about an hour you'll hear some one crying out, mush! to you for I'm going to give you a month in that bastile.

The fates do mock me now, but I shall trample on them yet, and listen ye know the call, Bijah I shall spit upon the sod which covers thee.

Don't threaten me, or ill have you arrested for arson! said Bijah as he led the prisoner away, and he returned with a vary red face and said he'd give fifty dollars to catch any one spitting on his grave.—Free Press.

A Wisconsin paper mentions as a remarkable circumstance, that a certain man out there "has positively seen a ghost riding a yellow horse along the turnpike and flourishing a wagon-stake." This does seem to me to be a little out of the common run of things, but it is not as marvelous as it might be. How very much more extraordinary it would have been if that man in Wisconsin had seen a yellow wagon-stake riding along the turnpike on a ghost and flourishing a horse!—And even more odd it would have been if he had seen the turnpike riding a horse along a yellow ghost and flourishing a wagon-stake; while I should have been painfully surprised if he had seen a horse riding a wagon-stake along a yellow ghost and flourishing a turn-pike; or a yellow turnpike riding a ghost along a stake and flourishing a horse and wagon; or—but any of these, I think, would have been sufficiently sensational to have amazed even that man in Wisconsin—Max Adeler.

Are we Living too Fast.

In the "Christian at Work" the editor writes upon "A Healthy Stagnation." He says we Americans have been living too fast, and thus continues:

We are living too fast to-day. We think, as a people, too much of money and too little of the cultivation and development of a higer life—a life which shall give impetus to the noblest impulses of the soul, which shall give us a more truly Christian home life, which shall give us a better basis to society, which shall find time for resting from the ceaseless whirl and restlessness of business. As a rule, the wealthy business man of to-day does not enjoy life. He carries business with him everywhere. He takes it home; he sleeps with it; he thinks of it as he rides out; and when Sunday comes, he takes it with him to church, and dreams of it in his pew dur the sermon.

We must have a change from all this. There are other panics yet to follow if we do not cease this crazy pursuit of money. We are glad to know that there is a healthy reaction from the wild and foolish and wicked manner in which so much of the business of the country has been conducted, and we trust it will continue. Better that business should droop a little; better that steamers and ships should rest a little at the wharfs, that we may scrape the barnacles off; better that man should have an opportunity for knowing his neighbor; better that he should know more and think more upon the country to which he is going. We have brought nothing with us into this world, and it is certain we can take nothing away with us. Let us think of this more; let us estimate the world not as worth nothing, but let us estimate it at its true worth and act and live accordingly.

Buffalo Bill as a Scout.

A correspondent of the World accompanying Captin Mills' expedition into the Indian country, writes as follows about a well known character;

Buffalo Bill, who is par excellence the guide of the prairies, accompanies the expedition and if he has anything like a chance will add greater lustre to his already brilliant reputation as an Indian fighter. A man that can shoot a buffalo in the eye when riding a full gallop is apt to prove a rather unpleasant fellow for the Indians in a charge. This Cody has done on more than one occasion. Speaking of Bill reminds me of an amusing occurrence that took place in the hotel in North Platte, the other day. William was calmly engaged in eating his dinner at one end of the dining-table when a respectable-looking old gentleman, who had evidently stoped over a day to have a good look at the frontier town, came in and sat down at the other end. His eyes for a moment were fixed on the scout, whom he seemed examine with critical interest. Well, well remarked the elderly party to himself, "so that's Buffalo Bill. He's not the sort of looking man I expected to see at all. I thought he must be an awfully rough looking man. Has an intelligent, refined face, too; but I dont like that long hair; it looks to much like Beecher!" But that didn't induce Bill to cut off the flowing locks. He simply contented himself with tucking them under the crown of his hat.

The best firework for a baby—rocket.

A Romantic Marriage.

The Norwegian papers are full of a marriage recently celebrated between an English gentleman and a Gypsy girl bearing the name of Esmeralda.—The gentleman is Mr. Hurbert Smith, described as a landowner in Shropshier, and who, some time ago, made himself known in literature by a clever book entitled "Tent Life with the Gypsies in Norway,' dedicated to King Charles XV. of Sweden and Norway. Mr. Smith has spent several summers in Norway with a following of Gypsies wandering on foot and over valleys and over mountains, carrying tents and provision with them on the back of donkeys, and leading a most original vagabond life. Esmeralda was born on his estate in Shropshire,—as, the Norwegian papers state, very handsome, a perf ct type of the peculiar beauty of her race, of the sweetest temper, and richly gifted from the hands of nature. The last months she has passed in a Norwegian family taking lessons in languages and music and has astonished all the wonderful progress she has made in so short a time, not less than by her gentle manners. The marriage was a civil one being preformed by the Justice of the Peace but the rector of the parish attended the ceremony, and, as he had the opportunity of knowing the bride during her stay in the neighborhood, made a much applauded speech in her honor. The Norwegian gypsies friend, Mr. Eilert Sundt, who has devoted the past part of his life to the pulling down of the barries erected by prejudice and traditional superstition between the gypsies and the rest of the community, and who has converted not a few of the nomadizing tribe to the sedentment and industrious life, had been invited to the marriage, which had his full approval, but was prevented at the last moment for attending.—Several nobilities from Christeinia mentioned among the guests, and the marriage was the occasion for numerous expressions of sympathy, especially from ladies who had made the acquaintance of the bride. After the solemnity the newly-married couple left to spend their honeymoon in the venerable beechforest near Laurvig, the only one of the kind in Norway, affording ample commodities for the tent life with gypsies.

This is the way the Books balance up under Democratic and Republican administration of state affairs in this state

Net Republican expences 1873	$1,475,790.03
Net Democratic expences 1872	$713,083.12
Republican excess	$762,006.91

And yet we are assured that the present state officers are "economical, honest and intelligent," and that they have looked after the interest of the state with unusual zeal and deligence. It would seem so from these figures.

The Democratic victory in Wyoming Territory, where the majority is double what it was the last election, and the defeat of Judge Poland in Vermont, are significant signs of the times. The Democratic ball which has rolled over New Hampshire, Connecticut, Oregon North Carolina and Tennessee, is still in motion. It is about to enter the greater fields of Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and New York.—There is an unvarying sameness in the election returns this year that always presages a general political revolution.

Old Bob Toombs is still making a fool of himself. He declares eternal hostility to the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, and is for Grant for the third term. Toombs was one of the active men in getting the South into trouble, and his proposition for getting it out now shows that he has not gathered wisdom with age. His capacity for harm now is small, otherwise the people of the south might regret that he hadn't gon to his tomb, at the end of the war in which he struggled so manfully to throw away his life only to be thwarted by fate.

Of all the whitewashers in Congress Poland, the defeated candidate for reelection, stood first. In this line he was an artist of no inconsiderable merit ranking as far above the daub as Hosmon does above Ream as a sculptor.—But the good people of Vermont do not appreciate the artistic qualities of Poland, and on Tuesday put their condemnation upon him by retiring him to private life along with salary grabbers, credit mobilier robbers, and District of Columbia thieves. A good many other fellows, who are tarred with the same stick, will go the same way in October and November.

Sad Story.

A little boy having heard a beautiful story about a little boy and a hatchet, and how, because the little boy would'nt tell a lie, he, in time, got to be President of the United States, was very much impressed by it. Now it so happened that on the last day March he was just ten years old, and his father asked him what he would like to have for a birthday present. Very naturally the boys answer was, "a little hatchet, if you please, papa."

The father bought him a little hatchet that very day, and the boy was so delighted that he actually took it to bed with him.

Early next morning he got up dressed himself, took his little hatchet, and went into the garden. There, as luck would have it, the first thing that caught his eye, was his father's favorite cherry tree. "My eyes!" exclaimed the little boy to himself, what a time my father would make if I were to cut that tree!" It was a wicked thought, for it led him into temtation There was the tree—tall, straight and fair,—standing invitingly before him —just the thing for a sharp little hatchet. And there was the hatchet, strong and sharp, just the thing for a favorite cherry tree. In another instance the swift strokes of an axe was heard in the still morning air, and, before long, a small boy was seen running toward the house. His father met him at the door.

"My boy, what noise was that I heard just now? Surely you have not been at my cherry tree!"

The boy stood proudly before him, but with down cast eyes and flushed cheeks.

"Father, I cannot tell a lie. That cherry tree is—

"Say no more," said the father, extending his arms. "You have done worng my son; and that was my favorite tree; but you have spoken the truth. I forgive you. Better to—

This was too much. The boy rushed into his father's arms.

"Father;" he whispered, "April fool! I haven't touched the cherry tree, but I 'most chopped the apple stump to pieces."

"You young rascal, you!" cried the father, "do you mean to say you have not chopped my cherry tree? April fool your old father, will you? Take off your coat, sir."

With a suppressed sob the little boy obeyed. Then shutting his eye, he felt his father's hand descend upon his shrinking form.

"My son," said the father, solemnly, as he stroked the little shoulder, "its the first of April. Go thy way."

Butler thinks after all he will take a hand in the fight, and is preparing to go for his enemies. Even B. F. thinks this is a mighty good year in which to get even.

Tyner is as dum as an oyster. He played his game to suit himself at Peru and two years hence he hopes to fall into succession without any trouble. Probably, and perhaps not.

It is announced that Beecer is already making arrangements for his fall and winter lectures. What a mighty telling hit he could make by relating that "ankle scene." How it would draw.

An Hour in a Detroit Police Court.

Margaret Fraham why is this thus ask His Honor, as an aged woman stood at the bar.

I couldn't help it sir, she sadly said, folding her hands, and dropping her eyes.

See gray hairs, wrinkles of age, and signs that you are slowly drifting into the grave, he continued,' and yet you get drunk and hurrah for General Jackson, and rouse the neighbors from their beds,'

Pleas sir, it was a small drunk, she explained.

And yet you have been here before, and I have let mercy overpower justice, I am ashamed Margaret, to to think in this nine eenth century of civilization, a woman forty years old should be brought in here charged with drunkenness'.

I'll do better sir.'

I hope so, Margaret, I hope you will dash the cup from you and take a solemn vow never drink anything stronger than river water.

I will, sir.'

And though the bloom of youth may not return to your cheeks, aga n, you will feel younger in spirit, and life will seem to you like a grand picnic at Belle Isle with frosted cake piled up ten feet high. One further remark and I am done—I shall send you up for ninty days.

She desired to appeal to a higher court Bijah led her awry and told her that her friends cou'd not get her out on a writ of habeous corpus any time they wanted to.

A sweet voice singing, broke the silence of the court. It was a female voice, and in low, sad tones it sang the plaintive melody:

Hickory, decker dock,
The mouse ran up the clock:
And jack fell down and broke his crown
Ten thousand miles away.

T'is the voice of the broken hearted Jane Mooney, said Bijah, and he went in and led her out.

Mrs. Mooney, is it true that you were overcome by the spiritual influence of fermented liquor acting upon your nervous system? inquiring His Honor.

It wasn't she said. It is true that she had just got up from the supper table and was going around the corner to see about a new dress. when an officer captured her and made the base charge.

The officer had his say, to the effect that Mis Mooney was as drunk as a Boston Alderman at a clam bake but he acknowledged that it was her first offence, and that perhaps she could have reached home if let alone.

I shall suspend sentence this time, said His Honor, but don't think for a moment, Mrs. Mooney, that you have bluffed this Court. The doubt is in your favor, and thus I let you go, repeat the offenes, and the equinoctial games of autumn won't have a chance to ruin any bonnets for you.

They won't eh? she succered elevating her eyebrows and breathing hard but Bijah whispered to her that it was dangerous to trifle with justice, and that she had better rush madly toward the pure air of liberty.

More Singing

As the door opened there was a sound of shuffling, and a voice sang:

Oh! siter. what did mother say,
when she went down to Put-in-Bay.
She told me always to be good,
And never, never run away."

Was that you, James Williams? asked His Honor, as the prisoner came out.

It was—po you worst, oh! cruel executioner! cried James.

And were you drunk?"

Drunk I was, and now drive the poisoned dagger deep into the aching breast.

And you havn't fully recovered yet? James stood back, and waiving his long right arm to and fro he said.

They come around me here and say
My days of life is o're—
That I shal mount my noble steed
And lead my band no more,

They come and—

I want to know whether you are guilty or not guilty, broke in the Judge

If I had me brave retainers here I should say no, I am thy victim, and I answer that were drunk. Drunk! Aye! the fumes of that accursed wine still float through me weary brains, and I see strange sights before me eyes.

You don't see any thing that looks like the House of corrections, do you? ask the Court.

I see a basile crowded with innocent victims, who cry to me for re-ven-ge! answered James.

Well, in about an hour you'll hear some one crying out, mush! to you for I'm going to give you a month in that bastile.

The fates do mock me now, but I shall trample on them yet, and listen ye know the cull, Bijah I shall spit upon the sod which covers thee.

Don't threaten me, or ill have you arrested for arson' said Bijah as he led the prisoner away, and he returned with a vary red face and said he'd give fifty dollars to catch any one spitting on his grave.—Free Press.

A Wisconsin paper mentions as a remarkable circumstance that a certain man out there "has positively seen a ghost riding a yellow horse along the turnpike and flourishing a wagon-stake." This does seem to me to be a little out of the common run of things, but it is not as marvelous as it might be. How very much more extraordinary it would have been if that man in Wisconsin had seen a yellow wagon-stake riding along the turnpike on a ghost and flourishing a horse!—And even more odd it would have been if he had seen the turnpike riding a horse along a yellow ghost and flourishing a wagon-stake; while I should have been painfully surprised if he had seen a horse riding a wagon-stake along a yellow ghost and flourishing a turn-pike; or a yellow turnpike riding a ghost along a stake and flourishing a horse and wagon; or—but any of these, I think, would have been sufficiently sensational to have amazed even that man in Wisconsin—Max Adeler.

Are we Living too Fast.

In the "Christian at Work" the editor writes upon "A Healthy Stagnation." He says we Americans have been living too fast, and thus continues:

We are living too fast to-day. We think, as a people, too much of money and too little of the cultivation and development of a higer life—a life which shall give inpetus to the noblest impulses of the soul, which shall give us a more truly Christian home life, which shall give us a better basis to society, which shall find time for resting from the ceaseless whirl and restlessness of business. As a rule, the wealthy business man of to-day does not enjoy life: He carries business with him everywhere. He takes it home; he sleeps with it; he thinks of it as he rides out; and when Sunday comes, he takes it with him to church and dreams of it in his nap during the sermon.

We must have a change from all this. There are other panics yet to follow if we do not cease this crazy pursuit of money. We are glad to know that there is a healthy reaction from the wild and foolish and wicked manner in which so much of the business of the country has been conducted, and we trust it will continue. Better that business should droop a little; better that steamers and ships should rest a little at the wharfs, that we may scrape the barnacles off; better that man should have an opportunity for knowing his neighbor; better that he should know more and think more upon the country to which he is going. We have brought nothing with us into this world, and it is certain we can take nothing away with us. Let us think of this more; let us estimate the world not as worth nothing, but let us estimate it at its true worth, and act and live accordingly.

Buffalo Bill as a Scout.

A correspondent of the World accompanying Captin Mills' expedition into the Indian country, writes as follows about a well known character;

Buffalo Bill, who is par excellence the guide of the prairies, accompanies the expedition and if he has anything like a chance will add greater lustre to his already brilliant reputation as an Indian fighter. A man that can shoot a buffalo in the eye when riding a full gallop is apt to prove a rather unpleasant fellow for the Indians in a charge. This Cody has done on more than one occasion. Speaking of Bill reminds me of an amusing occurrence that took place in the hotel in North Platte, the other day. William was calmly engaged in eating his dinner at one end of the dining-table when a respectable-looking old gentleman, who had evidently stoped over a day to have a good look at the frontier town, came in and sat down at the other end. His eyes for a moment were fixed on the scout, whom he seemed examine with critical interest. Well, well remarked the elderly party to himself, "so that's Buffalo Bill. He's not the sort of looking man I expected to see at all. I thought he must be an awfully rough looking man. Has an intelligent, refined face, too; but I dont like that long hair; it looks to much like Beecher!" But that didn't induce Bill to cut off the flowing locks. He simply contented himself with tucking them under the crown of his hat.

A Romantic Marriage.

The Norweigan papers are full of a marriage recently celebrated between an English gentleman and a Gypsy girl bearing the name of Esmeralda.—The gentleman is Mr. Hurbert Smith, described as a landowner in Shropshier, and who, some time ago, made himself known in literature by a clever book entitled "Tent Life with the Gypsies in Norway,' dedicated to King Charles XV. of Sweden and Norway. Mr. Smith has spent several summers in Norway with a following of Gypsies wandering on foot and over valleys and over mountains, carrying tents and provision with them on the back of donkeys, and leading a most original vagabond life. Esmeralda was born on his estate in Shropshire,—as, the Norwegian papers state, very handsome, a perfect type of the peculiar beauty of her race, of the sweetest temper, and richly gifted from the hands of nature. The last months she has passed in a Norwegian family taking lessons in languages and music and has astonished all the wonderful progress she has made in so short a time, not less than by her gentle manners. The marriage was a civil one being preformed by the Justice of the Peace but the rector of the parish attended the ceremony, and, as he had the opportunity of knowing the bride during her stay in the neighborhood, made a much applauded speech in her honor. The Norwegian gypsies friend. Mr. Eilert Sundt, who has devoted the past part of his life to the pulling down of the barries erected by prejudice and traditional superstition between the gypsies and the rest of the community, and who has converted not a few of the nomadizing tribe to the setlement and industrious life, had been invited to the marriage, which had his full approval, but was prevented at the last moment for attending.—Several nobilities from Christeiania mentioned among the guests, and the marriage was the occasion for numerous expressions of sympathy, especially from ladies who had made the acquaintance of the bride. After the solemnity the newly-married couple left to spend their honeymoon in the venerable beech forest near Laurvig, the only one of the kind in Norway, affording ample commodities for the tent life with gypsies.

This is the way the books balance up under Democratic and Republican administration of state affairs in this state

Net Republican expences 1873	$1,475,790.03
Net Democratic expences 1872	$713,085.12
Republican excess	$762,006.91

And yet we are assured that the present state officers are "economical, honest and intelligent," and that they have looked after the interest of the state with unusual zeal and deligence. It would seem so from these figures.

The Democratic victory in Wyoming Territory, where the majority is double what it was the last election, and the defeat of Judge Poland in Vermont, are significant signs of the times. The Democratic ball which has rolled over New Hampshire, Connecticut, Oregon North Carolina and Tennessee, is still in motion It is about to enter the greater fields of Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and New York.—There is an unvarying sameness in the election returns this year that always presages a general political revolution.

Old Bob Toombs is still making a fool of himself. He declares eternal hostility to the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, and is for Grant for the third term. Toombs was one of the active men in getting the South into trouble, and his proposition for getting it out now shows that he has not gathered wisdom with age. His capacity for harm now is small, otherwise the people of the South might regret that he hadn't gon to his tomb at the end of the war in which he struggled so manfully to throw away his life only to be thwarted by fate.

Of all the whitewashers in Congress Poland, the defeated candidate for reelection, stood first. In this line he was an artist of no inconsiderable merit ranking as far above the daub as Hosrem does above Ream as a sculptor.—But the good people of Vermont didn't appreciate the artistic qualities of Poland, and on Tuesday put their condemnation upon him by retiring him to private life along with salary grabbers, credit mobilier robbers, and District of Columbia thieves. A good many other fellows, who are tarred with the same stick, will go the same way in October and November.

The Southern Troubles—Action of the National Authorities.

On the 2d inst. President Grant addressed the following letter to Secretary Belknap:

LONG BRANCH, Sept. 2, 1874.

Gen. W. W. Belknap, Secretary of War:

Recent atrocities in the South, particularly in Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina, show disregard for law, civil rights, and personal protection that ought not to be tolerated in any civilized Government. It looks as if, unless speedily checked, matters must become worse, until life and property there will receive no protection from the local authorities until such authority becomes powerless. Under such circumstances, it is the duty of the Government to give all aid for the protection of life and civil rights legally authorized. To this end, I wish you would consult with the Attorney-General, who is well informed as to the outrages already committed, and the localities where the greatest danger lies, and so order the troops as to be available in case of necessity. All proceedings for the protection of the South will be under the Law Department of the Government, and will be directed by the Attorney-General, in accordance with the provisions of the Enforcement act. No instructions need, therefore, be given the troops ordered into the Southern States except as they may be transmitted from time to time on advice from the Attorney-General, or as circumstances may determine hereafter.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

On the 3d inst. Attorney-General Williams issued instructions to all United States Marshals and Attorneys in the South to the effect that they shall proceed with all possible energy to detect, expose, arrest, and punish the perpetrators of all Ku-Klux outrages, giving them the privilege of calling upon any United States troops in the vicinity to assist them whenever it may be necessary. They are cautioned not to interfere in any way with any political or party action not in violation of law, but to protect all classes in the free exercise of the elective franchise.

The Black Hills Gold District.

Gen. Custer's expedition has returned. The glowing accounts of the beauty and the agricultural and mineral resources of the Black Hills country have attracted universal attention to that hitherto unknown section of the Union. Gen. Custer's dispatches, Gen. Forsyth's diary, and the reports of correspondents, all agree as to the facts above stated.

In his expedition, Gen. Custer took his line southwest from Fort Lincoln till he struck the Little Missouri, and thence, crossing over to the North Fork of the Cheyenne, entered the Black Hills from the northwest; and, passing through them, sent several parties to the South Fork of the Cheyenne. These two streams seem to embrace the entire Black Hills district. From the South Fork he turned northeast to Harney's Peak, in the vicinity of which gold was found in paying quantities, even with the superficial prospecting the miners were able to give the country. Hence he pursued his way north to Bear Butte, and, exploring an important section of the Little Missouri, he returned eastward through Hart River valley to Fort Lincoln.

With our present means of transit, the Black Hills can be more easily reached than any of our other mining districts. Bismarck and Yankton, Dak., North Platte, Neb., and Cheyenne, Wyo., are all accessible by rail; and the distance from each to Harney's Peak is not very different.

Of course the best and cheapest route to reach the mines will depend on the location of the adventurer at the time of starting. From all this section, and eastward, the most direct and the cheapest route, and in all respects the best, is by Yankton. The Bad Lands must be crossed from Bismarck; and from the Union Pacific railway northward, the country is by no means inviting. From Brule City the route is up the Valley of the White Earth, where an abundance of pasturage, wood, and water can be found. Full outfits can be purchased at Sioux City and Yankton on reasonable terms. Were it not for the injunctions the Sioux, and the Government as well, put upon emigrants, the mines could now be reached from Chicago in from seven to ten days at most.

As the Government is responsible for the excitement sure to follow these important discoveries, an effort should be made as soon as possible to extinguish the Indian title, not only to the Black Hills, but also to the Big Horn Mountains and the adjacent districts.

But, while, in due time, we expect to see a great rush to the Black Hills, we warn our readers that to go now would be not only a hazardous, but a most foolhardy experiment.

The Sioux regard this as sacred territory. They will concentrate their savage bands, and defend it to the death with several thousand warriors. Whoever values his life more than gold will stay away till the Indian title to these lands is extinguished. Any one, no matter how large his party, goes there now at his peril.

The Destruction of the Earth.

Prof. Denton, the well-known geologist, takes no stock in the various popular theories of the inevitable destruction of the earth by burning, freezing, bursting, perpetual darkness, or any one of half a dozen other ways. He says that people who believe that the earth attained its present maturity in less than six thousand years, may not unreasonably suppose that its destruction in some of the ways specified may soon come to pass, since if wonderful a a world had grown to its prime in so short a period of time, a few years more might with reason effect its destruction. But when the story of the mighty past is learned from science, the conclusion is very different. He does not believe in any such quick growth.

Tracing the earth's history in the great book of nature, in the solid rocks, the depths of earth and the mountain summits, he concludes that a hundred thousand years at least "have been spent in bringing man to his present state," that a much longer period will be given to carry humanity to its highest ideal of excellence, and predicts a glorious future which, metaphorically speaking, foreshadows to coming generations "a light brilliant as the sun." That is more cheering, and aids to dispel the gloomy forebodings induced by the prediction of that French astronomer who insists that the moon is badly cracked and liable to come down upon our heads in great jagged fragments some day, and grind everybody to powder while it crushes also through the crust of the earth and lets loose the pent-up fires of the moulten mass within.

Manure as Was Manure.

The following testimony to the virtues of a patent medicine was received by its owner: "Dear Sir—The land composing my farm had hitherto been so poor that a Scotchman could not get a living off it, and so stony that we had to slice our potatoes and plant them edgewise; but, hearing of your manure, I put some on a ten-acre field, surrounded by a rail fence, and in the morning I found that the rock had entirely disappeared, a neat stone wall encircled the fields, and the rails were split into firewood and piled up systematically in my back yard."

Sap of Plants.

A German professor says that the sap of trees and plants which live through winter do not freeze. He says that, though it is true water, as we generally see and understand it, and freezes at thirty-two degrees, it does not do so when its particles are finely divided. Tropical plants have large cells, and these are the ones in which the sap freezes; but in plants with very small cells, in which the liquid particles are finely divided, there is no freezing of the liquids until after the structure has received injury of some sort.

BORERS, if allowed to remain in the holes which they have made, will destroy the tree; they should be cut out or punched to death with a wire thrust in the holes; and in future kept out by tying broad strips of tarred paper around the lower part of the stems of the trees, removing some of the earth for this purpose.

Hard Work for Water.

The sperm-whaling voyages were the most protracted and tedious. Some forty years ago, an incident transpired on board a sperm whale-ship, while cruising about the equator, in the Pacific, which was amusingly illustrative of the tact and energy of her master in managing affairs, after wearing away nearly a whole season with indifferent success. Near the close of the cruise, the supply of fresh water had become alarmingly short for the allotted time before returning to port. This was a source of regret, with both officers and men, as it was hoped they could fill the ship before the season terminated; and the captain would not have listened for a moment to the proposition to put the crew on a short allowance, had it been suggested. He, however, ordered a drinking-cup made, so as to be easily secured, to, or detached from, the royal mast head. Having placed it in its exalted position, all hands were mustered, and given to understand that they would have their regular allowance of tea and coffee served night and morning; but when any one (including himself) desired to quench his thirst during the day, he must go aloft, get the dringing cup, bring it on deck, obtain and drink the water (without spilling a drop), then take it back and place it at the mast-head again. The narrator of this episode jocosely remarked that, "It was wonderful to observe what a 'persuader' against too much drinking was the exercise of 'shinning' to the royal truck twice, for a pot of water." And, by this means, the supply held out; and before the end of the cruise, they improved the timely opportunity of filling every empty cask with oil, and trimmed their sails for the homeward passage.—Scammon's Marine Mammals.

Kneading Bread Objectionable.

A medical correspondent of the Boston Globe puts forward the theory that the present method of bread-making is mainly instrumental in communicating many diseases and in producing many deleterious effects which do not assume the form of positive disease. He says:

That impurities of the blood are worked off through the skin is a fact so well recognized that specific diseases are treated by this means, and it is even proposed to eliminate from the system the virus of hydrophobia by a process of sweating. The pores of the hands are more open than those of many other parts of the body. The constant perspiration of the hand in warm weather, even when unexercised, will remind every one of this fact. When the hand is exercised, it perspires freely. The present process of kneading bread is decidedly objectionable at any time, but in constant flow it is an undoubted means of introducing into the most universal article of diet the impurities and, too frequently, the seeds of positive disease from the body of the person making the bread. How many persons can eat bread without so much as knowing who makes it, or whether the maker is infected with disease or not? It is not a pleasant consideration, but an important one. In the hard exercise of kneading bread and pastry, perspiration, and all of those impurities of which it is designed to free the system, are constantly exuding from the skin and are mixed with the bread. It is no security that the hand is externally clean. The cleaner the skin the freer the perspiration. What ill-effects result and what diseases are communicated in this way, can be learned only by experiment and close observation. Let us hope it will be well considered, and that some improvement may be devised upon this long-established but objectionable method of preparing the commonest article of food.

The Sharp Man.

The sharp man iz mistaken for the wize one, but he iz just az different from a wize one az he iz from an honest one.

He trusts tew his cunning for success, and this is the next thing tew being a rogue.

The sharp man iz like a razor—generally too sharp for anything but a shave.

These men are not to be trusted—they are so constituted that they must cheat somebody, and, rather than be idle or lose a good job, they will pitch into their best friends.

They are not exactly outkasts, but liv clos on the borders of criminality, and are liable tew step over at enny time.

It iz but a step from cunning to rascality and it iz a short step that is alwuz invitin tew take.

Sharp men have but phew friends, and seldum a confident. They learn to fear treachery by studyin their own nature.

They are alwuz bizzy, but like the hornet, want a heap of sharp watching.

The sharp man iz alwuz a vain one. He prides himself upon his cunning, and had rather do a shrewd thing than a kind one.—Josh Billings.

The Life of Man.

How graphically the varied aspects of the leaf picture the various seasons of man's life. The tenderness of its budding and blooming in spring, when that rich golden green glints on it that comes only once a year, represents the bright beauty and innocence of youth, when every sunrise brings its fresh glad hopes, and every night its holy trustful calm. The dark greenness and lush vigor of the summer season portray the strength and self-reliance of manhood; while its fading hue on the trees, and its rustling heaps on the grond, typify the decay and feebleness of old age, and that strange passing away which is the doom of every mortal. The autumn leaf is gorgeous in color, but it lacks that balmy scent and dewy freshness of hopeful spring; and life is rich and bright in its meridian splendor; deep are the hues of maturity, and noble is the beauty of success; but who would give it for all the tender sweetness of life's morning hours? Happy they who keep the child's heart warm and soft over the sad experiences of old age, whose life declines as these last October days go out with the rich tints of autumn and the blue sunny skies of June!

THEY are so busy in Kansas that they spell it 11worth.

The Danger from Lightning.

Danger from lightning, experience shows, is less in a crowded town than in a village or in the open country, and naturally the most elevated structures are the most liable to be struck. Fuller, indeed, in his "Church History," asserts that there scarcely ever existed a great abbey in England which had not been, at one time or another, wholly or partially destroyed by lightning, and his citations, taken in comparison with our own times, are certainly remarkable. In all cases it is the spire, the tower or the dome which has been mutilated. As to ordinary habitations, all sorts of theories are in vogue on the subject of danger and safety. Some rely on their glass in the windows, and some on their register stoves; others recommend stone roofs instead of slate; and others tell timid people that they must live in a hollow. It is contended on this side that there should be the least possible admixture of metal in the combination of an inhabited structure; and on that, that all the bells beneath the roof be kept continually ringing just as, in obedience to an old superstition, cannons are fired at sea. The mass of evidence on this topic point, however, to the one conclusion already suggested, that a good lightning conductor is the solitary safeguard, but that unless good, is worse that none.

Painted Dogs.

A curious practice exists among certain tribes of the South American Indians, of painting their dogs. The appearance of these animals, as might be assumed, is most particular, and a stranger ignorant of the customs of the people, would be at a lost to account for the peculiarity of their apppearance. They are to be seen of all colors—yellow, blue, green and scarlet; while others are mottled with every variety of tint. A South American traveler, who recently accompanied a party of natives on a tapir hunt, says that it is the custom among many of the tribes of the South American Indians to dye, not only their own bodies, but the hairy coats of their dogs with brilliant colors obtained from vegetable juice such as huitic, yellow roca and indigo. The light gray, often white, hair of these animals favors the staining process, and the effect pleases the eye of their savage masters, but, to a stranger the effect is fantastical. "I could not," he says, "restrain my laughter when I first scanned the curs in their fancitul coats; picture to yourself a pack of scarlet, orange and purple dogs."

For Cleansing the Hair and Scalp.

A lady writes to the Western Rural: "In the warm days of summer, with dust and perspiration, the heads of people, especially of laborers and children get very dirty, and common washing will not remove this.

"Here is a receipe, given me by a noted lecturer on hygiene, which I am sure will please all who use it: 'In a pint bottle put a spoonful of olive oil and add two ounces of best spirits of ammonia or hartshorn; shake. Then mix with three ounces of alcohol and, when thoroughly mixed, fill the bottle with soft water. Remember to put in the order named, or you will have "stuff" and no chemical union at all.'

"To apply, take a spoonful or two of this with a little warm water; dip a sponge or rag in and wet the scalp thoroughly; now rinse off in a plenty of warm water, and you will be surprised at the amount of dirt, though you may have thought your head perfectly clean.

"For the heads of young infants it is just the thing, as it instantly removes the dirty scurf without pain or trouble. It should be rather weaker for a babe than for an adult."

Met His Fate.

A New Orleans Judge, riding in the cars recently, from a single glance at the countenance of a lady by his side imagined he knew her, and ventured to remark that the day was pleasant. She only answered:

"Yes."

"Why do you wear a veil?"

"Lest I attract attention."

"It is the province of gentlemen to admire," replied the gallant man of law.

"Not when they are married."

"But I am not."

"Indeed!"

"Oh, no; I'm a bachelor."

The lady quietly removed her veil, disclosing to the astonished magistrate the face of his mother-in-law.

He has been a raving maniac ever since.

A Boy's Wit.

A Scotch lad delivering milk for a dairy in the suburbs was stoped in his round of calls by two detectives, who asked him for whom he delivered the milk. The boy, on telling them, was asked if his employers put anything in the milk. "On ay," was the innocent answer; and the officers, thinking they had a clear case, each offered the boy a penny if he would tell them what was put in it. "Ah," said the boy with a grin, ye wadna gie's the penny, though I tell't ye!" "Oh, yes, we will," returned the officers. "Gies't then," said the little fellow, doubtfully. The pence were then handed over, with the question, "Now, what do you put in the milk?" "Why," said the boy, with a cunning look, "I pit the measure in every time I tak' ony oot!"

A PRIEST who was examining a confirmation class in the South of Ireland, asked the question, "What is the sacrament of matrimony?" A little girl at the head of the class answered, "'Tis the state of torment into which souls enter to prepare for another and better world." "Being," said the priest, "the answer for purgatory." "Put her down," says the curate—" put her down to the fut of the class." "Leave her alone," said the priest; "for anything you or I know to the contrary, she may be parfectly right."

JOHNNY'S "STATEMENT."—The Cincinnati Times relates the following: "'Papa, do you think Beech—?' 'Hush, Johnny.' 'But, papa, don't you think Beech—' 'Didn't you hear me tell you to stop your noise, sir? I won't have you talking about these things. Go in and get your face washed.' And Johnny, with tears in his eyes, wants to know why papa won't tell him whether beechnuts are ripe."

FARM AND GARDEN.

IF farmers would only be united and learn to study, and study to learn, they would become a power to rule the world. He who puts a good agricultural book or paper in the hands of his neighbor, and awakens thought in his mind, causing him to rise to a knowledge of his duties, is a public and private benefactor.

THERE is no better time to thresh grain than when it is hauled from the field, but on most farms this plan is hardly practicable. As soon as sufficiently cured, pack away in the barn or in well-formed stacks and let it stand until it is done heading. Save the straw. If there is not room for it in the barn, stack it well and rake the stack down thoroughly so that it will shed well.

IT is not advisable when planting a hedge to sow the seed in the row. It is better to sow them in a nursery bed and raise the plants while the hedge row is in course of breaking and preparation. Then plants of equal vigor can be selected which by transplanting are made to have stronger and more fibrous roots; while if raised in the row from seed there would be a great many weak plants and the hedge would be very irregular.

TO DESTROY MOLES.—Bryan Tyson, Washington City, gives the following method for making pills to destroy moles: Make a stiff dough of corn-meal, mixing with a small quantity of arsenic. Make a hole with a finger in the runways, drop in a lump of dough about the size of a marble, and then cover over with a lump of earth to exclude the light. After the first rain, go over the field again and deposit in all freshly made roads. I once concluded to plant a piece of sandy bottom land in sweet potatoes; but as it was much infested by moles, my success depended on first exterminating them. A few doses of arsenic given in the way described brought the desired result, and it was a very rare circumstance to see the track of a mole in this piece of ground during the entire summer.—Scientific American.

TESTING EGGS.—We will tell you the way in which we and many others try eggs, in some instances by the thousand. After five or more days' incubation choose a sunshiny day; get into a dark place, such as an outhouse without windows, open the door a little to admit a strong ray of light; take the egg in the left hand, and form a telescope with both, the right hand being nearest to the face. Place the eye close to the hand, and look at the sun through the egg. You must not look for any defined form, but simply for that change which betokens the beginning of life. This can be so fully depended upon that many, especially among pheasant-rearers, try the egg from under three hens in this way; by discarding the unfertile ones they put two heats of good eggs under two hens, and supply the third with an entirely fresh nest.—College Gardener.

WATER IN THE HOUSE.—A prominent writer says: "Let nobody be deterred from bringing water in the house by any fears of failure and perplexity. You might just as well stop the circulation of blood in the body because it is subject to derangement, as to refuse the circulation of water in the house because now and then a pipe overflows and your frescoes are ruined. Good workmen will prevent any such accident, but if they cannot, give up your frescoes; do not give up your life-blood. When I see the farm-houses, the dairies, the kitchen, whose only source of supply is the well in the yard or the hogshead at the back door, how life would be lengthened and sweetened if all this heavy and hard and slow water-bringing could be supplanted by a turn of a screw, I wonder that we do not manage to introduce it, somehow, into our marriage contracts. What an increase of vital force would ensue; what a diminished demand for divorce; what a strengthening and up-building of the family bond, if the girl should refuse to marry until there was an inexhaustible supply of water, at least in the kitchen! A house without water-works ought to be considered as incomplete in the country as in the city."

WHAT LIME DOES.—We agree with the American Farmer in the opinion that the chief value of lime as a fertilizer consists in its chemical action upon compounds containing plant food. It says:

"We find from analysis that lime, in some of its combinations, forms a constituent part in nearly all plants, but varying much in quantity in different plants. By direct absorbtion it is necessary to the perfect development of vegetation. Its chief office, however, is in assimilating the properties already in the soil to the plant. Vegetation lives only on digested or decomposed food in the form of liquids and gases. The soil may contain all the constituent elements of the crop intended to be raised, and yet it may not be in a condition to be appropriated. Most soils do contain carbonates, sulphates, and phospates of potassium, sodium and magnesium in combination with silica, in the form of earthly rocks, feldspar, etc., but in such a condition as to absorb only as they are slowly decomposed by exposure to the gases of the atmosphere and the rays of the sun. Many of the manufactured fertilizers make a fair showing by analysis, and contain the elements which should sustain the plant, and yet they may be in such combination as to prove inert, on account of their insolubility. This is one of the beneficial properties of lime. It breaks up these combinations, and forms new compounds which are more soluble, and are thereby made available nourishment. This result of liming is more perceptible on land containing humous or vegetable mold which is converted into plant food."

CARE OF TEAM HORSES.—The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals presents the following concise rules for the care of horses, which will commend themselves to every horseman:

Potatoes or carrots may be given once or twice a week to good advantage.

See that your horse is kept clean, warm and comfortable, with plenty of bedding.

A piece of rock salt should always be left in the manger.

See that the harness is kept soft and clean, particularly the inside of the collar, which ought always to be smooth, as the perspiration, when dry, causes irritation, and is liable to produce galls on the shoulder.

The collar should fit closely, with space enough at the bottom to admit a man's hand. If too large it has the bad effect of drawing the shoulders together.

On no consideration should a team or any work horse be compelled to wear a martingale, as it draws the back down, and prevents him from getting into an easy and natural position.

The check-rain may be used, but only tight enough to keep the head in a natural position, and it should never be wound around the hames.

See that the hames are buckled tight enough at the top to bring the draft-iron near the center of the collar. If too low, it not only interferes with the action of the shoulder, but gives the collar an uneven bearing.

Caution should be taken that the girth is not buckled too tight, particularly on string teams, for when the traces are straightened, it has the tendency to draw the girth against the belly, and distress the horse.

See that the horse is kept well shod, with a good stiff shoe, always calked at toe, and heel on hind feet, as it is there where all the propelling power comes from when heavily loaded.

Keep the feet good and strong, by not allowing them to be cut away too much by the blacksmith.

The best of judgment should be used in loading, taking into consideration the condition of the street, and the distance to be traveled.

Never overload, for by so doing you only distress, strain, and discourage your horse, and do him more injury than you can possibly gain by carrying the load.

When your load is hard to pull, stop often, and give your horse a chance to breathe.

No good driver will ever resort to the cruel practice of whipping or beating his horse. A light whip may be carried, but there is seldom use for it. Much more can be accomplished by kind treatment and good judgment.

Remember the horse is a very intelligent, proud, sensitive, noble animal, the most useful known to man and is deserving of the greatest kindness.

American Incivility.

A writer in Scribner's says: "It is not unjust to declare that there is in America to-day no attempt, distinctively and definitely made, to cultivate a spirit of reverence in children. We acknowledge that we have no faith in any attempt to reform the manners of the adult population of the country. Our efforts to make sober men out of drunkards and total abstinence men out of moderate drinkers are failures. Our temperance children are to be made entirely out of children. We can raise more Christians by juvenile Christian culture than by adult conversion, a thousand to one. So it will be in this matter of politeness. The parents and teachers of the country can give us a polite people, and this by the cultivation of the principle of reverence not only, but by instruction in all the forms of polite address. With a number of things greatly needed to-day in home culture and school training this matter of training in good manners is not the least. Indeed, we are inclined to think it is of paramount importance. It should become a matter of text-books at once. A thorough gentleman or lady, who has brains enough to comprehend principles while proficient in practice, could hardly do a better service to the country than prepare a book for parents and teachers as at once a guide to them and to those who are under them. Children must be trained to politeness or they will never be polite. They must drink politeness in with their mother's milk; it must be exacted in the family and neighborhood relations, and boys and girls must grow up gentlemen and ladies in their deportment, or our nation can never be a thoroughly polite one—polite in soul as well as in ceremony, and kind in manner as well as kind in heart."

Fish as Brain Food.

The idea that fish diet, or, at least, the frequent use of fish as diet, is promotive of brain power, seems to be growing; and the philosophy of it is said to be that the phosphorus contained in fish acts beneficially on the brain.

Looking at what is called the lower animals, it is true that a considerable amount of intellect is to be observed in those that feed exclusively on fish. Learned seals are very common accessories to shows. Of all wise animals the otter is one of the most intelligent and easily domesticated; and with regard to the feathered race, wonderful stories are told about the instinct of storks and other fish-eating birds.

It does not appear to have been satisfactorily demonstrated, however, that intellect is developed in the human race by frequent use of fish diet. To arrive at a conclusion respecting this, it would be necessary to obtain trustworthy statistics with regard to the mental powers of fish eaters. Our own observation is that those who live much upon fish—as, for example, the inhabitants of fishing villages—are not specially distinguished for mental vigor, though their animal power cannot be questioned.

A MODERN MORGIANA.—A party of thieves, in Kentucky, all wearing disguises, broke into the house of a widow lady, and demanded a sum of money she had recently received. The money was given up, when the thieves demanded that the lady should prepare them something to eat. This was done, and the men eat heartily, but the lady had mixed poison with the food, and the next morning two of the thieves were found dead. One of them is said to have been recognized as the lady's nephew.

RELIABLE statistics show that there are 50,000,000 head of neat cattle in the United States, valued at $2,000,000,000. This is an average of $40 per head. This would add to the real capital of the United States the sum of $2,000,000,000, nearly enough to pay the national debt.

The academical department has 518; last year it had 522. The theological shows 103 against 90; the law school 48 against 38; medical school 31 against 20. The graduate students of the university now number 64 against 52; while the scientific school, in all classes, has 205 against 175.

M. HENRY recently exhibited to the Biological Society of Paris photographs of hands of the upper classes of the Annamites, characterized by the long finger-nails, esteemed as a mark of gentility. One of the photographs represented nails forty to fifty centimetres in length (fifteen to twenty inches) and very curiously carved in fantastic patterns, like some of the claws depicted in ancient illuminations. Notwithstanding their length these nails were not hypertrophied—that is, not augmented in bulk from increase of nutrition.

A Good Suggestion.

A saving woman at the head of the family is the very best savings bank established—one receiving deposits daily and hourly, with no costly machinery to manage it. The idea of saving is a pleasant one, and if the women would imbibe it at once, they would cultivate and adhere to it, and, when they were not aware of it, would be laying the foundation of a security in a storm time and shelter in a rainy day. The woman who sees to her own house has a large field to work in. The best way to make her comprehend it is to have an account kept of all current expenses. Probably not one woman in ten has an idea how much are the expenditures of herself and family. Where from one to two thousand dollars are expended annually, there is a chance to save something if the effort is made. Let the housewife take the idea, act upon it, and she will save many dollars—perhaps hundreds—where before she thought it impossible. This is a duty, yet not a prompting of avarice, but a moral obligation that rests upon the woman as well as upon the man.

Chinese Companions.

Almost every Chinaman in Peking (writes a foreign correspondent) walks about with a bird on a stick which he carries in his hand. There is a cross stick on the top as a perch, and the bird is fastened by a string. A Peking man seems always to have his bird with him. What a dog is to an Englishman, such is a bird to a Chinaman. Some persons even convey a bird in each hand. Others use small, neat, round cages. The birds are trained to fly in the air in peculiar whirls, and return to the hand. They will fly in circles over the head while the owner throws up seeds, which they catch in passing. It is beautiful to see how perfect the birds are in performing various feats of this kind; how tame and docile their training has made them; how quick they are to obey, and with what confidence they return to their master.

Address of Gov. Taylor to the Grangers at Monroe, Wis.

The Governor, on being introduced to the assemblage, said that notwithstanding the reluctance he always felt at being placed before a public audience in the capacity of speech-maker, he could not decline saying a few words in response to the kind invitation of the committee. The occasion was a pleasant one, at this season of temporary rest from the severity of summer toil. He said that those before him, of this favored locality, with not a few from other portions of the State who, like himself, are so fortunate as to enjoy their generous hospitality, had gathered there to indulge in mutual congratulations, to cheer each other in the journey of life, and to exchange opinions and sentiments concerning various topics of common interest, especially such as were of present public importance. It has ever been a misfortune to farmers, in all countries, that they have lived lives of comparative isolation, and have, therefore, acted singly instead of in accord. In consequence of this condition, they have been the prey of demagogues and political parties. They had been loyal patriots in time of war, and obedient citizens in time of peace, but have usually had but little to say about the conditions on which war should be waged, and quite as little in determining what laws should govern them in peaceful relations with each other. This condition of things is not to continue. Under the influence of Democratic ideas, there is a tendency to level up all classes of people to a common plane, and to make that the plane of the highest possible intelligence. In America, this is not so much the work of government as of the people themselves, every class of whom accordingly holds its destiny chiefly in its own hands. Happily for them, the agricultural population of our country have a numerical superiority which makes it easy to insure to themselves the full enjoyment of their rights. The only conditions wanting are, first, a correct understanding of what their rights and privileges are, and, second, agreement as to the practical application of these principles in the affairs of society and of the state. Both of these conditions have long been in process of fulfillment, but never has there been such progress toward their realization as within these recent years. It is a hopeful sign of the times that the industrial population of our country are at last being aroused to a just sense of the prerogatives and duties of citizenship. In this work the order to which many of you belong has borne a very important part. It has turned the thoughts of agriculturists to the value of association, and thrown hundreds of thousands of them into more practical relationship. It may also prove of great service by helping them to a correct understanding of many questions of social and political economy which so intensely concern them. Anxiety is manifested in some quarters lest the movement thus originated shall lead to communism; but there is little danger of any such result. The people of this country are of a totally different material from that of which communists are formed. They neither incline to take narrow and selfish views, nor are easily influenced by the misrepresentations of unscrupulous demagogues. They aim at justice, and are well able to do their own thinking. If they have not mastered all problems, a solution of which is essential to their well-being, and that of the nation, they are striving for the mastery, and will gain it earlier for the systematic efforts now put forth for full enlightment of the industrial classes. They come to realize, as never before, that they are the sovereign power; that if matters go wrong in the Government, it is because they have neglected their duties and have interrupted the guardianship of their liberty, as well as the direction of public affairs generally. They have learned that the interests of labor and capital are mutual and reciprocal, and that neither can disregard the other. By putting together these two principles of political science, the principle of reciprocal duty and of popular sovereignty, they have become political reformers, which, if prudently conducted, will break the power of dangerous monopolies, and insure to the industrious masses the just reward of their labor without encroaching upon the rights of capital. Just now the effort at reform is especially directed to a solution of transportation, cheap for the consuming and producing classes, and yet sufficiently profitable to reward the capital really invested, and to properly encourage future investments. If the powerful corporations now in the management of the transportation business of the country would meet the people in a friendly spirit, they would hasten the adjustment of these existing controversies upon the basis of full and equal justice. He said that the railway attorneys insisted that the railway companies are losing 25 per cent. of their gross earnings, which is not true, as shown by the Railroad Commissioners, based upon reports of the companies. The Commissioners say that, by operating under the Potter law, and having the same amount of business as last year, the companies would lose less than 5 per cent. of their gross earnings. The same authority states that last year the St. Paul earned enough to pay all operating expense, taxes, and interest on their bonds, and then had sufficient left to pay over 7 per cent. on their common and preferred stock, and that, too, on an assumed cost of $37,500 per mile, while the roads actually cost in cash but little more than half the amount. It is assumed by the railway companies that that provision in our constitution giving the Legislature the control over corporations tends to drive capital from our State. This is also evidently untrue, because 15 other State constitutions contain similar provisions, and we hear of no complaints in those States. Now, I hold that honest capital will seek investment where corporations as well as individuals are under the control of judicious laws. The interest of the bondholders and the people are reciprocal, but it is the management and practice of sharpers and designing men of which we complain. In this State, as you know, the effort has been made to determine the rates that may be fairly charged, and to compel an acceptance of those rates by railroads. It has also been attempted, through a commission of disinterested men, to procure for the public all information requisite to further legislation on this subject. The law is believed to be a fair one for a first effort, and your Executive has done everything in his power to enforce it. If he has not yet succeeded it has been because the railroad companies have conspired together to resist not only its enforcement, but the enforcement of any law which looks to a limitation of their powers. The conflict is not yet ended. How soon this expectation shall become a reality depends upon the people's loyalty to themselves and to the principles of free government. That the power thus regained will be used by the people with justice and moderation, I firmly believe. When the victory is fully won, three most important results will have been secured: 1. The people will be more equably, fairly and cheaply served. 2. Railway transportation will become a legitimate as well as a more profitable business. 3. Capitalists, home and foreign, being protected by the State, will have a degree of security impossible so long as their property is controlled by corporation managers acting wholly independent of law.

Grangerism.

What is it? What caused it? What is it going to do?

No question in time of peace has ever occupied so much of the public mind of the American people as the Grangers. It is the awakening of the people to the startling fact that as a nation we are on the verge of social, moral, financial and political ruin. It is an epoch in our history, a living, breathing reality based upon nature's first law.

Water boiling in a tea-kettle gave to the world a steam engine. The Boston tea party gave to America a republican government. And who can tell to-day the results of the firm determination of the producing classes of the country to throw off the yoke of monopolies and kick thieves and demagogues out of public trust. It is a demand on the part of the toiler to have a share in the profits of his labor—labor that has made the earth's face a smiling garden, and has civilized and Christianized the human family. It was caused by the insatiate greed and avarice of rings and monopolies, backed and encouraged by unscrupulous demagogues and officeholders. The last feather broke the camel's back, and at last an outraged people have taken matters into their own hands, and thieves and political rascals tremble and whine. It is a forerunner of better times, a harbinger of good. Our social and political sky will be the brighter for it; it will cause a return to the principles that made us one of the proudest nations of the earth. It has to-day the prayers of the good for its success, and can defy the curses of the wicked.—Exchange.

Vessels on Rollers.

M. A. Huet, a French engineer, holds it to be a mistake to make ships force their bulk through the water, meeting thereby the large opposing surface of water and a sliding friction over the whole of their immersed surface. This, M. Huet holds, is as great a mistake as if we were to dismount our railway carriages from their wheels and drag them like sledges along the rails. He puts forward the theory that vessels should be mounted on rolling drums; that these drums should give principally the power of flotation, and that they should be driven round as paddles to move the ship forward. We should in this way have a floating locomotive, mounted on its supporting wheels or rollers. The vessels would offer no resistance but a rolling one to motion, and the whole of the supported weight of the ship would be used as a pressure to give adhesive fractional effect to the rollers. In this way M. Huet affirms that a velocity equal to that of our railroad trains might be attained at sea.

ANTICIPATION.

"I'll take the orchard path," she said,
Speaking lowly, smiling slowly;
The brook was dried within its bed,
The hot sun flung a [illegible] red
Low in the West, as forth she sped.

Across the dried brook-course she went,
Singing lowly, smiling slowly;
She scarcely saw the sun that spent
It's fiery force in swift descent—
She never saw the wheat was bent,

The grasses parched, the blossoms dried
Singing lowly, smiling slowly;
Her eyes amidst the drouth espied
A Summer pleasance far and wide,
With roses and sweet violets pied.

II.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

But homeward coming all the way,
Sighing lowly, pacing slowly;
She knew the bent wheat withering
She saw the blossoms' dry decay,
She missed the little brooklet's play.

A breeze had sprung from out the South,
But, sighing lowly, pacing slowly,
She only felt the burning drouth;
Her eyes were hot, and parched her mouth;
Yet sweet the wind blew from the South!

And when the wind brought welcome rain,
Still sighing lowly, pacing slowly,
She never saw the lifting grain,
But only—a lone orchard lane,
Where she had waited all in vain!

Humor.

A WICKED world—The world of candle-makers.

A MUSIC-TEACHER should be a man of sound judgment.

THE Lowell Courier says that Sing Sing is the music-box of New York.

TIGHT-LACING is again coming into fashion. This is good news for short-armed lovers.

A BROOKLYN horse-car conductor says 99 per cent. of the women in the City of Churches step off the horse-cars backwards.

LADY visitor—"My dear, do you know if your mamma is engaged?" Little girl of the period—"Engaged? bless you, why she's married."

"ARTAXERXES," said Mr. Marrowfat, solemnly, "never get married, my boy. Little do you know what an awful responsibility it is to upholster a wife."

ONE of the meanest feelings in this world comes to a man when he rescues a young lady from drowning, and learns that she is to be married in three weeks to a fellow with leg o' mutton whiskers.

THOSE graceful little hanging-pockets worn by the ladies now are just the thing. Jones says he picked a note out of one and learned that Smith had the start of him, which saved the humiliation of being rejected.

A POET recently sent a song entitled, "What Shall My Love Wear?" to an editor. The latter, regarding the question wholly in its moral aspect, sat down and wrote a kind but firm article recommending her to wear clothes.

A BROOKLYN woman, impressed with the importance of physical training, but feeling too poor to join a gymnasium class, does just as well by kicking her husband down stairs every night, and knocking him along the hall into the back yard.

THE other day an adipose citizen strolled up to a couple of acquaintances who were talking on a corner, and one of them saluted him with: "Why, you are growing bigger every day. I have heard of a man being fatter than a fool, but I believe you are fatter than two fools." "Well, I guess I would outweigh both of you," replied old rotund quietly as he walked along.

A COUNTRYMAN with his bride stopped at a Troy hotel the other day. At dinner, when the waiter presented a bill of fare, the young man inquired, "What's that?" "That's a bill of fare," said the waiter. The countryman took it in his hands, looked inquiringly at his wife, and then at the waiter, and finally dove down into his poket and insinuatingly asked "How much is it?"

WHEN little Johnny wanted to go to church one Sunday his mother was afraid he would make a noise, but his father said "Johnny knows better than to make a noise in church." So he went. He kept very still till the last prayer. By that time he had grown tired sitting still, and was standing on the pew cushion with his back to the pulpit. When the lady in the next seat bowed her head in prayer, Johnny thought she was crying. He leaned over and said to the lady, in a tone that was meant for a whisper, but which was only too plainly heard; "Poor lady!" Whyt ee matter? Do oo stummut ache?"

Making a Few Remarks.

Mr. Stone, a well known and excellent Christian gentleman, belonging to one of the Murray Hill churches in New York City, was up in the country in the summer, and learning that an evening prayer meeting was in progress at the village church, walked in and took a seat in the back part of the room. The brother in the chair conducting the meeting, observing the stranger, left his seat, and coming to Mr. Stone, said to him:

"What is your name?"

"My name is Stone."

"Where are you from?"

"I am from the city of New York."

"Are you one of the Lord's people?"

"I hope that I am," answered Mr. Stone with becoming humility. The presiding genius, satisfied with the answers to his catechism, returned to his elevated seat, and at the end of the hymn rose and said:

"Will Brother Stone, from New York, favor us with a few remarks?"

Mr. Stone, willing to do what he could, and having often been told by the N. Y. Observer to do in the country what he would in the city, rose and made a few practical observations to the best of his ability. No sooner had he sat down than the presiding elder rose and said:

"Will Brother Stone, of New York, ask the Lord to bless his feeble remarks."

Undismayed by this commentary on his speech, Mr. Stone offered prayer, and the meeting proceeded as usual.—N. Y. Observer.

A PENNSYLVANIA toper swore off six years ago, and has put a penny into a box for every drink he would have taken. He counted his hoard the other day, and found he had missed 1,287 drinks.

Thirteenth Congressional District.

Democrats and Liberals in Convention at Kendallville.

Adoption of a Sound Platform.

Hon. Freeman Kelley Nominated for Congress.

Pursuant to call, the Democratic Liberal Convention of the Thirteenth Congressional District met at Kendallville wednsday and was called to order at aoout half past ten o'clock A. M. by S. W. Marshall, chairman of the District Central Committee, who stated in a few words that the object of the convention was to nominate a candidate for Congress.

On motion C. A. O. McClellan, of Waterloo, was called to the chair and C. L. Murray, of the Goshen Democrat and B. F. Dawson, of Steuben county chosen secretaries.

A committee, consisting of one from each county, was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sentiment of the convention. to wit.

DeKalb—J. D. Kelley.
Elkhart—Michael Cook.
Kosciusko—Dr. T. Davenport.
Lagrange—A. Eminger.
Marshall—Not represented.
Noble.—John B. Stoll.
Steuben—Capt. O. N. Bennett,

The following named gentlemen were appointed a

Committee on Apportionment.
DeKalb—E. Y. Husslman,
Elkhart—John W. Egbert.
Kosciusko—Wm. Dunlap.
Lagrange—Henry Kromer,
Marshall—Non represented.
Noble—A. C. F. Wichman.
Steuben—J. K. Howell.

On motion T. C. Mays, of the Auburn Courier, it was agreed that the chairman of the several county committee shal constitute the District Central Committee for the next two years.

W. S. Marshall announced to the convention that he had received a telegram from Daniel McDonald, chairman of the Marshall county central committee, to the effect that no delegates would be in attendance from that county and requesting him to represent them. The telegram was read before the convention, whereupon it was unanimously agreed that Mr. Marshall should represent Marshall county and that his name be added to the committee already appointed.

There being no further business at hand, the convention took a recess until after dinner.

Afternoon Session.

The convention re-assembled at one o'clock P. M., with its chairman Mr. McClelland, presiding.

The Committee on Apportionment by the chairman W. S. Marshall, reported the following—taking the vote cast for Governor in 1872 as its basis—as the number of votes each county is entitled to cast in the contest for candidates:

DeKalb, 19: Elkhart, 29; Kosciusko 22; Lagrange, 10; Marshall, 23; Noble, 23 Steuben, 10. Number of votes required to nominate, 69.

J. B. Stoll, chairman of the the committe on Resolutions, report the follwing which were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, by the Democratic-Liberal convention of the 13th Congressional District,

1st. That we are in favor of the restoration of gold and silver as the basis of currency; resumption of specie payments as soon as possible, consistent with the business and industrial interests of the country.

2d. That we demand a rigid restriction of the government, both State and National, to the legitimate domain of political power, by excluding therefrom all executive and legislative intermeddling with the affairs of society, whereby monopolies are fostered, privileged classes aggrandized and individual freedom unnecessarily and oppressively restrained.

3d. That we assert the right and duty of the State to protect its citizens from extortion and unjust discrimination by chartered monopolies.

4th. That we are opposed to governmental grants of public lands to corporations as tending to general corruption and the demoralization of the public service.

5th. That we favor an honest and economical government, lopping off every needless expence, a reduction of the numder of office holders, the abolition of the free system, local and national, and the return to the moderate living and plain customs of former days

6th. That we denounce the civil rights bill of the last Congress, believing its passage to be a gross invasion of the right of the State to control their domestic concerns in their own way, and that it would result in incalculable evil to both the white and the negro races.

7th. That we demand the repeal of the act giving the President of the United States a salary of $50,000 per year and favor the reduction thereo to the former basis.

8th. That we are in frvor of a tariff for revenue only.

9th That we are in favor of repealing the national banking law and the substitution thereoore of a unform free banking system through the United States—on a permenent specie basis.

After the foregoing resolutions had been adopted the chair announced that the convention was ready to proceed to the nomination of a candidate for Congress. The names of the following gentlemen were then anounced: Freeman Kelley of DeKalb; Col. W. C Williams, of Noble; John B. Howe, of of Lagrange, G. W. Balding of Steuben.

An informal ballot being taking upon the names presented the following was the result: Kelley 68; Williams 22; Howe. 36; Baldwin, 10.

The convention then proceeded to ballot regularly by counties for the several candidates, dropping the name of Mr. Baldwin, and the result was the choice of Mr. Kelley upon the third ballot.

First Ballot.

Kelley—DeKalb 14; Elkhart, 14; Kosciusko, 22; Marshall, 1; Total 65:

Williams—DeKalb, 1; Elkhart 15; Noble 21; Total 37.

Howe—DeKalb, 4; LaGrange. 10; Marshall, 11; Noble; 3Steuben, 10 Total 37,

Second Ballot.

Kelley—DeKalb, 14; Kosciuko, 22; Marshall, 12; Total 48.

Williams—DeKalb, 1; Elkhart, 15 Lagrange, 1; Noble, 22; Steuben, 5 Total 44.

Howe—DeKalb, 4; Lagrange, 9; Marshall, 11; Noble, 1; Steuben, 5. Total, 30.

On this ballot Elkhart county divided her support, giving Judge Hiram S. Tousely, of Noble county, 14 of her votes. Tousely then came forward and addressed the convention briefly. He said that he was not and would not be a candidate, but that if any of his friends present thought enough of him to give him their votes he was thankful for the honor; that he wanted the people to nominate somebody who can be elected, and that he wants men elected who will put down corruption in the land. The name of W. B. McConnell, of Steuben, was then announced and the convention proceeded to take the Third Ballot.

Kelley—DeKalb, 18; Elkhart, 10; Kosciusko, 22; Marshall, 23; Total 73

Williams—DeKalb, 1 Elkhart, 10; LaGrange, 1; Noble, 23; Total, 35;

Howe—LaGrange, 9.

McConnell—Elkhart, 9; Steuben, 10 Total, 19.

Mr. Kelley, having received a majority of the votes cast, was declared duly nominated, and amidst loud and repeated calls took the stand.

Mr. Kelley, said he fully appreciated the responsibility of the position to which he had been assigned. He expressed himself strongly in favor of reducing salaries, legislating in the interest of the workingmen and farmers, and inaugurating honesty in every department of the government. He said that although he might not be able to cope with his competitor in round periods of speech, but he felt that he could serve the people by voting for an honest measure, for reform and for the good of the country. He recognized in his own nomination that the convention entertaned a proper regard for the men who till the soil and develop the recources of the land.

Judge Tousley in response to loud calls, said he felt good over the nomination—the selection of an honest man the noblest work of God. Kelley is for the people, for honesty, for reform. He is therefore the proper man to go to Congress. You have selected a man who earns his dollars by honest labor, therefore I am for him. Kelley would not pack a convention. Why was Baker nominated? Simply to carry out the long-laid plans of the Defress family. They had to get Wm. A. Woods out of the way by making him judge, then they discribed mass conventions and substituted the delegate system that they might the better be enabled to pack the convention. They turned Judge Clapp—an honest faithful servant of the people—out of office, and but recently slaughtered him in convention because he did not belong to the Defrees Ring.

Col. Williams said; While not successful in this convention I hope you will do what I hereby pledge myself to do, viz: work for the election of the nominee. * * * Will do all in my power to secure victory—on the stump if desired. If we do not accomplish our aims, we at last deserve to succeed.

Circuit Prosecutor

On motion T. C. Mays, Mr. W. B. McConnell was unanimously nominated for Circuit Prosecutor for the counties of Noble, DeKalb and Steuben. Mr. McConnell acknowledged the compliment in a neat little speech, whereupon the convention adjourned sine die.

FORT WAYNE, Sept. 10, 1874

EDITOR COURIER.—The excitement incident to Fair week, together with a short stay in St. Louis since my last letter has almost unfitted me for service this week. I will endeavor to drop a few lines from this point however. The great governing attraction of the past few days has been the opening of Root & Co's Palace of Trade on Calhoun st one of the most elegant repositories of Dry Goods to be found in the State. Indeed these palatial quarters in all their present grandeur and magnificence would be a credit to New York's Broadway. Your readers familiar with Ft. Wayne localities can readily comprehend situation and size of this emporium when I refer them to Hamilton Hall opposite and west of the Court House Square. The building occupies a frontage of 55 ft running back 130 ft to a 30 ft alley. It is three stories high, with an open oblong space in the centre reaching up through the several stories giving light and healthful ventilation. This space is surrounded by massive balustrades of highly polished walnut. The stairways with their equally heavy banisters and carved newel posts, the scores of richly decorated stools, the elevators, elaborate decorations mirrors etc, indeed all the lavish surroundings of this magnificent depot of trade and fashion at once suggest the refinement, culture and good taste of the enterprising management Messrs Root, Rurode and Carey. The office under the stairway is a paragon of neatness and beauty, surrounded on all sides by curved plates of Belgian glass through which can be seen the handsome features of Mr. E. F. Carey who has charge of this department and whose pleasant address and winning manners are as inviting to his lady patrons as the tons of nobby silks satins and other goods so recently unpacked fresh from the newest and largest foreign and domestic markets. Time forbids a more extended notice of this superb house. Our local papers have already devoted columns on its praise and worthily have these encomiums been merited. Other firms in this line of business must come out from their dingy quarters, shake off their lethargy and spring to new life and activity or Messrs Root and Co. will monopolize the business, for they have the room, the stock, the spirit and the enterprise to do it.

The Fair comes next in importance and when I say it is the largest of Fair of the kind that has ever been opened in Northern Ind. I but echo the sentiment of that venerable antiquarian so frequently and reverentially referred to as the "oldest Inhabitant." The crowds are simply immense, the attractions unsurpassed by anything in our local history, the gate receipts unexpectedly large, the weather usually foul in Fair week has so far been delightful (particularly in the shade) but lest I say too much concerning it and thereby bring the attractions home to your readers instead of inducing them to come and see for themselves, I will change the subject and tell you how severely I have been handled by some of the crusading ladies for my strictures on their favorite cause. They denominate me a pot house politician, a schemer and endeavoring to play into the filthy hands of the whiskey sellers for the paltry spoils of office, all of which is literally untrue as affiant verily believes. I would blush for very shame to say anything derogatory concerning this useful and pious element of our population. I exalt the sex, reverence these devout ladies for their holy impulses, yet cannot fully endorse the peculiar means they use to bring about their much loved temperance reform That they have an influence high and holy is indisputable, but that they have by the modus operandi of their crusade done anything in the cause of temperance in this locality is seriously controverted. Woman's influence is either of the most exalted or most debasing tendency, for in the female character there is no mid-region, it must exist in spotless innocence or in hopeless vice. Nature affirms this in the character and formation of her mind. Her conclusions are quick as thought, instead of mounting the ladder and step by step ascending to its summit she flies at once to the topmost round. Compare her close, logical reasoning with the dull, mathematical calculation by which men arrive at their conclusions. She is governed by the moral sentiments and affections of her nature. The machinery of her mind is not complexed; the two fine silver chords of love and morality are the heart strings of her existence, let them but vibrate and her course is defined, and while they exist she lives and breathes a fresh unaltered soul directly from the honest mould of Nature; by the introduction of vice let them be broken and the creature is changed, from all that is lovely to all that is hideous. As her mind then is cultivated, as her moral and religiou sentiments are improved, as truth love and mercy are refined by the precepts of light and knowledge will her influence be felt in the cause she has so dear to her heart, not by malicious prosecutions, not by locking liquor venders behind creaking bolts and bars and leaving temporary widows and orphans to mourn and weep for the sustaining comfort of their prop and shield Prayer, potent prayer, to a righteous unerring God is better fitting the holy character of women. That the office of women, that the work set apart by the fiat of her own Nature is of the most exalted, the most responsible character. It is to keep up a moral light in the dark abyss of an immoral world that man may see by moral suasion the stagnant pools of vice and keep his eye steadily fixed on Heaven. Her degraded, this light, this moral light goes out. The order and beauty that belongs to the day is lost in the confusion of the night. Anarchy and despotism follows and society like that light that is faded and gone sinks into an eternity of darkness only to be revived by the same prometheon fire, the moral influence of the female character.

As I said at the commencement of this letter I have been to St. Louis and whiled away a few days in that city of dirt and doubtful democracy. There is much activity in trade and enterprise shown all over the city. Improvements on a scale of grandeur and magnificence never before attempted in any other American city. A genial urbane people ever ready to do the agreeable to strangers and exhibit the excellent qualities of their growing metropolis. Engage them in conversation upon the topics of the day, they appear listless and uninterested, but strike up the subject of the big bridge, their eyes sparkle, they become at once animated to the subject, will talk all day, forgetting lunch, and never tire of the all absorbing and to them interesting subject; each man claims to have been the first to pass over the big bridge and assumes to himself much dignity in consequence thereof. The bridge is undoubtedly a superior specimen of American engineering, but I prognosticate that when the East River bridge connecting N. Y. city with Beecher's 'Burg is done with its single span the St. Louis enthusiasts will be so ashamed of the little structure crossing their bayou, that they will then be willing to hold sweet converse upon any other subject rather than their bridge, ready and anxious to discuss politics, argue theology, or stand treat many times in succession rather than hit upon the humiliating topic of bridges. Their pride must have a fall, it is only a question of time and that time will arrive on the completion of the N. Y. bridge, which is to stand in comparison with other bridges as St. Peters of Rome compares in size and architecture with the other churches and cathedrals of the world.

There are many beautiful drives in the suburban districts around Fort Wayne and en route many brick and mortar evidences of the opulence and good taste of her busines men. A moonlight drive like the one I recently indulged in with some friends has been the pleasing subject of many sober and I may say chaste and refining reflections. Upon the banks of the St. Joseph, the roadway nearly overarched by the thick foliage of the oak and maple, the moon's reflection in the limpid waters beneath and the numberless stars with their tiny twinkle all reflected objects of God's own handiwork and love everything about us quiet save our own noise as echoed forth into remote and unknown regions beyond our vision a quietude sublime and beautiful.

When ten thousand stars throw forth their bright ray.
Then sink back in silence at dawn's early day
When pale and majestic the moon rides along
A Queen of this bright and ethereal throng
When Sun's piercing light commands her to fly
And leave him alone to reign in the sky
Then, then do I know, that God hath control
Of Heaven and Earth and man's living soul.

Fort Wayne is one of the healthiest of western cities. The official monthly mortality record in the city clerk's office exhibits a remarkably light death roll but 53 for July. It was but yesterday however I was called in to see a human being die, to watch the severance of soul and body, to see if I could like the expiring victim penetrate the folds that hides from mortal vision the other side of this life, but no, 'tis wisely withheld from us, till this good time a few gasps and convulsive shudders and nothing but the cold clay tenement was left to confront us in all its bearings. Its essence, its life, its soul, its god like part had returned to Him who gave it, or rather loaned it, and like an unseen vapor before our very eyes did take its upward winged flight and we failed to see its departure. Is there no shape in which to form the real subastance of the living soul? Is there no figure it will represent when bursting from its prison house of clay when angels clasp it and the victors cry "go glorious spirit seek thy God and future home, go claim of thy Father what in Christ is given, an angels brightness in a glittering home of eternal rest, in a carefully selected world of saints and living purity."

The chief repository for Ft. Wayne's protestant dead is Lindenwood Cemetery, about one mile north west of the city proper, to ride around this beautiful hallowed city of the dear departed through and along its innumerable avenues and by paths, by its rich monuments and shafts costing from $20,000 down to more modest figures, its elaborately adorned plats and mounds, its numerous urns pots and beds of natures richest exotics, to hear the merry birds sending aloft from branch and twig their praises to the God of nature, to see here and there the tearful mourner strewing fresh garlands upon newmade graves and watering them with warm tears of affection fresh from the fountain head I say to see all this is to rob death of much of its traditional terrors and make it but a pleasant state of transition necessary to an exchange of worlds and another and a better life to the pure and good in heart. Au Revoir.

—OF—

NUMBER 28.

The boat was to be back in eight days. Twelve dayse past, and no boat appeared. It had rained heavily,—The river rose high the water turned quite cold, and our provisions entirely failed, except a half bushel of dried peaches. Williamson and Kilgore concluded to leave for the settlement. We all made a raft of logs for the boys to cross the river, and the next morning they started with empty stomachs Hughs and I went to see them across. They went abrord the raft and started across the river, the water being high, and the slush ice running. At first the raft bore them up, but before they got across they were three feet deep in the freezing water. They had flint and spunk the latter getting wet in their pockets, was of caurse useless. They scrambled up the other bank; and there they were their clothes freezing in two minuts, 27 miles from the settlement without food in their stomachs, without any means to strike fire, and the snow four inches deep I shuddered for their fate, and told them to start at a good turkey trot, so as not to freeze, and not to fast lest they should tire out before getting through, and, on the peril of their lives not to set down.—They got through, but so exhausted that Judge Perkins had to help them into his door. Hughs and I staid 14 days after the boys left, during which time we had nothing under heavens to eat, but a few dried peaches. We had a gun and went out often with it to try to kill somthing, but their was neither animal nor bird to be seen,—Not even so much as an Indian On the morning of the 14th day, I told Hughs I would make a raft of logs that day and leave the next morning. I did so. Next morning Hughs accompanied me to the river to see me start. We both felt sure that Houlton and Blair were coming up the river with a perogue, and I was in great hopes to meet them in to or three hours. The river was yet high, and the slush ice running very thickly.—I got some fire and wood on the raft, Hughs looses the cable and was in the act of handing it to me, when lo! my brother Samuel Houlton call to us about a hundred rods up the river. He knew we must be starving, and came across the Maumee with a yoke of oxen and sled. He tried hard to reach us the day before, but lacked 5 miles when darkness overtook him. He drove on till he could follow the road no longer and then struck fire and camped for the night. It was fortunate indeed for me that he came just when he did, for if I had got one hour's start I should have surely lost my life as I now live;—for there was no human habitation till within four miles of Fort Wayne. The slush ice would have so adhered to the raft as soon to render it entirely unmanageable so that it must have stove and I would have been compelled to swim, or drown. Had I swam out I would have frozen to death very soon.

Now kind reader you would think it pretty hard fare to have nothing to eat for fourteen days but dried peaches. I tell you it kept sole and body together, and that was all it did.

Hughs, Sam'l Houlton and myself staid about two weeks, then Samuel took the Indian canoe, and went down the river to get his perogue load of pork, flour potatoes corn and whiskey, (for Hughs must have his dram.)—At Fort Wayne Samuel hired a man by the name of Avery, and went a little below where Antwerp now is where they loaded the perogue, and returned without any thing worthy of note. We four worked on some time, and in May got the mill ready to raise. Without any further help we went to putting it up,—without ropes or tackel. The size was 18 by 45 feet. There were five swamp oak sills 45 feet long and 13 inches square and two plates 10 inches square;—but the middle bent, with the fender beam 14 inches square, was the heaviest.

At that time there was a large Indian village where Denmark now is, and some traders came among them with whiskey, and made them drunk; so they came to rob us. We had worked hard all day, until nearly sundown, when we went to the house to eat supper. The Indians came yelling and soon filled the house. They then drew their knives, bowes and arrows and tomahawks—stuck their hands into supper pot—and our supper was gone in a trice. Samuel Houlton drew a large poker, and was about to strike, when Avery exclaimed don't strike, Sam or they will kill all of us.

Foul Play is the title of a splendid story by Chas Read. All of Mr. Read's novels are good, but this seems to show up his powers of description to an unusual extent. The plot is well laid, and has a charm about it that cannot fail to interest the reader.

Our enterprising merchants Benedict & Leasure, have made arrangements to get fresh oysters for their customers. They dish 'em up in superb style, and at a very reasonable price. Mr. Davenport, our popular druggist, has just opened out some fine brands of cigars of a superior quality. The greatest object of the smoker is to get a good cigar for the money, and Eureka is now the word when referring to this excellent assortment.

The dance at Cedar Creek, under the management of Noah Breeding, was a success. There were 27 numbers out, and each one paying attention to the call of the "Boss," consequently everything passed off pleasant. Catholic Fair.

Our Catholic friends will give a grand Fair at their new church, commencing on Tuesday Sept 29th, 1874. The objects is to raise funds to assist in the payment of the debt incurred in the erection of this fine edifice, and we hope to see everybody interested. It will be made enjoyable and attractive, and well worth the patronage of the public.

The COURIER takes us to task for converting our paper from an independent to a Republican paper. Now this comes with bad grace from Tommy, who time and again insisted that we should do just what we have done. Consistency is no virtue with Tommy.—News.

Yes, sir, when we first saw the blunder you were making, we gave you the benefit of our experience. There is a certain time in which some mistakes can be corrected, but its not just on the eve of an election.

The Goshen Democrat says, John H. Baker headed and instigated the crusade movement in this city, for the purpose of putting a good fee in his pocket in the prosecution of liquor dealers.

A lawyer taking such a view of public matters should never go to Congress. It shows a want of respect for public opinion. While Mr. Kelly is a temperance man practically, he avoids extreme hobbies, and labors for that which will do the greatest good to the greatest number.

We are in receipt of the Hicksville Independent published by Messrs Brooks & Cummings. It gives evidence of being well managed and it ought to receive a liberal support. We take from it the following items:

The telegraph corps engaged in putting up the wire along the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, reached this point last evening.

It is reported that an accommodation train will be run between Auburn and Defiance, about the 15th of the present month. We hope the report may prove true.

The Logansport Journal in speaking of the band contest at the fair last week says, Each band played two tunes, and all except the small yong band from Cherubusco performed very superior music. That of Mr Fann's band was simple, but very sweet. McKay's was more elaborate and very good. The Butler boys had, evidently, been well trained. Our Father Mathew band showed such marked improvement, that on every side we heard its praises sounded. The Cecilians got up to their level best, and when they do that there is no band in the State that equals them. The latter took the preium.

Planchette.

Perhaps nothing of late years has gone so far toward mystifying, and at the same time amusing the people, as the subject of this notice. A small heart shaped board, by electricity, magnetism, or some thing else, is made to dispel illusions to rectify error, or predict concerning events in a miraculous manner. Purchase one and follow directions and it will no doubt tell you to go to C. P. Houser's, pointing out the very place to buy your wall paper window blinds and fixtures, school books stationery, and everything kept in the best regulated book stores at very low prices.

R. M. Lockhart, Esq., member of the State Board of Agriculture from this District, desires us to say that he is particularly anxious to see North Eastern Indiana well represented there. The officers of the State Board have done all in their power to make it the most interesting show that has ever been presented to the citizens of this or adjoining States, and we hope to be able to realize our most sanguine expectations. Arrangements have been made with all the railroads in this part of the State to carry passengers at half fare rates and quick time. The State Board has spent over $150,000 in the erection of fine buildings on the Fair Grounds, and has spared no pains or expense in preparing a great exhibition trusting that the people of the State will appreciate the efforts to make the Fair of 1874 a grand success. We ask every one to lend them a helping hand, for if we should fail to make a successful Fair this year it would cast a damper on its prospects for years to come.

They are having a lively time at Waterloo about the post office. It seems that Mr. Hague tumbled to a scheme of Gen. Blair's, and the consequence is h—— is to pay. It is said that Hague gently resigned, and favored the appointment of Blair's daughter. We find the following in the Press of last week:

EDITORS PRESS—It is a popular delusion that Postmasters are appointed upon the recommendation of the citizens interested, through the Congressman for the district. That this is not the case is proven by the recent case in this place. On Monday of last week, Postmaster Hague resigned, but not many of the public knew it for two days. On the day the resignation was tendered, Brevet Brigadier General Blair went to Fort Wayne, and securing the services of Geo. Moon and Captain Iddings, a document recommending the General's daughter for the place, was taken to Huntington, where the approval of Mr. Sayler was secured to the scheme. It was then dispatched to Billy Williams at Washington, with a letter urging him to attend to the matter at once, as "something might happen." Billy attended to the business promptly, and it is understood the appointment has been secured. It is one unfit to be made in every respect; but the whole disreputable business is in keeping with the performances of men whose rule is happily nearly at an end. JUSTICE

County Board of Education.

Persuant to the requirements of law, the County Superintendent, Township Trustees and the other Trustees of the towns of DeKalb county, met in the Court House in Auburn, on Tuesday, Sept. 1st, 1874, as a County Board of Education, Supt. Barns in the chair.

The following members of the Board were present:

Supt. Barns and the following Trustees Houser, of Butler; Shaffer, of Jackson; Nichols, of Concord; Bordner, of Stafford; Greanamyer, of Wilmington; Thomas, of Union; Downs, of Fairfield; Baker of Smithfield; Waterman, of Franklin, and Cornelius, of Troy. On motion of Dr. Hoopingarner, Trustee Waterman, of Waterloo, was chosen Secretary.

The reports, required by law, of the Trustees were presented to the Superintendent and duly examined by him.

The Committee appointed at the last meeting of the Board to consider and report on topics suggested by the Supt. at that meeting, having failed to report, the committee was, on motion, discharged from the further consideration of the subject or subjects.

The subject of forming institute districts of several townships, towns or parts of townships, were taken up and discussed by the members present, but before a conclusion was arrived at, the matter was laid over, when on motion of Dr. Hoopingarner the Board adjourned to meet at Butler, Nov. 11, 1874 (Institute week)

Northern Indiana Fair.

The Northern Indiana Fair held at Fort Wayne last week, was a most magnificent affair and a splendid success. Her citizens can now see what she might have enjoyed years ago, had they tackled the enterprise with the same energy that has been evinced this fall.

If one man deserves praise more than another, for a tenacity of purpose, and an abiding faith in ultimate success, that man is Secretary Lyne. The result was foreseen by him, as it ought to have been by a good many others who travel on their intelligence.

It was excellently managed throughout but really there were too many persons there on Thursday to enjoy it, as could have been and was on the other days.—Hereafter we suggest that a few of the people go on some other days besides Thursday. The attractions were equally good on Tuesday, the first day, especially the races. The attendance on Friday was just large enough to make everything comfortable. But hereafter excuse us from being one of a crowd of fifty thousand in one day.

We must not neglect to mention the excellent service rendered by Capt. W. H. Meyers, who seemed almost ubiquitous and always at the right place. Mr. Isaac Wets also performed an important part, and "yanked" several disturbers of the peace off the ground in a hurry, and there wasn't much show for shoulder hitters.—Si Tam, the genial Independent candidate for Sheriff was on hand, but he did not have much time to lectioneer as his time was all imployed in fair matters.

A CARD.

A Clergyman, while residing in South America, as missionary, discovered a safe and simple remedy for the cure of Nervous weakness, Early Decay, Disease of the Urinary and Seminal Organs, and the train of disorders brought on by baneful and vicious habits. Great numbers have been cured by this noble remedy. Prompted by a desire to benefit the afflicted and unfortunate, I will send the recipt for preparing and using this medicine, in a sealed envelope, to any one who needs it, Free of Charge. Address,

A man injured his foot badly at the depot, the other day, by cars coming together, and his foot between them.

The COURIER has considerable to say about Senator Pratt's vote on the "Newspaper gag law," at the same time knowing that the law cannot in any way affect the honorable journalist who desires to treat fairly all subjects, and speak of men in public stations in a truthful manner.—Honest men like Bro. Mays should not feel aggrieved at this law, surely.—Butler News.

Why was Poland defeated in the great Republican State of Vermont? The Maryland Republican says, "Never since the days of the older Adams has such a victory been achieved by the friends of freedom and the liberty of the press as the defeat of Judge Poland, of Vermont, the author of the notorious bill know as the "Press Gag Law." The truth is, we feel so good over the result that to-day we can only say three cheers for The New York Sun, the champion defender of the rights of the press, and advise every printer's devil to dance a funeral jig upon Poland's political grave. Thus may it be done to all such, be they Democrats or Republicans."

The fact is we are not like the News man, allow ourself to be kicked around seventeen squares and then have some one tell us it was all for our own good.—Judge Poland sought to push through Congress the famous gag law by which corrupt government officials sought to keep their acts hidden from the public by keeping newspapers from reporting and commenting on them

Mrs. Wyatt, of Jackson tp, died last Sabbath, wanting but about two years of being one hundred years old. She was one of the early settlers.

Hoffman and George Easley are defendants require me to make the sum of one hundred and fifty-eight dollars and thirty seven cents, with interest on said judgment and cost, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock am and 4 o'clock pm of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate:

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10th, 1874

Lot thirty-eight (38) in the western addition to the town of Auburn, in DeKalb County, Ind'a.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at public sale, the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgement, interest and cost. THE ROYAL CONCERT.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

[A Fable—Paraphrased from the Spanish of Yriarte.]

I.

The animals once—so the legends report—
To honor the Lion, their popular king,
A concert proposed, in his majesty's court,
At which all the brutes were invited to sing.

II.

Not all—I should say, as a lover of truth—
For somehow or other the managers missed
The principal matter—and managed, in sooth,
To have the best singers left out of the list!

III.

Not a Nightingale, Wood-thrush, or Blackbird was in it;
Nay, even the Lark and Canary were slighted;
No mention was made of the musical Linnet;
But all of the others were warmly invited!

IV.

There was plenty of jealousy, you may be sure,
And wrangling enough—as is always the case
When the cleverest [illegible] attempts to secure
For each of his singers the proper place.

V.

'Tis settled at last; the rehearsal is done;
And now for the Concert the vocalists meet,
With no fear of failure, for every one
What he's wanting in talent makes up in conceit!

VI.

A couple of Hornets the tenor essayed;
The Crickets attempted the treble and alto;
The basse (of course) by a Donkey was brayed;
While to Locusts and Frogs was assigned the contralto!

VII.

The singers commence!—but no answering cheers
Reward their endeavors—the audience swore
(While some ran away, and some stopt up their ears)
That never was music so murdered before!

VIII.

At this, the performers, abating their noise,
Sought, each for himself, some ingenious excuse;
And straight on his fellows with vigor employs
The fiercest reproaches and foulest abuse.

IX.

The Frogs said the Crickets were quite out of place;
Such villainous treble they never had heard!
The Crickets replied by denouncing the bass;
A Donkey sing bass?—It was truly absurd!

X.

"Twas the fault of the Frogs!" was the Donkey's reply;
"'Tis clearly the Hornets!" the Locusts exclaim;
The Hornets returned, "'Tis a thundering lie!"
And on their accusers retorted the blame!

XI.

Then the King of the Beasts, who could bear it no more,
Looked down from his throne, with a growl and a grin,
And thus spoke his mind, in a terrible roar,
Which silenced at once their obstreperous din:

XII.

"Go!—out of my hearing, ye ignorant crew;
Ere it came to the trial, each impudent wight
Was boasting the wonderful things he could do;
Quick! out of my hearing and out of my sight!"

MORAL.

So in human affairs, when pretenders, who once
In arrogant boasting had vied with each other,
Meet a common disaster—then every dunce
Excuses himself by accusing another!

"411."

"411?"

"That's me, sir."

"Let me see your arm."

"It's all right, sir."

"All right, is it? In my humble opinion, it's about as wrong as wrong can be."

411 looked down at the bruised flesh and broken bones he had affirmed to be "all right," with a half-contemptuous smile, and then, resigning himself to the inevitable, laid quietly watching the white hands of the young doctor as he prepared splints, bandages, etc., and commenced the work of setting the bone, now rendered doubly difficult by the swelling of the bruised flesh.

The light of the setting sun stole into the room, illuminating with a sudden glory the bare walls and comfortless surroundings, and throwing into strong relief the two figures which gave life to the picture. The doctor's frank, good-humored face, slight, easy figure, and air of careless good breeding could not have been out of place under any circumstances; but the other seemed strangely in unison with, and yet in contradiction to, his surroundings. His muscular frame might have served as a model for strength and beauty—a Hercules in a prison dress! His hands, roughened and hardened by toil, had been as slender and well-shaped as the doctor's own. His face, bronzed by exposure to all weathers, was still high-bred and refined—aquiline features, clear, brave eyes, and, above all, the close cropped hair of a convict. He had that hair of reserve, totally distinct from rudeness, which only well-bred people possess, and which impresses even the most vulgar and obtuse.

Though the sensitive mouth betrayed his delicate nervous organization, nothing could be more stoical than the composure with which he bore the torture he was suffering.

"Why on earth, man, don't you say something, or cry out?" exclaimed the doctor, half impatiently.

"That's not my way, sir."

Noticing the gathering whiteness round his patient's lips, the doctor hastily poured something in a glass, and, bidding him drink it, went quickly on with his work. After a few minutes' silence, he glanced up suddenly.

"What's that?"—pointing to a small blue figure on the brawny wrist.

"That? O! my crest. I did it when I was a boy," said the man, indifferently.

"Your crest?"

"Did I say that?"—and a flush crept over his face. "I must have been dreaming; people do dream sometimes, don't they?"

The doctor did not answer, but, looked keenly at him, as he turned away his head with a short embarrassed laugh.

"What is your name?"

"No. 411."

"I don't mean that; I mean your name," persisted the doctor.

"Jim Brown."

Dr. Harris laughed. "Jim Brown! Why don't you say, Bill Scroggins? One name would suit you about as well as the other."

411 frowned slightly. "Why should I tell you my name?"

"I'm sure I don't know," was the frank answer; "unless because I want you to. The crest on your arm is very like my own. I thought, perhaps, we were related."

"And if we were? You wouldn't own me."

"Why not? I am not a bad fellow in my way, neither do I think you are. Why shouldn't I own you?"

The man raised himself on his arm, and looked searchingly in the doctor's face.

"A convict?" he said, slowly.

"Well," said the doctor, dryly, "I don't see much society except convicts, at present, and I can't say but what I like them as well as I do those who think themselves a good deal better. I've found out it isn't always the worst that are caught by any means. I'm a 'radical,' you must know," he added, quaintly, "and very much disapproved of by the family."

411 looked out into the gathering darkness for some minutes, and then said, quietly:

"Well, sir, if you care to hear a convict's story, sit down awhile. I've never told it to any one, and I don't know why I should tell it to you; but the mood's on me, and I might as well talk as think, may be; and then you've guessed my secret partly—at least, you know I'm not Jim Brown"—and a smile flashed across his face. "How old do you think I am?" he continued.

Dr. Harris looked at the powerful frame of the man—at the strong, hard lines in his face.

"Between forty and fifty, I should say."

"Thirty-six, yesterday. I was twenty-four the day I was sentenced; a pleasant way of celebrating one's birthday, wasn't it? There was a lot of stuff in the papers about my 'youth,' and my being so 'hardened.' Did they think I was going to beg for mercy?—not I. I've been out here twelve years now, and I've escaped twice and been caught again; but I'll try it once more, some time."

"You ought not tell me that," said the doctor smiling.

"Why not? They watch me all the time any way. Just give me some water, will you? Thanks. Well, I ought to commence with my name, I suppose. It is Edward Tracy. I was the second son of a Northumberland squire, who had just enough money to keep up the place for my brother, and no more. A fine old place it was, and the only thoroughly happy days I can look back to were spent there. That was when I was a boy—home for the holidays, eager about cricket and foot-ball, and to whom a gun and the range of the rabbit warren were perfect happiness. After a while, it was unpleasant enough. My brother—a lazy, good-looking fellow, who knew how to ride and shoot, and only that—was the idol of my mother and sisters. All deferred to him except little Mary, my pet, who used to follow me round like a kitten. Poor little girl! I wonder if she thinks of me now. Younger sons in a poor family have a hard time of it. I only wonder more don't go to the bad than do. Brought up as gentlemen they are then thrown on their own resources, to live by their wits, either in some beggarly profession, or as hangers-on where there are any rich relations. They must put up with being snubbed and thrown over, whenever they come in the way—made use of and then cast aside; at least, such was my experience. I was proud and passionate, and so felt these things more than others, I dare say. I wanted to go into the army, but my father said he couldn't afford it—I 'would be always getting into debt,' etc.—and so I was apprenticed to a London barrister—a great, pompous man, whom I cordially detested before a month was out. He had a way of aggravating me whenever we came in contact that used to make me long for an excuse to pitch him down-stairs. I believe in presentiments. I knew that man would injure me some day. I saw more trickery and underhand dealing while in that office than I had ever seen in my life before. Mr. Pierson was a man of tact, not talent. He had gained several good cases, which made his reputation, and he had a way of making people believe that if black was not just white, it was certainly gray, which proved very useful to him.

"I was about twenty-two when I went into Kent for a few weeks, partly on business for Mr. Pierson, and partly to visit an uncle of mine. Am I tiring you, sir, with this long story?"

"Not at all, Tracy; go on."

411 started at the unfamiliar name, which the doctor slightly emphasized. His breath came quickly, and his voice was husky when he spoke again:

"Would you think, now, that a man could hear his own name so seldom, that when it was spoken as you spoke mine, it could make the past come back like the great wave, almost blotting out the present? I haven't heard my name for more than ten years," he went on musingly. "I don't wonder it sounds strange to me. It was in the summer when I went to Kent; the time for 'falling in love,' as it is called, and, of course, I did it. I don't wonder at myself, even now, when I remember all that has passed. We were thrown very much together. Lucy was an orphan, living with a rich maiden aunt, whose place adjoined my uncle's. I had always a fondness for playing the part of protector; and she was a clinging, dependent little thing, with long golden curls and a delicate pink-and-white daisy face. I had never cared for any girl before, and from the first I loved her madly. It's the 'old, old story,' and I needn't make a fool of myself again by telling it to you. Before I went back to town, we had exchanged rings, and she had promised to love me through eternity. A lengthy eternity it proved!

"Our engagement was to remain a secret until I should become a great lawyer, and then I was to claim her. This was Lucy's idea. I wanted to speak to her aunt, but she begged me not, giving a dozen different reasons for my silence. I believe, even then, she thought it best not to bind herself too closely; but, of course, I never suspected this, for, with all my faults, I had always been perfectly honest and truthful. In the winter, Mr. Pierson told me that the business I had been attending to had now to be completed, and that he was going down himself. I was, of course, very anxious to go, but he did not give me the chance. Lucy met him at a couple of dinners, and, from what she said, I knew he had been very attentive to her. He was a good-looking man, about forty, and could make himself very agreeable when he chose to do so. I wrote to Lucy immediately, telling her what I thought of him. She replied, accusing me of being jealous, and saying she was sure I was prejudiced against Mr. Pierson, who had spoken very highly of me, and to whom I found she had confided the whole story of our engagement. I was very angry, and wrote rather harshly to her, I fancy, for I remember she told me I 'did not love her as I once did.' That was our first quarrel and was soon made up, and for a few weeks we corresponded as usual. Mr. Pierson returned to London, but went back again to Kent in a week or two. He said he was collecting evidence for an important case.

"Soon I noticed that Lucy's letters grew shorter and shorter, and finally one came saying that she 'had been thinking over our foolish engagement, and as there was no prospect of my being able to support her, she had come to the conclusion that for the sake of us both it had better be broken.'

"I know every word of that cool, heartless letter now. One remembers such things. Very soon after, I heard of her engagement to Mr. Pierson. I was a gentleman, and he was a snob; but he had money, and I hadn't."

"'What's a gentleman born? Is it a shillin's an' pence?'" quoted the doctor, softly.

"Eh!—what's that?"

"Only a quotation from the Yorkshire Farmer; go on."

"Well, of course I was furious, but what good did that do me? I thought if I only had money, I would find some means of revenge; but money was just what I hadn't got. About that time, I met a man calling himself St. John. He was clever and well educated, and seemed to read all my wild, restless longings at a glance. He led me from bad to worse, till it ended in forgery; then he turned king's evidence, and I was locked up. I was always very strong, and finding one of the bars loose, I wrenched it out, and dropped from my window one dark night, and escaped. On my way to the sea, I met this man—St. John. I might have got off if I could have let him alone, but I couldn't. I stopped him; he taunted me with my disgrace; told me that Mr. Pierson had known of the plan to ruin me. 'The young lady throwing you over was a prime trump in our hand,' he added, with a leer. I warned him to be silent; but he, as if blind to his danger, exasperated me in every way possible. I grappled with him, and remembering a trick I had learned at school, soon threw him. My hands were on his throat. A half-minute more, and the earth would have been rid of one sordid wretch; but his cries had been heard by some men in a neighboring field, and I was overpowered. This man—a ruined gamester, once a gentleman—had changed me from an honest, honorable lad, to a felon, and then, disregarding 'the honor' which is said to exist even 'among thieves,' threw me over to save himself. I would be content to give five years of my life—nay, more, I would be content to add five years to my life—could it purchase that one half-minute of which I was robbed.

"My family disowned me, and made no attempt even to procure counsel for me. All forsook me except little Mary, from whom I got a tear-stained letter inclosing a five-pound note, her quarterly allowance, and telling me that she would never forget me. My father had forbidden any of them to write to me, or even mention my name; but Mary had disobeyed. 'It can't be wrong to write to you, dear,' she said, 'for you are my own brother, always.'

"There was a flaw in the evidence, which my counsel took advantage of, but Mr. Pierson worked against him privately, collecting evidence for the crown, and I was convicted. Heaven grant that there may not be many poor wretches who leave old England with the feelings with which I left it. If I had had the opportunity, I would have put an end to my miserable existence. I was taken in a cab, strongly guarded, from the jail to the wharf. We passed one of the parks on our way. I had been in prison for some time, and the fresh green grass, the trees, the flowers, had never looked so beautiful as now, when I knew I was looking on them for the last time. I thought of the hedge-rows white with blossoms, in Northumberland; the larks singing overhead; Mary perhaps in our favorite nook in the orchard, weeping bitter tears as a last good-bye to 'her handsome Teddy,' as she fondly called me. No wonder my heart swelled when I thought of those who in the sight of God were guilty of my crime.

"As we went down the dock, a child passed us with a bunch of cowslips. Just two years before I had gathered them for Lucy in the green Kentish lanes! The child looked up wistfully, as I passed; presently she ran after us, and put her cowslip in my hand. That was the drop too much in the cup already; to save my life I could not have kept back the tears which rolled over my cheeks. I was handcuffed, but one of my guards thrust a handkerchief into my hand, with a few cheering words gruffly said. That touch of sympathy, and the child's gift, saved me from utter despair. That was the last I saw of England. My life here has been the same, day after day, except the few nights I spent in the bush, the two times I got off. They mostly let me alone now. I keep by myself, and I've never told a word of this before. I had almost forgotten I wasn't 'Jim Brown,' until to-day. Did you hear how I hurt my arm?"

"One of the men told me you were helping to raise a heavy stone, and that you let the lever slip in some way, and so got your arm crushed."

"That's true as far as it goes; a gang of us were working on the road when a carriage passed. I looked up as I stepped out of the way, and who do you think I saw?—Lucy and her husband! She was looking just the same as ever, only prouder. I was so near I could have touched her dress. She looked calmly at me—I was only a convict, covered with the dust from her carriage wheels. If she had recognized me, the color would have faded a little from her pink cheeks, I think. I wonder if she remembers the letter I wrote her, before I was transported. I told her some home truths then. She knows who to blame for my wasted—worse than wasted life.

"Twelve years didn't seem much to me. I looked after the carriage like one stunned. The lever slipped from my hand—you saw my arm. I didn't think of it, until I found I couldn't lift it. Mr. Pierson has got some high appointment here, some one said. Of course his wife will be feted and flattered. I wonder how she would like to be reminded of that summer in Kent. How would she like if I should stop her carriage, and remind her of the time she swore to love me forever, or how often her bright head has rested on my shoulder. I can feel the thrill of her soft lips yet on my cheek. There, that's all. Do you believe in justice? I don't. The cause of evil should be attacked; now, it is only the victim. That woman is more guilty to-day than I. She drove me mad—and yet she rides by in her carriage, respected and admired; while I, in my prison dress, can never be anything but what I am—411."—Overland Monthly.

What a Blind Man Sees.

Nature struggles hard to make up for any defects in the senses, and she gives to the blind a certain power to see when the eyes give no help. A blind man says:

"Whether within a house, in the open air, whether walking or standing still, I can tell, though quite blind, when I am opposite an object, and can perceive whether it be tall or short, slender or bulky. I can also detect whether it be a solitary object or a continuous fence, whether it be a close fence or composed of open rails, and often whether it be a wooden fence, a brick or stone wall, or a quick-set hedge. I cannot usually perceive objects, if much lower than my shoulders, but sometimes very low objects can be detected. This may depend on the nature of the object, or on some abnormal state of the atmosphere. The currents of air can have nothing to do with this power, as the state of the mind does not directly affect it; the sense of hearing has nothing to do with it, as when snow lies thick on the ground objects are more distinct, although the footfall cannot be heard. I seem to perceive objects through the skin of my face, and to have the impressions directly transmitted to the brain. The only part of my body possessing this power is my face; this I have ascertained by suitable experiments. Stopping my ears does not interfere with it, but covering my face with a thick veil destroys it altogether. None of the five senses have anything to do with the existence of this power, and the circumstances above named induce me to call this unrecognized sense by the name of 'Facial Perception.'"

A Romance.

That the Bonapartes were not to royalty born seems evidenced by the obscurity of certain branches of the family. London has for a year or so sheltered one of the fallen branches of the family—a "royal milliner"—and our own Baltimore contains another—a little old woman with feeble, tottering frame, and a wizened, wrinkled face, wigged and spectacled. On the promenade the old lady uses her attendant's arm as a support, and passes, apparently without notice, the groups of talkers that stare or point her out to a stranger. If some of the more deferent salute her, she straightens for a moment, and returns it with a touch of the old grace that wrought her fame and her misfortune. She is not a celebrity of to-day; her story stretches back full sixty years, to the days when a handsome pusillanimous exile married her on his own caprice, and repudiated her at the beck of a brother; for she is Madame Jerome Bonaparte, as she has always proudly styled herself, once the wife, now the widow of Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia. Beautiful, brilliant and aristocratic, Miss Patterson married him, then an unknown stranger, against the wishes and counsel of all her friends. She is now old and peculiar. Her son Jerome, who never saw his father, is dead, but his widow and child—a third Jerome, with unmistakable Bonaparte face—are living in Baltimore.

A Strange Freak.

According to the Baltimore American, on Monday afternoon a gentleman of that city, while apparently laboring under an aberration of mind, rushed into the gallery of one Mosher, a photographer, and demanded to have his picture taken. Mr. Mosher was absent, but his assistant, Mr. Schweikert, was about to make the necessary arrangements, when the man rushed out of the front window, and jumping from one awning slat to another, at the imminent risk of falling to the ground, he reached an adjoining house, where he smashed in one of the second story windows, and then turning round, ran back to Mr. Mosher's place, and jumping in grabbed Mr. Schweikert, exclaiming "I have just killed two men, and now I am going to kill you." He struggled desperately to throw Mr. Schweikert over the balusters of the stairs, but as this was not a part of the photographer's programme, he made a determined resistance. The noise of the breaking window had attracted a crowd, and several persons rushed to the assistance of Schweikert. The maniac was secured, and, after a sharp struggle, taken to the police station. The maniacal spasm having gone by, he promptly paid for the damages that had been done, deposited his fine, and was allowed to go about his business.

Mansions of the Departed.

The New York correspondent of the Boston Journal says: "Among the elegant residences at Harlem are two that attract general notice. Both stand on Fifth avenue; both are large, spacious, and elegant. The grounds are expansive and laid out in fine taste regardless of expense. Both are boarded up and remain in an unfinished state. Before both, the curious stand and look intensely on these dwellings. One of these houses was erected by Connolly, the absconding Comptroller; the other by Genet, the leader of the ring. The interior of both are finished in exquisite style. Rosewood, satin-wood, box-wood, and black walnut were used in abundance. Genet's stable has over it a banqueting house of matchless beauty. The walls were run up, the brown-stone front put on, the towers gilded, the fresco and inside adornments put on. And bills, as they accrued, were sent to the city-hall and charged in the court-house account. Where now are the owners for whom these fine mansions were named? Fugitives and vagabonds in foreign lands. 'He that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and his end shall be a fool.'"

Particulars of the Lynching of Negroes in Gibson County, Tenn.

Trenton, Tenn. (Aug. 26), Dispatch to the Memphis Avalanche.

Yesterday morning City-Marshal Dungan and Constables W. W. Senter and Spence Eldridge, with an escort of forty men, well armed, brought sixteen negroes from Picketsville, and lodged them in the jail at this place for safe keeping. The negroes are the ones who had a preliminary examination before Justices Jordan, Fly, and Hunt, of Picketsville, yesterday afternoon. They were a portion of the party which fired on Monroe Morgan and James Warren, two young white men, last Saturday night, as they were going to their homes, and when about three miles from Picketsville. At a preliminary examination two of the negroes confessed to the fact that a general uprising of the negroes, for the purpose of killing all the whites, was intended.

This morning, between one and two o'clock, about 100 disguised men, armed with double-barreled shot guns, rifles and revolvers, rode quietly into town and surrounded the jail in which the negroes mentioned were confined. The sheriff and jailer, both of whom were on duty, were called out and the keys of the prisoners' cells demanded. To this demand the officers refused to accede, and declared their intention of holding the negroes subject to the action of the law.

The leaders of the masked men leveled their weapons at the officers, and said in emphatic tones, "We have come for those niggers, and intend getting them; turn over the keys, or we will blow your brains out." As their very action looked like business, there was no more hesitation beyond a formal protest, and the keys were turned over.

Going to the cells, the masked men unlocked the doors, and with presented and cocked weapons, ordered the negroes out. The order was tremblingly complied with, and the poor frightened black wretches marched into the corridor. There they were tied together with strong pieces of rope in twos.

The disguised men marched the negroes into the street. They were placed in the center of an irregular hollow square, and the line of march was taken up, leading out on what is known as the Huntington road. The strictest silence was preserved, and, until the maskers were well out of Trenton at least, they preserved their incognito in such a manner as to defy detection.

After going about half a mile, the mob halted, and six of the negroes, three couples, were ordered out of the ranks. They were cut loose at one side of the road, and told to go, and go quick. The negroes started on a run, when a volley from along the whole line cut them down, all falling at the first fire. The mob must have supposed that all were killed, as they moved on without stopping to inspect the condition of their victims. When found later this morning by a delegation of citizens, four were wounded, one supposed to be mortally, the others but slightly.

From this scene of carnage the masked men and their remaining victims marched on about 2 miles further up the river bottom road, where another halt was made. Then the remaining ten negroes were ordered out. Like their brethren who had gone before, they were cut loose and told to move themselves. The poor frightened wretches tried to, but ere they could make their second jump toward life and liberty they were shot down. This time the maskers took better aim for they dropped every of the fleeing negroes in their tracks.

False Hair.

The Breton peasant girl, for a gaudy handkerchief or flashy pair of earrings, is willing to sacrifice her beautiful hair. Tying his horse to a spreading tree, the hair-monger, armed with a formidable pair of scissors, soon attracts a crowd of village maidens, who, after a little haggling, submit to be sheared like so many sheep. After dexterously and gracefully clipping the locks, he deposits them, neatly tied, in his baskets, and Jeannie is liberated, to be greeted with shouts and laughter from her companions, for so well has the work been done that her head has the appearance of being shaved. Nowhere but in Brittany will the girls submit to this wholesale cropping, insisting upon preserving a few thin locks, at least, of nature's fairest gifts. In that province, however, where the custom is for women to wear hideous, close-fitting caps, hair which would be the glory of American ladies is useless, and it is there that the hair merchant reaps his richest harvest.

To remove tattoo marks from the skin, blister the part with a plaster a little larger than the mark; then keep the place open for a week with an ointment; finally dress it to get well. As the new skin grows the tattoo marks will disappear.

ANNA S. GETSINGER, of Honesdale, Pa., writes the following: "After suffering for nearly two years from neuralgia in the breast, passing up into the throat, face and head, I was entirely cured and restored to health by using Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial."—Com.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL
Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL
DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE OR ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

The Black Hills—Return of Custer's Expedition.

[Fort Lincoln Cor. Chicago Inter-Ocean.]

The Black Hills expedition under command of Gen. Custer arrived here this evening at sunset, having been absent about sixty days, and having traveled nearly 1,200 miles. The exploration of the hills was completed about the 17th of August, when the command left Bear Butte at the northern range of the hills, traveling northward at a remarkably rapid rate. The march was a very hard and exhaustive one, but was endured with wonderful fortitude.

The results of the expedition are even greater than had been hoped by its projectors, and the discovery of gold alone is sufficient to recompense the Government for the outlay. No serious difficulty was experienced from Indians interfering, and the command was unusually healthy during the entire reconnoissance, four men only being lost by death. Everybody was delighted with the trip, and the results are so satisfactory as to leave no cause for regret. The gold discoveries have awakened an interest second only to the great California excitement of '49, and parties on the frontier are already thinking of starting out as soon as an expedition can be formed and equipped. Gen. Custer found on his arrival home hundreds of letters of inquiry from all parts of the country, and several from persons of prominence, concerning the results of the prospecting. The fact that gold is there, he remarked, is certain as the law of gravity, and the fact that the discoveries were not carried to an extent greater than they were was owing to the brief time allowed the expedition. At a dozen or more different places gold was found. At one place in particular, Custer's Park, of which I have written, it yielded in paying quantities from the grass roots down. A shaft eight feet deep was sunk several feet from the bed of a creek, and the excavations panned by hundreds of persons who had no experience and no tools except what their ingenuity suggested, and in no case did the color fail to appear, and frequently a generous amount would be gathered and carried off. Several pans yielded dust estimated above a dollar. Practical miners who superintended the work declare that had the bed-rock of the creek been reached the yield must have been marvelous, but although the greater part of the night was spent in digging, the place had to be left in the morning for other parties to finish. Gold-bearing quartz was found in perfect mountain piles, but we had no means of blasting and whatever the rocks contained in their bosoms could not be reached. Several specimens of quartz gold, however, were obtained. Gen. Custer is asked in the letters referred to whether the Government will protect or assist the entrance of parties to the Black Hills. He wishes me to say that while he has no policy to dictate to the Government in regard to the Indian treaties, he considers that the time has come when it must be decided whether the dog-in-the-manger mode of the Indians will be tolerated. In his report he will express the opinion that the agricultural and mineral resources of the Black Hills are unsurpassed in the United States, and will advise an immediate decision upon the question of occupancy. Gen. Forsyth, of Gen. Sheridan's staff, coincides entirely with Gen. Custer's opinion in regard to the Indian question; and, as to the gold, says he has himself seen evidence enough to convince him that the country within the Black Hills is as rich minerally as any portion of Montana or Colorado.

A Great Velocipede Race in England.

On Aug. 3 the race for the Captaincy and sub-Captaincy of the Middlesex Bicycle Club took place from Bath to London, a distance of 106 miles. The start was from the front of the Abbey, and all the competitors were up to time. Mr. Sparrow (who accompanied the race) started them at eight minutes past 5 o'clock, and, owing to the number of people assembled, there was some difficulty in passing through the crowd. In a few minutes, however, they were out of the town, and the running was very sharp. Walker and Tyne were leading. Some of the competitors had to dismount and walk up Box Hill. They all passed through Chippenham at the rate of 14 miles an hour, and Caine (19 miles) was reached in 1¼ hours. They passed through in the following order: Walker, Leaver, Tyne, Percy, Goulding, Spencer and Peance. No stoppage was made until Marlborough was reached (32 miles), Walker, Lyne and Leaver coming in together, the distance got over in 2¼ hours. Spencer here being passed Sparrow and Goulding. From Marlborough to Newbury (18 miles) Walker and Tyne led the way. At Hungerford, Goulding's machine gave way through striking a large projecting stone while going down hill. After an attempt to repair it he got as far as Thatcham, where he was compelled to take the train for London.

Walker and Tyne performed the journey from Bath to Newbury (50 miles) in 4¼ hours. Leaver and Percy were making good time as far as Woodhampton, but soon after Leaver dropped behind, and was passed by Spencer at Reading. Walker soon after made a spurt, and Tyne saw no more of him. At Twyford Spencer overhauled Percy, and they had a smart race as far as Colnbrook, where Percy stopped to rest. The arrivals at the club-room at Kensington were as follows: Walker, 3:13; Tyne, 3:50; Spencer, 5:12; Percy, 6:58; Leaver, 7:35. Walker had been somewhat jaded at Hounslow, but, upon his arrival at the goal, he started, after a few minutes' rest, to meet the remainder of the competitors. The time made by Walker is one hour less than the fastest stage-coach ever performed the journey from London to Bath in, and is also the best bicycle traveling on record, the pace of the winner exceeding 10¼ miles per hour, including stoppages. Mr. Sparrow, the starter, although upward of 50 years of age, followed the competitors on his bicycle, and performed the whole journey in 15 hours, including stoppages.—London Times.

Vegetable Instinct.

If a pail of water be placed within six inches of either side of the stem of a pumpkin or vegetable marrow, it will in the course of the night approach it, and will be found in the morning with one of the leaves on the water. The experiment may be continued every night, until the plant begins to fruit. Place a drop within six inches of a young convolvulus, or scarlet runner it will find it, although the drop may be shifted daily. After it has twined some distance up the direction, it will return to its original position or die in the attempt; yet notwithstanding, if two of the plants grow near each other, and have no stake around which they can entwine, one of them will alter the direction of the spiral, and they will twine around each other.

Duhamel placed some kidney beans in a cylinder of moist earth; after a short time they began to generate, of course sending the plume toward the light and the root into the soil. After a few days the cylinder was then turned one-fourth around, and again and again this was repeated until an entire revolution of the cylinder was completed. The beans were taken out of the earth; the plume and radicle had bent to accommodate themselves to every revolution, one in its efforts to ascend, the other to descend, and had formed a perfect spiral. Although the natural tendency of the roots is downward, if the soil beneath be dry, and any damp substance be above, the roots will ascend to meet it.

Old as History.

Love of dress has ever distinguished women. The ancient Hebrew women were not only distinguished for the number and richness of their dresses, but the quantity of ornaments and jewelry was soon carried to such an extent that it became necessary to protest against it. There is no doubt that, as the intercourse between the Jewish and other nations increased, the ladies felt no longer satisfied with primitive simplicity. The fashions of the clever Egyptians, the elegant Phœnicians, and the luxurious Persians, were soon eagerly sought after and produced. Even patient Job got impatient at the dresses, and all of us have read that magnificent, bold denunciation of Isaiah, as with withering sarcasm he denounces the "women of the period" living for nothing else but dress and flirtation, and having but one desire, "to see and to be seen." Job is dead; but the custom he reviled still lives.

Some Facts About Eels.

Eels, it has been proved, have both sexes in one, and spawn somewhat after the manner of other fish. Like the turtle they can travel out of the water for some distance, from stream to stream, so that in almost every rivulet, however small, they can be found. The gills or the breathing organs are covered up by a most delicate curtain which cats like a valve and a reservoir for water, thus enabling the fish to take in a gill-full of water, so to speak, to keep its gills moist during the time it is out of the water. It has a heart in the tail, the same as it is known to exist in the salmon, with pulsations at about ninety-four the minute.

AN ACT OF JUSTICE.—Doubting Castle was a sad stumbling block in the path of Bunyan's Christian, though it couldn't bar his way to Truth. We can sympathize with the Pilgrim, for Doubt always besets us when we are asked to believe anything particularly extraordinary. Consequently, when we heard, some eighteen months ago, that a physician in California had compounded, from the juices and extracts of certain herbs found there, a medicine that cured almost every variety of blood disease, we were incredulous. Since then we have had opportunities of testing the accuracy of the report, and are free to admit that our doubts have vanished. Seeing what we have seen, knowing what we know, it is impossible for us to question the remedial properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS. That this famous Vegetable Tonic, Alterative and Antiseptic is a specific for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Chronic Constipation, Fever and Ague, Bilious Intermittents, Scrofulous Taint in the Blood, Incipient Consumption, Local and General Debility, Rheumatism, Sick Headache, and Diseases of the Kidneys, seems to be a matter beyond the pale of controversy—a fixed fact in medical history. The statements of friends, in whose veracity and intelligence we have full confidence, corroborated by our own personal observation, compel us to admit the surpassing merits of the preparation. 7

DR. PIERCE'S Compound Extract of Smart-Weed, or Water Pepper, is not recommended as a cure-all. It should not be classed with the patent nostrums of the day, compounded by Quacks, "Indian Doctors," (so-called), and those possessing no knowledge of the delicate and intricate structure of the human system nor of chemistry and scientific preparation of medicines. No patent has been obtained or asked for upon it. It is not a secret medicine, the chief ingredient being made known in the name chosen to designate it. But it is claimed to be a superior Extract, made in a scientific manner, from fresh plants and roots, by a cold process, heat, which is used in making all other Extracts of Smart-Weed, being objectionable, as it destroys most of the medical virtues that reside in the plant, as stated in the "American Dispensatory" and by other most excellent authorities. In the modest looking little weed, found growing by the roadside, is found a more efficacious remedy, when combined with Jamaica Ginger and other modifying agents, for Diarrhea, Dysentery, Summer Complaint, Pain and Colic, than has heretofore been known to the medical profession. Dr. Pierce's Extract is sold by druggists.

The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly chin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxurious tresses, they become irresistible.

Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions, lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel-plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

So says the chemist; so says the physician; so says the great American public of the nineteenth century. Heed ye, then, and be not without a bottle in the house. Before life is imperiled, deal judiciously with the symptoms. Remember that the slight internal disorder of to-day may become an obstinate, incurable disease to-morrow. Sold by all druggists.

Seemiller, Greencastle, Ind., says: "A part of bottle of Kress Fever Tonic cured me of an obstinate Ague; my little girl and her friend, took the remainder for a case of four weeks standing: there is nothing left of the disease with either of us, nor have any bad effects followed the use of the Tonic. I regard it as the best Ague remedy I know of and have since sold it to my customers with great success. It always attends strictly to business, and is harmless so far as I have observed." The Vagabond Stage.

An old man of very actice physiognomy, answering to the name of Jacob Wilmot, was brought to the police court. His clothes looked as if they might have been brought second hand in his youthful prime, for they had suffered more from the rubs of the world than the proprietor had him self.

'What business?'

'None; I'm a traveler.'

'A vagabond, perhaps."

'You are not far wrong. Travelers and vagabonds are about the same thing. The difference is that the latter travels without money and the former with brains."

'Where have you traveled?'

'All over the Continent.

'For what purpose?'

'Observation.'

'What have you observed?'

'A little to commend, much to censure, and a great deal to laugh at."

'Humph! what do you like?'

'A handsome woman that will stay at home, an eloquent preacher who will preach short sermons, a good writer that will not write too much, and a fool that has sense enough to hold his tongue.'

'What do you censure?"

'A man that marries a girl for her fine clothing, a youth who studies medicine while he has the use of his hands, and the people who will elect a drunkard to office.'

"What do you laugh at?

'I laugh at a man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualifications and qualitief do not merit.'

He was dismissed.

Didn't Kiss Her.

A gentleman who has been recently traveling in the lower counties, tells the following amusing story: He was stopping over night at a house where the partition walls were particularly thin. The adjoining rooms was occupied by a mother and her daughter. On retiring the mother began to rebuke the daughter for an alleged partiality to somebody named John, which soft impeachment, the daugher denied vigorously.

But, said the mother, I saw you kissing him at the cow pen yesterday morning, Amanda.

No, ma he wasn't kissing me at all.

Why did you have your head so close up to his for? You deceivin' critter.

Well, you see ma I had been eating pitallas (the fruit of a species of cactus) and you see ma I got some of the prickles in my lips,—and—

And what you wicked, wicked critter

And I couldn't get them out myself, you know, and John pulled them out with hes teeth, but he didn't kiss me nary time.

The news from the last riot in Louisiana shows clearly where the great trouble lies in southern society. What threatened to be a bloody struglo between the races has subsided with but little violence, and peace was obtained by arresting a few of the ringleaders among the negroes. These men are evidently white and are officials under the unsurying state government.—Among them are numbered a sheriff, a tax collector, a register and a district attorney. It is such desperate rascals who thrive by turbulence that keep society in a ferment.

Reports have been circulated that Hon. Theophilus Crumpacker, who represented Porty county in the last Legislature, voted for the infamous Legislative Salary Grab Law, but whether he took the increased pay or paid it back into the Treasure we are not informed. There is no record to that effect.

HOW WE PAY OUR TAXES.

A Few Facts for Men of Small Incomes.

There is no question of government which so intimately concerns every citizen as the amount and the fairness of the tax he pays for its support. Yet there is no question so little thought of, or respecting which there is at once such ignorance and such inconsiderateness manifested as the subject of national taxation. Two-thirds of our enormous revenue, it is pretty, well known is derived from taxes upon imported commodities. This portion of the revenue, amounting to nearly two millions of dollars a year, is collected on over three thousand articles of commerce. About three quarters of it is levied, too, upon articles of prime necessity in universal consumption among the people, and therefor commonly known as the necessities of life. These articles are iron, cotten and woolen, and their verious fabrics, glass earthenware, boots and shoes, sugar and salt, besides many other of minor importance to these.

Let us see how much the man of family contributes, by this enforced system of taxation, called indirect taxes to the support of the general government. We will take as a fair basis for the calculation a man with an income of fifteen hundred per annum, and maintaining five or six children on an annual expenditure of $1,500. Such a family will consume of imported commodities, or of articles whose cost is largely enhanced by the tariff laws, at least five hundred dolars worth every year. Let us look at a few of the items of family supplies consumed in every household. First, (and largest next to food and shelter) comes clothing of all kinds. Cotten linen and woolen stuffs for garments for the wife and daughters, and material for coats, vests etc. or else ready made clothing for himself and his boys, he must have,—Stockings, and underware of woolen or cotten are among the imperative wants. So are also hats caps and bonnets. All these goods cost in United States almost double what the same articles can be bought for in Europe, solely because of the enormous tariff imposed upon them for the pretended benefit of American manufactures.—The duty actually levied on cotton and woolen goods varies all the way alon from 32 1-2 to 85 per cent. On bleaced cotton it is 45 per cent; on thread it is 79 per cent; on cotton hosery it is 31 1-2 per cent; on balmorals it is 85 per cent; on flannels it is 86 per cent; on woolen hosiery it is 70 per cent; and on ready made clothing it is 45 per cent. On a consumption of $300 worth of the verious kinds and qualities of clothing worn in a family in moderate circumstances, we may fairly estimate the tax paid to the governmet in the shape of duty at $125, and this is a moderate average

Boots and shoes will be worn to the amount of at least $50, and the duty on the verious material entering into this manufacture will enhance the price at least 30 per cent, or say ten dolars on the amount used.

Carpets (not renewed often) will cost however inexpensive, at least $20 a year on the averave. The duty on these enormous, and enhances the cost all of 50 per cent. We will call the tax paid on carpets $7, Combs, brushes and fancy articles, together with paper and stationery for the children at school, will cost at least $15, and the average duty being 40 per cent., the government will collect about $4 on this item also. Soaps of all kinds will be used to the amount of $10, paying a tax of about $5 more. Salt, pepper, &c. will cost say $10 with a government tax of not less than 5. Drugs and spirits, however sparingly used, will be likely to cost rather over than under $30, of which the taxgatherer's share will be say 10. Sugar is an indispensability, and about forty dollar's worth of the various grades will be used by our economical family of 7 or 8, on which the tax will amount to six dollars.

Let us now recapitulate the estimate above made, adding the average of all other family expenditures, on which no tax is paid to the government: —

	Am't expended	Am't of tax
Clothing	$300	$125
Rent	300	......
Fuel and lights	100	......
Sugar	40	6
Boots and shoes	50	10
Towels and bedding	30	15
Kitchen furniture	30	10
Iron utensils, etc	20	6
Tea and coffee	40	free
Carpets	20	7
Combs, fancy articles, etc	15	4
Soaps	10	4
Drugs, medicines, etc	30	10
Salt, mustard and spices	10	5
Furniture (renewal, etc)	30
Incidentals	75	25
Total	$1,500	$227

The proportions of expenditures under the various heads will of course vary with different persons, and we have given what will be accepted as a fair approximate average.

Here we have a net annual tax upon expenditure equivalent to rather more than $150 on the $1,000 paid into the Treasury of the United States by every father of a family in the land. A tax so enormous, if it were only laid directly either upon income or expenditure, would justly be considered equivalent to confiscation of property. Yet what difference is there either in principle or in result between a direct tax so levied and this draining of the resources of the people through our oppressive revenue system, which begins and ends with protection to the few at the expense of the many?—Cincinnati Commercial.

An Exciting Scene.

Yesterday afternoon about six o'clock a fine bay horse, attached to a light wagon, was being driven along Kearney street by two men. When near Sutter street a small English bulldog, weighing eighteen or twenty pounds, made a spring from the sidewalk and tried to catch the horse by the nose. Missing him, the dog fell under the horse's feet, and in an instant caught him by the right fore leg, just above the knee, where he held on with grip of death. The horse rared and plunged and stamped. The men in the wagon, having all they could do to control the animal in the crowded throughfare, dare not attempt to get out to fight the dog off. Finally, with a violent stamp and a sudden dropping to his knees, the horse shook the vicious brute off his leg, but in an instant he was caught again in the chest. Fastening his teeth in the tough thick hide, the dog hung on like a leech. The poor horse unable to strike him off, bolted across a low pile of lumber at the corner of Sutter and Kearney streets, where he was caught by a dozen men out of a large crowd which he assembled. Some one at this point raised the cry that the dog was mad. That was enough to keep the crowd back and insure fair play. Not a soul would go near, and the horse in several minutes left to fight it out alone. Again, and again did he strike off the tenacious little animal, kicking striking at him with all his force and strength but in vain. He would not desist. Once in a while a hoof would hit the dog and send him reeling in the dust but quicker than lightning he would gather himself up and again fasten his vise-like fangs in the horse's flesh.—"Unfasten that horse's check-rain, and he'll soon fix him with his teeth," shouted another man. Keep away from him, don't touch him don't you see he's mad? was again yelled out; and the crowd stood back. Once the dog sprang, and, clasping the the horse's left fore leg, just as a young bear would climb up a pole, fastened his teeth and held on. The horse snorted with pain and plunged wildly about; he rared, kicked fell on his knees and stampted, but still those sharp white teeth were buried in his flesh, and the cold, sharp eye gleamed with tenacity and vicious hate. Finally, some one got a club and beat the dog vigorously over the head. He would not let go. Then another man got a club and came to the horse's relief. A fierce whack fell on the dog's nose and then the teeth loosened and the fierce little bruit fell under the horse's heels. Again he made a spring, but this time something struck him full in the face. It was an iron-bound hoof, and it came with the force of a trap hammer. Beaten senseless, with the wind knocked completely out of him and a leg broken, the dog went rolling into a pile of rubbish, where his owner picked him up and carried him away in his arms.

The poor horse was completely unstrung. The sweat poured off him in streams and he shook and trembled so that he could scarcely stand. His owner got him some rum and bathed the animal's legs, which were badly cut and lacerated and after a few minuts he got sufficiently quiet to be driven home. The horse is a valuable one, but, unless there is danger of hydrophobia, his injuries are not likely to prove serious. The novel spectacle lasted fully ten minutes and was witnessed by as many as 500 people. The dog is owned by a man in the imploy of the gass company. He is a regular English bull and is said to be one of the best figters on the coast. He is terrible vicious and is usually kept closely muzzled, but on this occasion he did not have his muzzle on.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Radical Frailties.

Mr. Pendleton in the speech last week at Cincinnati, said, Fellow Citizens: "Let not him that girdeth on harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

If I had been in your city last week and attended the Republican Convention, and heard Senator Sherman and General Garfield and Governor Noyes exult in advance over Repuplican victories, when they had just put their battle in array, I would have reminded them of this modest reply of the King of Israel to the boastful Benhaded and recalled to them that, aided by Israel's God, this King ere set of sun "smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Ryrians with great slaughter.

Senator Shurman in exulting and defiant tones, recounted the acheivements of the Republican party. He told us that it had reconstructed the rebellious States and restored peaceful civil society. Is this true? If it is then why do we daily hear of horrible murders and of lawless violence and authless mobs, too strong for the management of local civil authorities?—Why are Federal troops sent to the South under pertense of these disorders but with the real purpose to overawe conservative voters and to carry pending election? If it is true, then these stories are, as it was boasted they should be, "the lightning forged in Louisiana to make it thunder at the North.

He told us that the Republican party had wisely administered the finances and largely paid the debt and reduced taxes and to remove all burdens that production and trade and commerce enjoy unparalleled prosperity

Is this true? Then why is business stagnt and enterprise inactive and labor suffering and men bankrupted and woman starving.

He told us that the tariff was so justely arranged that it brings the largest revenues to the Government, and stimulates the most unexampled increaces of all domestic industries.

Is this true? Then why are the iron-furnaces all idle miners striking against reduced wages, and the farmer complaining of high priced shoes and clothes and utensils?

He told us that the republican party indulged in self-examination and introspection, but of what use is that if it the more closely huge the darling sin and rewards with offices and honors the exponants and the instrument of its frailties and its crimes?

He told us that he had elevated the tone and the capacity of the civil service.

Is this true? Why, then, this universal lowering of the standard of the virtues and decencies of public life? Why, then, universal apprehension that honors the dignities are considered valuable only for their emoluments? Why this great universal belief that offices are held to be the fitting reward of mere personal devotion, to be given in reward for service or flattery or money, and to be held until a larger bid shall demand a transfer? Why is the pure white robe of the candidates become spotted all over the sholders of the elected?

Exulting in his vision of the past history of the Republican party, Mr. Sherman, called up a brighter vision of the future. Turning from his rhapsody, let us read its own promises for the future. It tell us in its platform that it is in favor of protection of contraction, of speedy resumption of specie payments, of free banking, of internal emprovments by Federal authority, of prohibition.

Incidental protection! Gentlemen you know what that means, you have it now. The farmer enjoys it in the enhanced price of salt and sugar and blankets and clothes and plows and harrows and horse-shoes and nails.

The manufacturer enjoys it in the enhanced price he pays for the article of raw material which enters into his consumption.

The producer enjoys it in the tax he pays on every article except his own protected speclaty.

The ship builder enjoys it in having American shipping from the ocean.

Commerce enjoys it in restricted traed and limited business.

Labor enjoys it, for labor being the source of all production and of all wealth, pays in the end all duties,

Poverty enjoys it for poverty is labor ground down by exaction until it has neither the oppertunity, the strength nor the heart to earn a livelihood.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Brooklyn to a Western paper states that there are good reasons for expecting a split in Plymouth Church. Indications to this effect are already apparent. There is part of the congregation not satisfied with the report of the committee on the present attitude of Beecher and the church. They say that Beecher cannot properly resume his ministration at the time announced, the first Sunday in October, so long as the new charges against him remain unanswered and the crim. con. suit is undecided.

THE average of the personal property per capita in the State of Illinois is ascertained to be $105.08, and of all property $436 per capita. Cook county (including Chicago) has $107.13 personal property per capita, and $449.88 all kinds of property....Prof. Winchell, State Geologist of Minnesota, who accompanied the Custer expedition to the Black Hills, has made an official report, in which, after mentioning the fact that gypsum, variegated marble and other minerals were found in the hills, says: "There may be found also other products of the granite rocks. Indeed, the miners that accompanied the expedition report the finding of gold and silver in some of the gulches in the southeastern portion of the hills, though I saw none of the gold, nor did I see any of the auriferous quartz. I have taken the gold reports with a large grain of allowance." Prof. Donaldson, who also accompanied the expedition, entirely coincides with Prof. Winchell on the gold question.

IN the Supreme Court of Wisconsin the injunction case brought by the Attorney-General and Railroad Commissioners to compel the Chicago and Northwestern and Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Companies to comply with the provisions of the Potter law, the court has allowed the injunction, but the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien division is excepted. President Keep, of the Northwestern, has been interviewed by a reporter, and makes the following statement: "In anticipation of the rendering of the present decision the service of the road has been greatly reduced of late. In the shops the workmen now employed put in but nine hours each day and work five days in the week. Those now employed are retained to do such repairing as is absolutely necessary. We are not putting up any new rolling stock, and are making no improvements, and will not do so until our position is better defined by the Supreme Court of the United States. We will also be obliged to reduce the number of trains, and their speed, in proportion to the reduction in rates. This action is not taken in a spirit of opposition, or to punish anybody, but simply to make the earnings of the line cover the running expenses. This decision will put an end to all improvements and stop the building of any more roads in the State, for a long period at least. Should the decision be sustained by the United States Supreme Court, it is possible that all the roads in the State will be operated to some extent, but it would not be like the operation of live property, with some hopes of returns, as has been the case in the past."....The Indians in the Southwest are becoming troublesome. A Topeka special relates two recent cases of murder and scalping perpetrated by them, eight persons being killed and horribly mutilated....A change of some importance has been made in the management of the Illinois Central railroad. What it Was that Changed His Mind.

The man in the First Ward who went home very drunk a few evenings since met his wife at the door. She had been waiting for him. When he attempted to pass her and seek his virtuous couch she flung a pail of slop into his face. "There," said she, "take that and go back to the saloon and spend the rest of the night with kindred spirits. I have cared for a drunken man as long as I propose to." The next day the man signed the pledge, went to work, and a night or two ago took his wife a new dress and a resolution of thanks for having covered him with slops, saying that for years he had been in the habit of filling himself with slops, and that the outside application had brought him to see how mean a part he had been acting. Good for the slop-pail crusade. —Fond du Lac Commonwealth.

BEECHER-TILTON.

The Scandal Revived Again—Second Statement of F. D. Moulton.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Moulton's statement appeared in the late editions of the Graphic, of which an immense number were sold, special editions being also simultaneously published in Boston, Albany, and various cities of the Northeast. The excitement created here by its appearance was not great, the interest in the scandal being greatly wearied out by the long and numerous statements. It appears that after the scene in church, where Moulton narrowly escaped being mobbed, he went home, and at once began to write his statement. He took it when finished to the Graphic office, but it was so violent in language, and so unlike his former statement in tone, that he was urged to submit it to Gen. Butler.

He went to Boston, and Butler, as his counsel, insisted on remodeling the whole statement. This was done only after several days' labor. It is, as printed, a legal argument very strong in many parts, and bears unmistakable touches of Butler's pen. Most of the space is devoted to prolix and needlessly long defenses of Moulton against Beecher's insinuations of blackmail and falsehood, and to the charge that, as the scandal approached a climax, Moulton turned against Beecher to help Tilton. The first part of the statement is devoted to showing that Moulton worked to avoid publicity until the last moment, and that, in the efforts to conciliate and silence Tilton, he was aided until the last moment by not only Beecher, but Tracy. Indeed, Tracy is severely attacked. He is represented as begging Tilton, with tears in his eyes, not to submit a statement charging adultery. This failing, Tracy is pictured as trying to secure an adjournment of the committee, so that Tilton would have no one to present his statement to. This failing, Tracy refused to be present when Tilton was to appear.

Moulton then proceeds to call attention to some of Beecher's alleged misstatements, one of which is the averment that the only copy of Mrs. Tilton's confession was torn to pieces in his own presence on the night of Dec. 30, 1870. Moulton says that paper was delivered into his hands on the night of the meeting of Beecher and Tilton at his house. In regard to this point Moulton says:

When Beecher was first charged with his adultery with Mrs. Tilton, and afterwards when I demanded the retraction from him, he asked me, "What will you do with it if I give it up?" I answered: "I will keep it as I keep the confession of your act—honorably. I will protect it with my life, as I would protect the other with my life." I may be allowed to say here that at this remark I made reference to the pistol in my overcoat pocket, which I always carried in the night, as emphasizing the extremity of my defense of the papers. Yet Mr. Beecher says, "He made no verbal threats, but, opened his overcoat, and, with some emphatic remark, he showed me a pistol." Why misrepresent? Is it possible that he gave his confidence at once to a man who extorted the paper from him with a pistol? Yet Beecher's Committee make a point of this prevarication in their argument for the accused. After the tripartite covenant I handed back that same paper to Tilton at the request of his wife, in order that she might be satisfied and herself destroy it. Now, which of these statements is true? Let cotemperaneous facts and acts answer. It will be remembered that that meeting was on Friday night, the 30th of December, 1870. Mrs. Tilton sent me a note, heretofore published, dated next Saturday morning, in the following words:

MRS. TILTON TO MOULTON.

"SATURDAY MORNING.

"MY DEAR FRIEND FRANK: I want you to do me the greatest possible favor. My letter which you have, and one which I gave Mr. Beecher at his dictation last evening, ought both to be destroyed. Please bring both to me, and I will burn them. Show this note to Theodore and Mr. Beecher. They will see the propriety of this request. Yours truly,

"E. R. TILTON."

The "letter" referred to, of course it will be seen, is the "confession," the only letter I then had of hers referring to this matter. And again, to show that I cannot be either mistaken or untrue, I refer to Mrs. Tilton's note to Beecher of April 21 following:

"FRIDAY, April 21, 1871.

"MR. BEECHER: As Moulton has returned, will you use your influence to have the papers in his possession destroyed? My heart bleeds night and day at the injustice of their existence."

Would not Tilton have caused such paper to be preserved after he had founded an accusation upon it? This falsehood was put in by Beecher's lawyers lest Tilton might produce a copy, as my statement had not then been published with its documentary evidence.

The next point is in regard to Beecher's alleged want of veracity concerning the letter of contrition, in which he uses the expression "Humble myself before him (Tilton) as I do before my God." Moulton proceeds to explain at length the circumstances under which that letter was written. It was, he says, at Beecher's own dictation, and read by him carefully before he put his signature to it.

Moulton next brings what purports to be his proofs that Beecher and Mrs. Tilton renewed their intimacy after the confession was made, and after both had given assurance to Tilton that they would not meet except through him. In support of this statement, he produces the following invitation to Mr. B. from Mrs. T.:

"WEDNESDAY.

"MY DEAR FRIEND: Does your heart bound toward all as it used? So does mine. I am myself again [sic]. I did not dare to tell you till I was sure; but the bird has sung in my heart these four weeks, and he has covenanted with me never again to leave. Spring has come. Because I thought it would gladden you to know this, and not to trouble or embarrass you in any way, I now write. Of course I should like to share with you my joy, but I can wait for the beyond. When dear Frank says I may once again go to old Plymouth, I will thank the dear Father."

And the following note from Mr. B. to Mrs. T.:

"The blessing of God rest upon you. Every spark of light and warmth in your own house will be a star and a sun in my dwelling. Your note broke like spring (sic) upon winter, and gave me an inward rebound toward life. No one can ever know, none but God, through what a dreary wilderness I have wandered. There was Mount Sinai; there was the barren waste, and there was the alternation of hope and despair that marked the pilgrimage of old. If only it might lead to the promised land! Or, like Moses, shall I die on the border? Your hope and courage are alike amazing. Could God inspire you to restore and rebuild at home, and, while doing it, to cheer and sustain outside of it another who sorely needs help in heart and spirit, it will prove a life so noble as few are able to live, and in another world the emancipated soul may utter thanks. If it would be of comfort to you now and then to send me a letter of true inwardness (sic), the outcome of your inner life, it would be safe, for I am now at home here with my sister, and it is permitted to you (sic), and will be an exceeding refreshment to me, for your heart experiences are often like bread from heaven to the hungry. God has enriched your moral nature—may not others partake?"

"Was there ever," says Moulton, "a plainer case of renewal of intimacy, to say the least, than this? Mark also, amid the prayers to God contained in the longer note, Beecher's suggestion that Elizabeth can write him now with safety, because he is living at home with his sister, i. e., his wife is away."

Moulton next proceeds to give in detail Beecher's alleged confessions to him of his adultery with Mrs. Tilton. He says:

I have before stated that the first confession was made on the night I went for the "retraction" of Mrs. Tilton; that I there told him: "Mr. Beecher, you have had criminal intercourse with Mrs. Tilton, and you have done great injury to Tilton otherwise," and I say further in my published statement "that he confessed and denied not, but confessed," as he did not deny this charge so explicitly made by me. Whatever inferences I have made from his words at other times, he certainly could not have mistaken mine at this time. When speaking of the relations of men and women, "criminal intercourse" has but one legal or literary meaning, even to clergymen. It, however, seems necessary that I should go still further, which I do, and I say that on that evening he confessed to me his relations with Mrs. Tilton in language so vivid that I could not possibly mistake or forget it. He said: "My acts of intercourse with that woman were as natural and sincere in the impression of my love for her as the words of endearment which I addressed to her. There seemed to be nothing in what we did together that I could not justify to myself on the ground of our love for each other, and I think God will not blame me for my acts with her. I know that at present it would be utterly impossible for me to justify myself before man."

This is impressed upon my mind because it was the first enunciation or justification of the doctrine of free love that I had ever heard. Not only on the occasion of handing back Mrs. Tilton's retraction, and when giving me the letter of contrition of Jan. 1, 1871, did he particularize with regard to the feelings that influenced him to do as he did with Mrs. Tilton, but in many of the conversations I held with him he strongly adverted to the absorbing love which he felt for the woman, and to the joys of his intercourse with her, which he always justified because of that love.

If my testimony is to avail anything in this matter, I here connect it now fully to the statement heretofore made by me, which I then softened by omitting details of language which I thought it best for public morality should be suppressed, and I call attention to the fact made in my previous statement, that, in the presence of myself and another witness, whom I still feel reluctant to bring forward (of course not Mr. Tilton), both Mrs. Tilton and Beecher admitted, in language not to be mistaken, that continued sexual intimacy had existed between them, and asked advice as to the course to be taken because of it.

Moulton next devotes himself at great length to the exposure of alleged disreputable transactions with other women. This is the most important part of the statement, and relates particularly to the long-suppressed charges of Henry C. Bowen against Mr. Beecher, which Moulton avers were charges of adultery with five different women, including one charge of rape. In regard to the latter charge, Moulton says that Beecher confessed to him the act of criminal intercourse, but denied having used violence, and alleged that the woman, though unmarried, "had had previous experiences of the same sort." This revelation, Moulton says, was made to him twelve days after the confession of adultery with Mrs. Tilton, and while he was engaged with H. B. Claflin and others in settling up Tilton's difficulty with Bowen. He told Beecher that unless he wished to remain in Bowen's power he must get from the woman in question a retraction of the charge. This he (Beecher) undertook to do, and he brought Moulton a paper from the woman, which was not a retraction, but a statement that she had made a certain charge against Beecher to Bowen which she regretted: that she was now on friendly [illegible] with Beecher. This letter Moulton publishes without the signature. The language imputed to Beecher in this narrative is perfectly disgusting.

In regard to Beecher's alleged contemplation of suicide, Moulton says:

Having made an allusion to Beecher's proposed suicide, it may be well for me to state here the full circumstances of his confession concerning his proposed design. He told me, and showed to another in my presence, that he had within reach in his own study a poison which he would take if the story of his crime with Elizabeth should ever come to the public. He told me of a visit which [illegible] made to a photographer's gallery where he learned that one of the employes had mistaken a glass of poison for a glass of water, and, having taken and drunken it, had fallen dead with scarcely time to drop the glass. Beecher said that was what he wanted for himself, and under the plea of making some photographic experiments, he procured some of this same poison from the photographer, which he told me he intended to use if an intimation of his crime should be made, and then he said "it would be simply reported that Beecher died of apoplexy; but God, and you, and I will know what caused my death." If those who blame me could have looked into his grief-stricken face, and listened to the tones of his voice in great emergencies, in which he said there was no refuge for him but in death, they would have felt impelled to do as generous and open-hearted a service as I practiced toward him. It would have taken a harder heart than mine, being witness of his sorrows, not to forget his sins.

War in Louisiana.

Affairs in Louisiana have assumed a serious aspect. The people of New Orleans are in revolt against the State and municipal authorities. They are gathering as militia, and act under the orders of Penn, who was elected Lieutenant-Governor with McEnery, and who, in the latter's absence, issues his proclamations and commands as Governor of Louisiana.

The immediate provocation of the outbreak on the 14th inst. was the seizure of arms consigned to private firms in New Orleans. Three citizens were arrested on the charge of having in their possession stands of arms and quantities of ammunition to be used in assisting the secret organization known as the White League, and against the Metropolitan Police. Subsequently Gen. Badger, the Chief of Police, Mr. Curtis, the Clerk, and Judge McArthur were brought before Justice Houston. They were committed to jail for contempt in refusing to deliver over the arms that had been seized, but they were immediately pardoned by Gov. Kellogg. The search and seizures were continued throughout last week, and Sunday's papers contained a call, signed by fifty merchants, for a mass meeting at Clay's statue, on Canal street, to protest against the seizures and other outrages. This call had a response in the gathering of an immense throng of people, filling the streets for several blocks around. The meeting passed a resolution calling upon Kellogg to resign, and a committee was appointed to wait upon him for his answer. He declined to receive any communication on the ground that it came from an armed and lawless mob. When his answer was received, the word went forth to disperse for arms. Men went to their houses only to return with rifles, shot-guns and small arms, and to proceed against the existing Government. The Mayor's office was invaded, and the Mayor had to give way. Penn, as Acting Governor, issued a proclamation calling upon all citizens between the ages of 18 and [illegible] to join the militia.

The first conflict between the citizens and the Metropolitan Police occurred on the levee. Gatling guns and Winchester rifles on one side and the motley arms of a mob on the other were sufficient to make a list of casualties estimated at twenty killed and fifty wounded.

United States troops were at the Custom-House, but took no part in the fight. Reinforcements were expected. At last accounts the citizens were throwing up barricades in the streets, and the revolt threatened to assume some of the fierceness and wildness of a revolution in Paris.

It is stated that Gov. Kellogg has called upon the President for Federal aid to support the State authorities in suppressing domestic violence, the Legislature not now being in session.

LATER—THE M'ENERY GOVERNMENT IN POSSESSION OF THE STATE OFFICES.

A New Orleans dispatch of the 15th of September says: The Kellogg Government has been overthrown, and the entire city is in the hands of his opponents.

Lieut.-Gov. Penn, who was elected in 1872, has taken the reins of government, and will at once install in office all those who were elected at the same time. The courts will be at once reorganized, and the entire machinery of the State Government set in motion—not only in this city, but throughout the State. Great enthusiasm prevails.

Gov. Penn this morning appointed Thomas Boylan, the well-known detective, Chief of Police. Mr. Boylan is now organizing a force.

The Cotton Exchange closed at 1 p. m. as a mark of sympathy with the movement to establish the legitimate State Government of Louisiana.

At 3 p. m., in response to a notice signed by the committee of the Canal street meeting, a large number of unarmed citizens assembled on St. Charles street, and, preceded by a band of music, escorted Lieut.-Gov. Penn from his residence to the State-House, where he took possession of the Executive Department, which was unoccupied. In this movement at least 10,000 persons participated, and the Lieutenant-Governor was received with enthusiastic demonstrations of approval along the route.

About 2 p. m. some 3,000 of Gen. Ogden's militia, armed with captured guns, moved from Jackson square en route for the armory on Carondelet street. As they passed the Custom-House, the United States troops stationed there gathered in the windows, and, taking off their hats, gave three hearty cheers for the citizens, which were returned by the militia with great unanimity. With the exception of the sentinel in front of the Custom-House, not an armed man is to be seen on the streets of the city, and quiet prevails throughout.

A dispatch has been sent to President Grant requesting him to recognize the McEnery and Penn Government, which is in quiet and peaceable possession of this city and State.

The total number killed in Monday's fight foots up 26 Metropolitans and 9 White Leaguers.

Gen. Badger is not dead, and it is thought his life will be saved, with the loss of an arm and leg.

HOW THE AFFAIR IS VIEWED IN WASHINGTON.

A Washington telegram of the 15th says: The President, in conversation to-day, expressed his surprise at the conduct of the opponents of the Kellogg Government in resorting to arms to maintain their political position, or, in other words, inaugurating a civil war. He had to many citizens of Louisiana expressed a kindly disposition toward the people, and hoped for better things; but it seemed that they had misjudged if they thought that a resort to violence on their part would pass by unheeded by the Government. The President to-day issued a proclamation, commanding the insurgents to disperse within five days. After signing the proclamation, the President himself wrote two military orders, addressed to the commander at New Orleans, saying in effect that he must protect life and preserve peace to the best of his ability.

A Cabinet meeting was held on the 16th, at which it was determined to extend the protection of the Federal Government to the Kellogg party, on the same principle set forth in an order to Gen. Sherman, through the Adjutant-General, directing that, as his proclamation recognizing Baxter as the lawful Governor of Arkansas had been issued, he was to be protected in that position by the United States forces, if necessary. In accordance with this determination the following dispatch was sent immediately by the Adjutant-General of the army to Gen. Emory, commanding the Federal forces in Louisiana:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—Under no circumstances recognize the insurgent government of Louisiana. Within five days from date of proclamation to the insurgents, such action will be taken as the emergency may require.

"By order of the President.

"E. D. TOWNSEND,

"Adjutant-General."

"Doesticks."

Doesticks, you may recollect, began writing his droll extravaganzas for a Detroit daily more than twenty years ago. Novel and laughter-provoking, they were widely copied and gave him so much reputation that he was soon invited by the Tribune, in this city, to take a position on its staff. He accepted with alacrity, continuing his sketches in that journal, and subsequently publishing six or eight books, most of which had a large sale. Capable of good work outside of his specialty, he was at one time the dramatic critic of the paper. His peculiar vein was exhausted after a while; but he continued to delve in it until the public, growing weary of the monotony and repetition, would have no more of it.

Thompson married Fanny Fern's daughter, and for several years after making this his home was a conspicuous figure in journalism. If he had not genius he had the eccentricity vulgarly associated with it, and by the habitual indulgence of this eccentricity, lost his usefulness. He left the Tribune long ago, and has been earning for some time a precarious livelihood by irregular reporting, and by contributing articles of the old, though deteriorated sort to some of the sensational weeklies. His career, which at the outset promised to be brilliant, has been the very opposite. They who may have envied him once would hardly envy him now. Little more than a name, even that is well nigh forgotten. He looks very different from what he did twenty years ago. He was then a handsome, dark-haired, dark-eyed youth, full of vivacity, hopefulness and ambition. Now he is decidedly stout, not to say coarse in appearance; his comeliness, all the fine lines of his face and his symmetry of figure, have gone forever. It is thought that his early success turned his head; led him to folly, which ultimately became fatal to every expectation and aspiration he had cherished. —New York Letter.

Spurgeon.

The Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, while in London, went to hear Mr. Spurgeon, and writes as follows of that great preacher: "He just plants that broad, fat figure of his before the crowded thousands, and opens his homely mouth, and a ceaseless stream of racy English, pure gospel truth and trenchant appeal to the conscience, pours out as steadily as water from Croton Reservoir. His notes would not cover more [illegible] the back of an ordinary envelope. He never precomposes one sentence, but he has the whole Bible on the end of his tongue, and uses it with rare discretion and point. His versatility is wonderful. He superintends a church of 5,000 members, a theological school, an orphanage, and several other institutions, edits a newspaper, preaches three sermons a week, writes books of Biblical commentary, publishes his own Almanac, and has prepared fifty hymns [illegible] 'Our Own Hymn Book,' which is the collection used by his mammoth congregation."

COST OF MANUFACTURED IRON.—A journal connected with the metal trade gives the following curious estimate of the value of a piece of iron, costing in its rough state one franc, after being employed for different manufactures: Made into a horse shoe is worth 3f; into agricultural implements, 4f; forged into ornaments, 43f; converted into needles, 75f; into steel buttons, 900f; employed as polished steel for decorative purposes, 2,000f; and made into shirt studs, 6,000f.

FARM AND GARDEN.

WOOD contains a large percentage of potash, and some phosphates—hence a liberal dressing of wood ashes, alone or with manure, is of great advantage, and if some bone-dust or superphosphate of lime can be added all the better.

HOLSTEINS FOR MILK.—It has been found by accurate trial of different dairies that it takes from twenty-seven to twenty-eight pounds of milk to make one pound of butter, and a gentleman in a late agricultural meeting stated that it would take twenty-seven to twenty-eight pounds of [illegible]. W. W. Chenery, of Belmont, has cows that have given seventy-six pounds of milk a day. Simpson, of Cambridgeport, has cross-bred Holstein cow that gave 6,390 quarts of milk in a year; the half-bloods it is said, being nearly as good as the thoroughbreds.—Live Stock Journal.

A BEE STORY.—I will give you a little of my experience in killing black queen bees. I took two queens and a few worker bees out of two stands and inserted Italian cells instead. I put them in separate wire cages, and, wanting to kill the queens, I submerged them all in a pail of water. After full three hours, being sure they were entirely dead, I took them out, and on examining them they showed signs of life, and now three hours after they are all lively. So I think that is not the right way to kill queens.—Joseph Clizbe, in the National Bee Journal.

POINTS OF A DAIRY COW.—Mr. E. Lewis Sturtevant, of Massachusetts, gives the following in a recent address: If we collate the points of six noted dairy breeds, the Fifeshire, as described by Magne; the Yorkshire, which is the milking, unimproved Shorthorn, by Haxton; the Jersey, by Allen; the Suffolk, by Kirby; the Brittany, by Gramgee; and the Aryshire, by Alton, we find that the preponderance of points mentioned, are as follow: Head long; muzzle, fine; throat, clear; neck, slender; shoulders, thin; chest deep; brisket, small; back, straight; thighs, flat and thin; ribs, arched; pelvis, roomy; belly, large; legs small and short; udder, large, square, well formed.

HOW DRAINS ACT.—The water which runs into drains dug in tough clay soil enters from the sides and the bottom, and not from immediately above the drain. The toughest clay is sufficiently permeable to water to allow it to pass through readily, and after the drains have been in operation for some time, regular and permanent water channels become established in the soil leading from above to the bottom of the drains. In digging drains in tough, compact clay, numerous small veins of water are cut, which show very clearly how readily the water will pass through such soil as soon as outlets are provided. The advantage of the deeper drains is thus explained, and it is readily seen that their influence extends further in proportion to their depth.

HATCHING GREASED EGGS.—A correspondent of the Fanciers' Gazette, an English journal devoted to fancy and pet stock, says that some relatives of his had at one time an Aylesbury duck and drake which had been accidentally poisoned. They had at the time, however, seven of their eggs which had been buttered for preservation for the table, and these, with much fear as to the result, were placed under a hen, and produced six strong young ducklings, although the eggs were six weeks out at the time they were set. Since that time, they and their neighbors have always set greased eggs, with the most gratifying results. Although this statement was received with a howl of incredulity, it has since been confirmed by the reported experiences of others. One gentleman states that he possessed a very choice strain of fowls; and, to prevent his neighbors from hatching the surplus eggs he sold, he carefully buttered them. Soon, however, he found that his choice fowls were becoming quite common in the neighborhood; and, to satisfy himself if the thing could be done, he set some buttered eggs, himself, and found that they hatched as well as the others. The theory is that the nest and the feathers of the hen [illegible] off the grease and free the pores of the shell, thus admitting the air, which is doubtless essential to the vitality of the egg.

CONFIDENCE IN ANIMALS.—In an admirable article on this subject the New England Farmer says: Horses and oxen should have such confidence in their drivers, that they will willingly and repeatedly make all reasonable effort to do as they are bidden. A team should never be told the second time to start an unreasonable load. We don't believe a horse would ever become balky if it were never misused by overloading and whipping. It is our best horses, those that are full of spirit and spunk, that get balky, and not the "lunkheads," that don't know enough to know when they are misused. What is it but a feeling of confidence that makes the patient horse stand for hours in harness, unhitched, waiting the return of his master to give him the word to go, before he will leave his tracks? And what is it but this same confidence in his master, that makes a well trained horse willing to be driven over uncertain places, across shaking, dilapidated bridges, and up to noisy, pokerish looking locomotives, with their puffing smoke-stacks and screaming whistles?

WATERING HORSES AFTER MEALS.—It is the practice with many horsemen to give their horses no water until after they have eaten their allowance of feed. Concerning this practice a veterinarian writes: "A full drink of water immediately after being fed should never be allowed to horses. When water is drunk by them the bulk of it goes directly to the large intestines, and little of it is retained in the stomach. In passing through the stomach, however, the water carries considerable quantities of the contents to where it lodges in the intestines. If, then, the food of horses' stomachs is washed out before it is digested, no nourishment will be derived from the feed. In Edinburgh some old horses were fed with split peas, and then supplied with water immediately before being killed. It was found that the water had carried the peas from fifty to sixty feet into the intestines, where no digestion took place at all."

Mr. Cassle is quite correct in the views set forth regarding the injurous effects of large quantities of water swallowed immediately after eating. A small quantity of fluid swallowed along with, or immediately after dry food, beneficially softens it and assists in its subdivision and digestion. An inordinate supply of water, or of water fluid, on the other hand, proves injurious. It dilutes unduly the digestive secretions it mechanically carries onward the imperfectly digested food, and thus interferes with the proper functions of the canal and excites indigestion and diarrhea. These untoward effects are especially apt to occur where horses freely fed and too liberally watered are shortly put to tolerably quick work. There is no more infallible method of producing colic, diarrhea, and inflammation of the bowels. The horse is not peculiar in this respect; dogs, and even their masters, similarly suffer from copious draughts of water immediately after eating much solid food—New England Homestead.

Domestic Recipes.

LEMON CAKE.—One cup butter, three cups sugar, one cup thick milk, one teaspoonful of soda, the rind and juice of two lemons. Bake in bread-dishes.

CRACKER PIE.—Eight crackers, pounded fine, on which pour boiling water to soften; eight tablespoonfuls of vinegar, sight of sugar, one lemon; if too stiff, add water.

POTATO CUSTARD.—Ten potatoes boiled soft, six or eight eggs, sugar to your taste, one cup milk, quarter pound butter, nutmeg, essence of lemon, brandy and wine to your taste. Mash the potatoes very fine.

RAISIN CAKE.—One pound sugar, half pound butter, one and a half pounds flour, four eggs, half-pint thick milk, one teaspoonful of soda, same of cream of tartar, one nutmeg, half a pound raisins, half a pound currants.

SPONGE CAKE.—Take six eggs, the weight of the six in loaf-sugar, and the weight of three eggs in fine flour. Pound and sift the sugar, break the eggs into a basin, add the sugar, and whisk them together for twenty minutes, then stir in the flour. Do not beat it at all, and send at once to a quick oven.

BISCUITS.—Three pounds of flour, one pound of white, sifted sugar; half a pound of raisins, half a pound of currants, six eggs, two ounces candied peel, cut small; three-quarters of a pound of butter. Beat to a cream, and mix all together. If too stiff, work with a little cream. They must be rolled out the size and thickness of a crown-piece.

GINGERBREAD.—Stir into one pound of good brown sugar one quart of good molasses; cut up one and a half pounds of good butter; mix them all well together and heat them; when cool, stir in four pounds of sifted flour, four teaspoonfuls of ground ginger of the best quality and strong, four teaspoonfuls of carraway seeds, two carefully-grated lemons, and a little salt. Mix these well; then make the cakes and bake in tins. They are better for keeping awhile.

JUMBLES.—Beat one pound of butter with half a pound of white sugar to a cream, reserving half a pound of sugar to roll them with; beat to a froth the whites of three eggs, with a little grated nutmeg and rose-water; then stir in with a knife as much flour as will thicken them to the consistency of smooth, soft dough; then turn them out and roll in the reserved sugar. Either cut around with a wineglass, or roll them long, and unite the ends in about eight inches in circumference.

TO COLOR COTTON RED.—Take muriate of tin two-thirds of a teacup; add sufficient water to cover the goods well. Bring to boiling heat, putting in the goods one hour, and stirring often. Take out the goods and empty the kettle, and put in clean water with Nicaragua wood, one pound, steeping for half an hour at hand heat; then put in the goods and increase the heat for one hour, not bringing it to a boil at all. Air the goods and dip as before. Wash without soap. This will not fade.

LEMON CHEESE-CAKE.—Pare two lemons very thin; put the rind to soak in half a pint of cold water. Put into a nicely-tinned saucepan one pound of loaf-sugar, six ounces of fresh butter, six eggs, the yolks and whites a little beaten, and the water in which the rind has been soaked. Keep this mixture well stirred until it becomes about as thick as ordinary honey. Pour it into a jar, and it will keep good for several weeks. Line dishes or patty-pans with nice puff-paste, and put in the cheese-cake. It should not be browned in the oven, but should be a nice, bright yellow color.

Alcohol on the Farm.

The Temperance Worker gives a realistic picture of the results of the constant application of alcohol to the stomach:

Alcohol, regularly applied to a thrifty farmer's stomach, will remove the boards from the fence, let cattle into his crops, kill his fruit trees, mortgage his farm, and sow his field with wild oats and thistles. It will take the paint off his buildings, break the glass out of the windows and fill them with rags. It will take the gloss from his clothes and polish from his manner, subdue his reason and arouse his passions, bring sorrow and disgrace upon his family and topple him into a drunkard's grave. It will do this to the artisan and the capitalist, the matron and the maiden, as well as to the farmer; for, in its deadly enmity to the human race, alcohol is no respecter of persons.

MR. JOHN BURNS recently gave evidence before the Royal Commission on Shipping. He stated that his firm (the Cunard Company) employ 6,000 men "all told;" that they shipped and discharged throughout last year 42,000 sailors; and that their fleet consists of 49 steamers of 90,000 tons and 15,000 horse-power. According to the "Statesman's Year Book," the German Imperial navy consisted last year of 41 steamers of 87,000 tons and 8,000 horse-power, manned by 3,500 men and boys.

Deafness.

Probably the most frequent way in which the ears are injured is by the attempt to clean them. It ought to be understood that the passage of the ear does not require cleaning by us. Nature undertakes that task, and in the healthy state fulfills it perfectly. Her means for cleansing the ear is the wax. Perhaps the reader has never heard what becomes of the ear-wax. I will tell him. It dries up into thin, fine scales, and these peel off one by one from the surface of the passage, and fall out imperceptibly, leaving behind them a perfectly clean, smooth surface. In health the passage of the ear is never dirty; but if we attempt to clean it, we infallibly make it so. Here—by a strange lack of justice, as it would seem, which, however, has no doubt a deep justice at the bottom—the best people, and those who love cleanliness, suffer most, and good and careful nurses do a mischief negligent ones avoid. Washing the ears out with soap and water is bad; it keeps the wax moist when it ought to become dry and scaly, increases its quantity unduly, and makes it absorb the dust with which the air always abounds. But the most hurtful thing is introducing the corner of the towel screwed up, and twisting it round. This does more harm to ears than all other mistakes together. It drives down the wax upon the membrane much more than it gets out. Let any one who doubts this make a tube like the passage, especially with the curve which it possesses; let him put a thin membrane at one end, smear its inner surface with a substance like the ear-wax, and then try and get it out so by a towel! But this plan does much more mischief than merely pressing down the wax. It irritates the passage, and makes it cast off small flakes of skin, which dry up and become extremely hard, and these are also pressed down upon the membrane. Often it is not only deafness which ensues, but pain and inflammation, and then matter is formed which the hard mass prevents from escaping, and the membrane becomes diseased, and worse may follow. The ear should never be cleaned out with the screwed-up corner of a towel. Washing should extend only to the outer surface, as far as the finger can reach.—Hinton's Physiology for Practical Use.

Remarkable Case of Preservation.

The London correspondent of the New York Graphic writes, under date of [illegible] 28:

Forty-eight years ago Bishop Milner, a Roman Catholic Prelate of England, author of the "End of Controversy" and other works, died, and was buried in Wolverhampton, in a tomb which had been cut in the rock. The other day the tomb was opened, and the coffin, which was of oak and lead, was removed to be buried in a church. The coffin was opened, and although the body had not been embalmed it was found whole and entire and not at all decayed. It was covered with a neat and elegant plaited shroud made of flannel and trimmed with amber silk. The hands were placed by the sides of the body; there was no ring on the finger, or indeed any sign whatever to show that it was the body of a priest or bishop. The face wore its natural color, save a small part, covered with a kind of white mold; the tip of the nose was of a dark color, the hands were discolored, though perfect, and like the hands as represented in the portrait of the bishop. A scapular was suspended from the neck. During the course of this and the following day hundreds of people came to see the body. Several who had known the bishop well in life now distinctly recognized him in death. The coffin having been open from Thursday morning at ten o'clock until four in the afternoon of Friday, the body assumed a dark brown hue, yet it has retained its former size and shape, the flesh remaining firm. The ceremony of reinterment took place on Monday, the 24th instant, and was performed by the clergymen of the town. But a still more remarkable case of the preservation of a body is reported to-day. The great painter, Leonardo de Vinci, died in France in 1519, and was buried in Ambroise Castle in a stone sarcophagus. The other day some workmen engaged in repairing the castle opened the sarcophagus, and the body, which had been buried for 355 years, was found in a state of perfect preservation. The Comte de Paris has ordered it to be transferred to the chapel of the castle.

Watch Your Carpets—A New Pest.

Considerable outcry, says the Rochester Union [illegible] Advertiser, is being made in neighboring villages concerning the ravages of a new pest that has lately arisen; namely, the carpet-bug. These bugs are described as being about twice the size of the common cimex lectularius, or bed-bug, and covered with hair. Their color is muddy black. The first time these bugs were heard from in this section was at Danville last year, where they did considerable damage. This year they have increased and extended their territory, for it seems that they have become a source of extreme annoyance in Brockport. A lady who resides in that village informed a reporter of this paper yesterday that there is not a single house that has escaped their depredations. In her house, she said, every room was infested with them, and they had eaten large holes in every carpet in the house. Their favorite mode of procedure is to follow the seam of the boards and eat their way clear through. In some instances the carpet has been eaten through so clean that it looks as if it had been cut with a very sharp knife. In other rooms they had eaten large patches out of it, generally picking out the center of a breadth. The lady referred to says she has tried everything to get rid of them, but without avail. Tobacco seems to make them livelier than ever, and as for bug-poison, they regard it as a luxury and grow fat on it.

A GOOD brother in a church of Miami county, Ohio, while giving in his experience not long ago, said: "My brethern, I've been tryin' this nigh on to forty years to serve the Lord and get rich both at once, and I tell yer it's mighty hard sleddin'."

[illegible]oing a Dun.

"I [illegible] small bill against you," said a pernicious-looking collector as he entered the store of one who had acquired the character of a hard customer. "Yes, sir, a very fine day, indeed," was the reply. "I am not speaking of the weather, but your bill," replied the collector in a loud key. "It would be better if we had a little rain." "Confound the rain," continued the collector, and, raising his voice, added: "Have you the money to pay this bill?" "Beg your pardon, I'm hard of hearing. I've made it a rule not to lend my funds to strangers, and I really don't recognize you." "I'm collector for the Daily Extinguisher newspaper, sir, and I have a bill against you," persisted the collector, at the top of his voice, producing the bill, and thursting it in the face of his debtor. "I've determined to indorse bills for no one; you may put the bills back into your pocketbook; I really can't indorse it." "Confound your indorsement! Will you pay it?" "You'll pay it, no doubt, sir; but there's always a risk about these matters, you know. So I must decline it." "The money must be mine to-day." "Oh yes, ninety days, but I would not indorse a bill for you at a week; so get out of my store. It is seldom that I am pressed upon for an indorsement, even by a friend; on the part of a stranger, sir, it is inexplicable. Do not force me to put you out; leave the premises." The bill was returned to the Extinguisher office indorsed: "So dreadfully deaf that he couldn't understand."

Michigan Politics.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Resolved, That we arraign the party in power for its unexampled extravagance and corruption, and for its unconstitutional and dangerous usurpations of powers not delegated to the Federal government, and we demand an honest, economical and just administration of the national offices. We demand an immediate abandonment of all efforts to rule States for corrupt party purposes by an infamous alliance of carpet baggers, scalawags and bayonets. We demand the adequate punishment of all men guilty of corruption and embezzlement in office. We demand an immediate repeal of the law increasing salaries, and of the infamous "gag law" by which the party in power seeks to muzzle a free press. Denouncing its wholesale appropriation of the public domain to Credit Mobilier and other corrupt corporations, we demand of the Government a careful reservation of the remaining public lands for the use and benefit of the Union soldiers and sailors and of the actual settler. We demand a repeal of the Legal-tender act, to take effect not later than July 4, 1876, a specie basis and free banks, with a secured currency. We demand a tariff for revenue only, free from unjust discriminations that raise little or no revenue, create monopolies, unnecessarily raise the cost of living and encourage corrupt legislation, and demand the payment of all forms of the national debt in coin or its equivalent, and an equal and just distribution of the taxes and imposts required to raise the needed revenue.

Resolved, That in the management of our State affairs we demand prudence in the collection of taxes, and honesty and economy in the expenditure of money. That we condemn the management of our State finances for the reasons: 1. That with a large balance in the treasury the taxpayers in these times should be, but are not, relieved of any of their annual burdens. 2. That this large balance is loaned to the pets of a political ring, for which no adequate security is required, while if it be lost the bond of the State Treasurer is quite too small to protect the State. 3. That the books and accounts of the State Treasurer, being public records, the Legislature has refused to permit them to be thoroughly examined by the representatives of the people; the State Treasurer has refused to report to the Legislature, the location and condition of the million of money in his hands; but above all that the political majority of the Legislature has tolerated this refusal, all of which are facts well calculated to excite serious fears for the safety of our money.

Resolved That we are in favor of amending our State Constitution at the earliest time possible so that the Legislature may have power to regulate the liquor traffic.

Resolved, That when the State, impelled by a public necessity, confers corporate powers to secure a public benefit such powers must be held subject to just laws judicially interpreted and a sound public policy that protects alike the rights and interests of the State, the people and the corporation.

Resolved, That the railroad and industrial interests of our State should be identical and reciprocal, and that we have a right to such legislation as will secure reasonable and uniform rates of freight.

Resolved, That we cordially recommend to the voters of the State the candidates nominated by this convention, and invite all opposed to the present administration of our State and national affairs to co-operate with us in their election.

PLATFORM OF THE INDEPENDENTS.

Believing that it will be impossible to secure such reforms of administration and changes of policy as will restore the honesty and economy of the early days of the republic through either of the political parties heretofore trusted with power; tired of shuffling financial experiments and false standards of value, and deeming the encroachments of the Federal authority upon the powers for a long time exercised exclusively by the States prejudicial to our liberties, we will perfect our organization as a national reform party, and present candidates upon the following platform:

1. A reduction of the numbers and diminution of the power of the officers created under the national government.

2. A reduction of the salaries paid to such an extent that no fund for political purposes can be raised by assessment upon office-holders, and that no office shall be sought on account of its emoluments.

3. Political opinion should be neither a reason for an appointment to office nor a ground for removal therefrom, but frequent changes should be made to secure purity of administration.

4. A prohibition of recommendation to or solicitation for office by any Senator or Representative, and the election of all local general officers by the people.

5. A speedy return to hard money as the only honest standard of value.

6. All banking, State or national, should be free.

7. Adherence to the principles adopted at Lansing, August 6, 1874.

The Patrons of Husbandry.

It is questionable whether any country ever produced an organization, non-political in its character, whose growth was more rapid, vigorous and healthful than that of the order known as the Patrons of Husbandry. The wonderful rapidity with which granges have multiplied in every State of our own country, not to speak of others, and the systematic, well-ordered net-work of connection which has already been established from the district or primary grange, up through county and State to the national organization, is a marked illustration of the real executive ability of the yeomanry when called into requisition.

We have had faith from the outset that much good would come of this movement. It is the legitimate outgrowth of a deep-seated dissatisfaction—an organized protest against a train of abuses which have been gradually fastening themselves upon the governmental and business machinery of the country. Chief among the latter is the undue multiplication of what are called middlemen, and the opportunities afforded these for taking advantage of the isolated, disorganized agricultural producers.

In the broad and scientific sense of the term, middlemen are themselves producers. They are such just so far as they are instrumental in satisfying the wants and desires of men. Such agencies are indispensible. They serve an important purpose, but they may do it very inefficiently. A laxity and clumsiness have become manifest in the machinery of exchange, growing out of the want of intelligent and harmonious cooperation among the agricultural masses, on the one hand, and a willingness, not unnatural, on the part of organised capital to take advantage of the situation, on the other. The result is a waste in the producing power of the country, and in many instances an unfair distribution of the rewards of industry.

If the grange movement shall succeed in remedying these evils to any considerable extent, without inflicting others equally mischievous, it will have subserved an important end. It is destined to wield a wonderful power in the country, and along with its power comes a grave responsibility. It has serious dangers to encounter. Not least among these are false teachings of demagogues without the order and within it. As it shall grow in strength the opportunities for corruption in its own ranks, as in the case of political parties, will greatly multiply, though, from the nature of the organization, by no means to the same extent.

The members of this order have been charged by the monopoly organs with being communists. Nothing we believe could be farther from the truth than such a charge. No class of our population are more deeply interested in the preservation of all those rights and privileges which law and government were instituted to secure, than the farmer. None have a higher appreciation of the rights of property, or a keener sense of the necessity of their preservation. We have no fear of communism from such a source. On the other hand, the granges, it seems to us, if rightly managed, must prove a valable educating agency. In this fact centers our chief hope of good results. The movements of the Patrons then will be watched with interest, not by demagogues alone, but also by good and true men everywhere. With power comes responsibility. Let them bear it soberly and discreetly.—Madison Democrat.

"Hayseed" Forever.

"My father was a farmer before me, and I thank God that I am a farmer born." Such was the soap Porter expected to soothe the Grangers with Fourth of July last. It reminded Col. George Stanley of the Illinois orator who addressed a rural audience: "Gentlemen," said he, "I am proud to be one of you. My father was a farmer, and I am a farmer born. Yea, I may truly say I was born between two rows of corn." At this juncture a tipsy agriculturist at the further part of the house hiccoughed out: "A (hic) pumpkin, by—!"—Eldora (Iowa) Ledger.

Humor.

BROKEN spirits—A brandy smash.

ENGAGED in "taking stock"—Merchants and Indians.

GREAT trunk lines—Railroads running through Saratoga.

"YOU must be a quarrelsome fellow," said a phrenologist to a man whose bumps he was examining. "Say that again and I'll knock you down," was the response.

AN Ohio husband sold his oxen to get money for his wife to elope with, but he doesn't want any sympathy. He says he'd have thrown in a horse or two if she had demanded it.

A CHICAGO pork-packer, whose pew rent was raised to $25, exclaimed: "Great Cæsar! Here's a nice state of affairs—the gospel going up and pork going down. What's to become of us?"

"I SAY, boy, is that the fire?" asked a gentleman of a ragged urchin, and pointing to a dense volume of smoke that was issuing from the window of a warehouse. "No, sir, that is only the smoke," replied the boy.

"I ALWAYS have two trustworthy bows at hand," said a good-natured spinster to her niece. "Why, where are they now, aunty?" asked the niece. "Here; my elbows." And she placed her arms akimbo.

THE Boston Globe talks about "handsome weather." Whereupon the Troy Whig suggests that "if that young man wouldn't be thinking of his girl all the time when he is butchering adjective she would make a good writer."

Says the Milwaukee Sentinel: "They have had a game called kissing-croquet at Oshkosh. A girl is allowed to move her ball six inches every time she kisses a fellow. From the market reports we see that trade in tape-measures is active."

A HARTFORD man was drowned, and friends brought home the body to his afflicted wife. As they came to the front door with the corpse, the new-made widow appeared, and sadly remarked: "I guess you had better take him around to the back door, so he won't drip on the parlor carpets!"

AFTER the Prosecuting Attorney had heaped vituperation upon the poor prisoner without counsel, the Judge asked him if he had anything to say for himself. "Your honor," replied the prisoner, "I ask for a postponement for eighteen days, in order that I may find a blackguard to answer that one there."

AT a meeting in London, to receive a report from the missionaries sent to discover the tribes of Israel, Lord H—— was asked to take the chair. "I take," he replied, "a great interest in your researches, gentlemen. The fact is, I have borrowed money from all the Jews now known, and if you can find a new set I shall feel very much obliged."

A PLOWMAN up Deeside fell madly in love with the milkmaid on a neighboring farm. His love was unreturned, and in a fit of desperation the rash and misguided man rose from his bed in the middle of the night, procured a rope, went to his false lover's byre, and there, in the awful silence of the stilly hour—tied all the cows' tails together.

Freeman Kelly has challenged his competitor, John H. Baker, to a joint discussion. Will Baker accept?

The democrats of Michigan have spoken out boldly and strongly in favor of specie payments, home rule and free trade. They even shove past Illinois in the onward movement.

The Maine election on Monday result in the election of the Radical ticket by a decreased majority, although there were over 100,000 votes polled against 80,948 last year

In Portland, the principal city of Maine, at the election in 1873, the Republicans had 640 majority. At the lection in 1874 they had but 163 majority, on a largely increased vote.

The Vermont Democrats made a handsome showing at the recent election. They reduced the Republican majority some 7,000 and gained one member of the Senate and some thirty Representatives in the Legislature.

President Grant has very kindly told a committee of Southern gentlemen that he would have certainly voted the Civil Rights Bill had it passed Congress at the last session. But the President carfully retrained from telling them what he would do when it passes next winter.

Why are soldiers' "reunions" always so plenty just before the elections?—Hartford City Courier.

Why are "southern outrages" always so plenty just before the elections?

Answer: To fire the nor[illegible]n heart that theives and plunderers may remain in office.

During the two years in which the Democrats managed the affairs of Indiana (in 1871-2) the total expence of the State government amounted to only $1,499,951.71. Last year under Repu[illegible]an management, it cost $1,427,[illegible],72, or only about $72,000 less than it cost the Democrats to manage things for two years. These are the simple facts and the people can judge where their interests lie when they come to vote.

The Indianopolis Sentinel says:—The action of Post Master General Jewell and Secretary Bristow, announcing that there shall be no more free pen-knives in their departments is meeting with fierce condemnation in official circles at Washington. The Chronicle has a plaintive editorial entitled "Good bye pen-knives," from which it would appear that without the periodical pen-knife, clerks and various departments will be unable to pare their nails or peel their apples.—The Sentinel would suggest that unless they can buy pen-knives of their own they had better bite off their nails and eat their apples without paring.—It isn't clean but it's honest.

Oliver P. Morton has sufficiently recovered his health to make a speech with the Louisiana Revolution as a text Mr. Morton is as usual, very bitter toward the people of the South; very lenient toward the scoundrels who are plundering them, and hypocritically sensitive about the poor negro. As near as we can get at it, Mr. Morton who is a sort of Raw-head-and-bloody-bones, is trying to convert the troubles of the South into an invigorating tonic for the dilapidated Republican party of Indiana.

While the revolutionary manner in which the Kellogg usurpation in Louisiana was overthrown cannot be sustained, yet it is sad to reflect that a government to which they are so largely opposed, had to imposed upon the people by the bayonet. The facts is that Louisana, when Kellogg is put back, will be ruled just at Austria and Russia are ruled—by some other authority than the will of the people. Kellogg is as much of a usurper as McEnery was, save that his usurpation is accomplished under a pretence of legal form.

A man named Salmond desiring to commit suicide chose a very sensible plan. He went to Niagara Falls, and walking quietly into the rapids was swept over the cataract. This is a sublime death and all the expenses of funeral and the ungenteel appliances of a coroner's jury are rendered unnecessary. Think of a leap over Niagara, never to be heard of more, as compared with hanging or throat cutting?—Of course the best policy is not to suicide at all, but to any one who is determind about the matter it is good advice to take a trip to the falls.

The most infamous public speech of the present year is that of Mr. O. P, Morton on the Louisiana business. It is a speech replete with barefaced misrepresentation, hypocricy, shameless lying. The attempt of the senatorial demogogue to make it appear that the "war" was a contest on the part of the Louisiana whites aganst the blacks is squarely contradicted by every event every expression, and every account and report, from every source, since the "war" begun. As a demagogue, the man Morton is tremendous. As a statesman, there are few greater humbugs.

Elections.

The Press shows up a rooster, for the election in Maine. It turns out that even in that darkened land the Republican majority has fallen off in porportion to the vote cast. It is squeezing pretty hard for a little juice, but as this is the first chance the Press has had to crow this fall, we can overlook it. Look on this picture.

John H. Baker is down in Marshall county, enlighting the farmers about their rights, telling them what a working man he was when a five year old boy on his father's farm!—how he hates railroad and all other monopolies, and how he laughs in his sleep at the thought of the apparent ease in which he can humbug the people. Let any farmer get up when John is descanting upon railroad extortion, and advocating the rights and duty of Congress to protect them by regulating the price of freights on all railroads through the State—let him ask John if he has not been the paid attorney of railroad monopolies, if he does not travel on them free of charge, if he was not engagd to rob our tax payers of their money paid in the assest in the construction of the White Pigeon, Goshen and Warsaw railroads, without completing the road?—ask John these questions and then one other, how much dependence can be put in the honesty or promise of such a man to defend the producing classes against the extortion of railroads.—Goshen Democrat.

The negro troubles, which occurred about ten years ago in Jamaica seem likely to be renewed. The island contains about 440,000 negroes and 15,000 whites. The colored people demanded rights which were denied them and when they attempted to frighten the authorities into yielding they were promptly put down by millitary force. About 2,000 negroes perished and the lesson had its effect during the past decade. Now they are rebellious again.

The New York Evening Post claims that free trade, home rule and hard money is a creed which it began to preach years before the World had a being. Very well; it is about time, then, that it ceased to fight one way and preach another. No journal in this country has done more than the Post for the party in power, which has set every one of these principles under its feet. The Post, contends that neither political organization is to be trusted, and yet it keeps on helping the republican party. It has declared: The remedy, we say again, is disorganization and reformation. It is substantially that which has occured in Illinoise. Call the thing a rose or any thing you please, the real question is. Will the Post work for it? Why don't that journal step forward and take a leading part in the business of disorganization and reformation? It would find a strong host of comrades around it that would follow it to certain victory.

The account of t[illegible] burning of Mill No. 1 at Fall River, on saturday becomes more terrible as the news comes in. Not less than forty young girls lost their lives and at least eighty others were more or less injured. The fire broke out in the upper story and as the only chance of escape for the inmates was by the way of an inside stairway, that was soon closed by the wall of fire. These poor creatures thus foiled in the attempt to penetrate to the outer air, were seized with the awful frenzy of despair and rushing to windows flung themselves headlong from the dizzy height. This fearful loss of lives might have been avoided entirely had there been adequate means of escape. Outside stairways would have furnished this means of escape. As it was the calamity was one of the most fearful which has ever befallen a city. The lesson is an awful one and should be heeded in the future. We doubt if the proprietor of this mill can held entirely guiltless. They owe it to their employees to provide buildings in which at least life is safe.

After working for ten years at reconstruction, the republican party has got so far advanced that the pretended governor of Louisiana has to be set on the neck of the people and held there by the general government, a congressman has to run out of Alabama for safety, and the people all through the South are according to Senator Morton, shooting each other down for the mere fun of the thing in the cotten fields and the cane brakes. This is rather slow business. At such a rate of progress, when does the party in power expect to restore anything like law and order to the South, to say nothing of prosperity and happiness? It is a simple question in the rule of three. If sombody would say just how far in advance the Louisiana of to-day is compared to the Louisiana of ten yerrs ago, the problem could be worked out. To simple minded people it looks as if reconstruction were going backward.

Senator Morton lays the blame of the failure of Southern government upon the leaders of the South, who he says were too proud to take part in the reconstructing their several states and threw the work upon ignorant negroes scalawags. The senator forgets that the southern ladies and indeed most of the revels of any standing were disfranchised at the beginning of the reconstruction era, and could not have anything to say in politics even if they wanted to. He also forgets how kindly all men who had anything to do in the rebellion were informed by himself and others of like disposition at the North that it would become them to take a back seat and not attempt to mingle in politics for a few years.—Verily a short memory is sometimes a great convenience for a popular [illegible]or. The welcome which the Southerners received when they finally did try to take a hand in their own government is a sufficient proof of the style in which their interference would have been received just after the war

A Monstrous Mockery.

The New York organ of the Washington administration thus briefly outlines the situation in Louisiana.

There open insurrection in a state, blood has already been shed, the recognised state government has been overturned by an armed mob, and if the federal power does not interfere, utter anarchy will very soon prevail. These are the facts, nakedly stated—but how much there is to modify these fact! The people who have risen against the state government have been ruthlessly plundered and oppressed; the governor who was turned out has abused his office, and the state government which has temporarily been upset was a disgrace to the whole country. If we admit one set of facts, we must admit the other also. No man can honestly survey the codition of affairs without disgust. The spectacle of United States troops being sent to New Orleans to restor the Kellogg gang to power may be pleasing to some people, but the general public can only look upon it with regret.

This is unusal language in an administration party organ. It is language indicating a spirit of independence—some truncheon flourishers of the administration would call it insubordination—that regards the plain truth as of more importance to the general public than the necessities of spoilsmen placehunters. It is a brief but suggestive statement of what evry man of respectable information knows to be the truth.

The Kellogg government of Louisiana was a disgrace to the whole country. It was more than a disgrace.—In its beginning it was a monstrous outrage, not only upon the state of Louisiana, but upon the whole country upon the federal republic assuming to be a nation governed under established forms of law. Kellogg was never elected governor of Louisiana. This fact was ascertained and determind by the senate committee apointed to investigate the matter, upon an inquirly into all facts. The committee were only not satisfied that anybody was lawfully elected; but if either candidates was lawfully elected, McEnery was the candidate. That the whole election was voied by reason of monstrous fraud was probably the conclusion which the facts would have best warranted; and upon this conclusion the administration senator, Mr. Carpenter, most vehemently insisted. His exhaustive speech on the subject, in the last session should be again read by people who would understand the monstrous outrage against our republican institutions perpetrated by the Kellogg usurpation.

Mr. David Weaver, west of this place, is still quite low. We are informed that a tumor is the cause of his sickness.

The Presbyterians have decided to keep Rev. Mr. Fisher another year. Mr. F. is a fine preacher and an enterprising citizen.

A new line of bugle trimmings has just been opened out at Stamet's fancy store. Also fringe and jet trimmings of every variety.

Mr. I. Culbertson lost one of his horses last week. It laid in the Court-yard that night, and the next morning its tail come up missing.

WOOD—Will our subscribers who desire to pay us in wood bring it along now.—The roads are good and we are in need of it. Be prompt in this matter.

A step ladder used in the Ensley block some time ago, belonging to Dr. Cowan, has never been returned yet. The doctor would like to know where it is.

R. S. Kester has just received another lot of the Howe Sewing Machines. All in want of a good machine, that which last a life time, should give him a call.

Tarney, the butcher, always keeps on hand nice, clean, fresh meat of all kinds. He says he is opposed to persons sticking their heads out of windows as a sign for a meat shop.

A big laugh was had by a jolly set of "roosters," at the Auburn House, the other evening, over a pumpkin story that was told by a German, who done the job in good style.

Our Catholic friends will give a grand Fair on September 29th and 30th, at the new church. We hope our citizens will turn out largely, and aid them in paying for their church.

Remember that Dr. Orr, the celebrated veterinary surger, will give a free lecture on the street next Saturday afternoon, on the diseases of the horse. The doctor understands his business and comes well recommended.

COURT—Circuit Court is now in session Judge Best presiding. The time so far has been devoted to talking, judgement on cases on defaults and making up issues. The jury will be in attendance to-day, and cases will go to trial.

Prof Perkins, the celebrated penman is teaching a very large cass in that art at the school-house, in the evening. A term includes twelve lessons and several lectures. A second term will be given, if a sufficient number desire it.

The Normal Conservatory of Music, the first term of which commences October 7, promises to be a grand success. Prof Kinsey, the Principal, is highly spoken of wherever known, while all others connected are men of good standing and character.

The Independent ticket nominated in Steuben county by the people, has a fair prospect of success. A certain ring has got control of the affairs of that county, and the people are disgusted and want a change. The only way they can obtain this is by their votes. We hope they will remember this on the day of election.

Mary J. Holmes has written some splendid stories but her Edna Browning, now for sale at Davenport's is the best she has ever produced. It shows how a young lady can rise from a life of toil and poverty, to the highest position in society. It is an American story and deeply interesting.

C. D. Hare has bought out the grocery stock of S. U. Tarney, and having added a large invoice of fresh new goods is now ready to furnish the best at the lowest prices, at this popular stand. Mr. Hare has had a large experience in this trade and has always been recognized as a fair dealing honorable business man. He will enter the business again with every assurance of a liberal patronage.

Catholic Fair.

The Grand Fair to be given at the new Catholic Church by that denomination commencing next Teusday promises to be a great success. The ladies are busy in making arrangements, and the whole town seems to be interested. Quite a number of visitors are expected from abroad. Don't forget the time and be on hand to help in the good cause.

Melvin Brandon, son of Peter B., about 12 years old, was "throwing out" sand, last Monday, and after getting the pit all cleaned out, he thought it would be nice to dig a cave in the bank. His father told him several times not to do so, but the lad went on, and in a short time the bank was on the out-side of him. Fortunately there were several men near by, and they soon dug him out. He was completely covered and after getting out walked off as natural as if the "old man's" hand had been testing the seat of his trousers—or was about to, rather.

THE GRANGERS

A ROUSING TURN OUT.

Flags and Banners Streaming.

A GOOD DAY FOR THE FARMERS

The Grand Granger Picnic which came off here yesterday, brought together a large concourse of people, the procession being over mile long. Flags and banners and gay decorations made it attractive, and the music from various bands gave an inspiration to the scene.

It was a magnificent gathering, and our neighbor of the Press might have enjoyed it, had it not been for the frequent stabs it has tried to give the movement since its inception in the county. All the known parties contributed its numbers but party fealty was ignored. Political demagogues and mountebanks found no abiding place with them, but they stood up in the strength of their manhood as independent farmers. It is a healthy sign, the yeomanry rising up in this strength against the corruption and profligacy of the age. It did us good to note that the movement is not a failure, as some have represented it. Three thousand farmers in one gathering, indicate the zeal manifested, and it wont do to decry the movement as a failure.

We notice several mottoes in the procession, such as, Union Grange. "The plow—the wealth of the nation.

Concord and Jackson Grange. "An honest laborer—the noblest work of God."

The Hicksville band headed the procession, and several martial bands were on hand with the beating of lively drums.

The procession halted at the grove, in the bottom, east of town, where a speakers stand and seats had been prepared.—Nearly all the lodges in the county were represented.

The principal speaker for the occasion was Hon. James Buchanan, of Indianapolis, no relation to the President of that name, but formerly a Republican. Mr. B. is editor of the Sun, the organ of the Independent party of the State.

Mr. Buchanan opened his address with a discussion of the finance question, and rather favored an expansion of the volume of currency. He made a very eloquent address, to which undivided attention was given. He made some very good points and seemed to give general satisfaction.

Mr. T. C. Elson, one of our most enterprising farmers, who had the misfortune to loose his barn by fire a few months ago raised the frame work to a more extensive one on last Tuesday. It is 64x40, bank barn, and as built gives excellent room for stabling in basement. It is jolly work raising a large structure. All the neighbors call in, and the women get up a picnic dinner. We went for the dinner. It was in full view of the barn and it was fun to look over the table and see the good things, and then see the men work over at the barn. We like raisings on account of the dinner features.

Tom Mays, while anxious not to be personal in this campaign, would like to revive the old libel that the Republican candidate for Representative, at one time, favored a dissolution of the Union.—Press

Tom Mays, while anxious not to be personal, would like to revive indisputable facts in regard to the republican candidate for Representative. He knowingly signed a call for the Giddings Convention at Cleveland, for a dissolution of the union, four years before Jeff Davis thought of it. If he had not the "remotest idea" what he was signing, he would hardly be a fit person to send to the Legislature.—The fact is its a bad case for Mr. Taylor, and the Press tries to let him down as gently as possible.

The Hicksville Indipendent says: The Contractor of the bridge over the Maumee river of the Baltimore road has had several drawbacks and is not advanced with the work as far as would suit either him or the company. The fault has been with those furnishing the material for building the bridge and not with the contractor.—But now they have succeeded in getting everyting on hand and the work will be pushed to completion in short order, if no unforseen circumstances happen to prevent. Two piers are completed and a third soon will be, the fourth has just been commenced, but it is at the end and can be worked to better advantage than those at the water. The iron for the bridge is arriving, and two spans of it will be put in position immediately.

Flour $1.50 at the feed store, and delivered.

Corn 65cts per bushel at the feed store.

Mr. Kelley, the people's candidate for Congress, while working at his barn a few days ago, was kicked in the face by a colt and when found he was in an insensible condition. He is now able to be around but carries the scar. But what business has a candidate for Congress around a barn yard, and working his hands rough. He ought to be located in a nice office with carpet on the floor, where he can look down on the farmer and laborer and say "poor devils" work away, and send me to Congress. That has been the custom heretofore. By voting for Baker you still keep up this custom, by voting for Kelly you vote for a man that is not above you like a lord, but an honest man with every ability to defend your interests one who has bared his arm to toil and labor like yourselves, and therefore, a full sympathy with everything that is noble and honorable.

The Press of last week says, "Two years ago, the Courier regretted exceedingly that personalities were introduced into the local campaign. Determined to give no cause for regret this year, we have studiously avoided making personal allusions to democratic candidates."

That is right and we observe the same rule as to our opponents. But when a candidate's incompetency comes up, is it to be considered personal to allude to it? On that ground the most unfit person in the county might be nominated for office and no allusion could be made to his qualifications, because of its being personal. It further says: "To prove that this insinuation is flagrantly untrue we refer to Mr. Hood's neighbors, including his democratic opponent." Our authority for making the statement comes from one of his neighbors, as we do not know Mr. Hood personally. In speaking of the relative merits of the two candidates he said Mr. Hood lacked the ability. This is from the authority the Press refers to. While we have nothing of a personal nature against Mr. Hood, and do not propose to be actuated by any feeling of that kind, we claim that being a candidate before the people he is public property, and we have a right to speak of his qualifications for office. We do not intend to be unjust towards Mr. Hood.

Congressional Matters.

The fact is becoming generally known that Mr. Kelly, the people's candidate, the farmer's candidate, the laboring man's candidate for Congress, is just the man to represent the laboring class of the district. For years the people have been represented by those who have no sympathy in common with those that plow and dig, and sweat for their living, and these representations have of late years been confined to one family, of which Mr. Baker is an offshoot. Somebody connected with the Defrees family has always aspired to this position, and by hook and crook they have managed to keep it there An effort was made two years ago to get John nominated, not through any fault of his wife's relations.

We would ask intelligent voters of all parties, must one family have the disposal of this office and shall it dictate who shall be their representatives? Mr. Baker was nominated because he was a prominent lawyer, an excellent speaker, and because the Defrees family desired it and John wanted it. Mr. Kelly was not nominated because he was a smart lawyer and eloquent speaker, but because he was identified with the farming interests, because he came from the ranks of the laboring man, and is honest, upright and conscientious.

Mr. Kelley pledged himself before the Convention to stand by the interests of the people, and said party would not swerve him from such a course. Everybody personally acquainted with Mr. Kelly know him to be a man of his word and he never breaks a promise. If he is elected we are morally certain he will carry out just what he promises. The farmers heretofore have had no representation from their number, the laboring man has had to put up with some professional man, but now an opportunity offers to send one of their own class to Congress. Every farmer in the District can vote for him on the pledges he has made, and we believe they will if they look at their own welfare and the interest of the country.—We give below the opinions of several of our exchanges on the nomination:

From the Ligonier Banner.

Freeman Kelly.

Authentic reports from various parts of the district are to the effect that this gentlemen's nomination for Congress gives general satisfaction to the opponents of the dominant party. While no one (and least of all Mr. Kelly himself) claims that the nominee is possessed of extraordinary ability, and while all acquainted with both candidates readily admit Mr. Baker's superiority in point of scholarly attainments, no candid man will dispute the fact that Mr. Kelly is a man of ripe judgement, of strong common sense and of unquestionable integrity. He is emphatically a representative of the farming and laboring interests, his whole life being spent in these honorable pursuits.—The farmers now have it in their power to select one of their number as their representative in the halls of Congress.

Since Mr. Kelley's nomination numberless reports have been circulated to prejudice the public mind against him. He is accused of having been a Knight of the Golden Circle, a Son of Liberty and a rebel sympathizer during the war. Such charges, at one time, might have had a damaging effect, no matter how flimsy their foundation; but the people cannot at this period be gulled and misled into a disregard of their interests by the inventions of fanatical partisans.

We have it from the most trustworty authority that these charges are utterly destitute of truth. Mr. Kelly, while he did not personally enlist in the army, was ever ready to discharge his duty as a patriotic citizen. He freely contributed his mite to the support of soldiers' families and was foremost in filling the quotas of the tp. in which he resided. We think it entirely safe to claim that so far as the war records of the rival candidates for Congress are concerned, no advantages can be claimed for Baker.

From the Goshen Democrat.

The Congressional Convention, called at Kendallville on the 9th, of men of all parties united in one common sentiment of hostility to further political corruption and restoring our country to its former purity and prosperity, gave fourth no uncertain sound. It laid down a platform of principles for its candidate which must succeed at the polls without regard to party Mr. Kelly is an old citizen of DeKalb Co. He went into the wilderness with his axe in his hand, poor in purse, but rich in all the resources of industry, pluck and perseverance. He was one of those hardy pioneers to whom the word "fail" was never known—men who have made this wilderness country of ours to blossom as the rose, and who live to enjoy the fruits of their toil. But in this struggle in the wilderness, such men have but little time for polite literature or polished society.—They must be "nature's noblemen," but not the polished professional schoolman. Such is Freeman Kelly. But in him we see the true type of his class—with purity of character, temperate, earnest in his convictions of duty, and with a strength of natural intellect which commands respect He is fluent in speech, of a good personal presence, clear intellect and proposes to challenge his competitor to a joint canvass of the district. The working class to which he belongs, making all due allowance for the advantages which his competitor as a professional lawyer of prominent standing enjoys, will learn the true worth of native manhood, where the champion of the people's cause, rough and ready, will prove an over match for the polished craftiness of his more pretentious competitor. Mr. Kelly is a democrat politically as well as socially. John H. Baker is an aristocrat, politically and socially. He is destitute of real sympathy with the masses. What he affects is put on and made to order. Not so with Mr. Kelly.—His comes by natural endowment and by that closer contact with his fellows growing out of similar pursuits. Being to all intents and purposes a working man, by nature and pursuits, he is a proper representative of his class. The country longs for such representatives. It has been debauched and grows restive under the extortion and robbery of professional politicians. The revolution now going on in public sentiment is looking hopefully towards honesty, home-made men, identified with the toiling masses, and less after the professional office seeking beggars to lead them from this wilderness of political corruption. The people of the 13th congressional district will find such a man, we believe, in Freeman Kelly. Let them rally as one man to his support.—Wherever he comes among them let them honor him with their presence, and the the ballot box, let the true representative of the laboring classes be triumphantly elected.

Mr. Baker has accepted Mr. Kelly's challenge for a joint discussion.

Persons afflicted with Hernia, will do well to call at Davenport's, and examine the Jones' Ventilated Adjustable Truss—No springs, no elastic. One truss will last a lifetime. This is the best ever invented.

NEW GOODS—Mr. Stamets, of the millinery and fancy store, in Ensley's block, returned last week with an immense stock of new, fresh goods just from the east.—He has already opened them out, and we must say they make a most beautiful display. Everything in the millinery line in large assortment can be found here. Call in and see the many new additions to the fancy goods department. The ladies generally are invited to call and see the new stock just opened. No trouble to show goods.

Freeman Kelly has challenged his competitor, John H. Baker, to a joint discussion. Will Baker accept?

The democrats of Michigan have spoken out boldly and strongly in favor of specie payments, home rule and free trade. They even shove past Illinois in the onward movement.

The Maine election on Monday result in the election of the Radical ticket by a decreased majority, although there were over 100,000 votes polled against 80,948 last year.

In Portland, the principal city of Maine, at the election in 1873, the Republicans had 640 majority. At the lection in 1874 they had but 163 majority, on a largely increased vote.

The Vermont Democrats made a handsome showing at the recent election. They reduced the Republican majority some 7,000 and gained one member of the Senate and some thirty Representatives in the Legislature.

President Grant has very kindly told a committee of Southern gentlemen that he would have certainly voted the Civil Rights Bill had it passed Congress at the last session. But the President carfully retrained from telling them what he would do when it passes next winter.

Why are soldiers' "reunions" always so plenty just before the elections?—Hartford City Courier.

Why are "southern outrages" always so plenty. just before the elections?

Answer: To fire the northen heart that theives and plunderers may remain in office.

During the two years in which the Democrats managed the affairs of Indiana (in 1871-2) the total expence of the State government amounted to only $1,499,951.71. Last year under Republican management, it cost $1,427.334,72, or only about $72,000 less than it cost the Democrats to manage things for two years. These are the simple facts and the people can judge where their interests lie when they come to vote.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says:—The action of Post Master General Jewell and Secretary Bristow, announcing that there shall be no more free pen-knives in their departments in meeting with fierce condemnation in official circles at Washington. The Chronicle has a plaintive editorial entitled "Good bye pen-knives," from which it would appear that without the periodical pen-knife, clerks and various departments will be unable to pare their nails or peel their apples.—The Sentinel would suggest that unless they can buy pen-knives of their own they had better bite off their nails and eat their apples without paring.—It isn't clean but it's honest,

Oliver P. Morton has sufficiently recovered his health to make a speech with the Louisiana Revolution as a text Mr. Morton is as usual, very bitter toward the people of the South; very lenient toward the scoundrels who are plundering them, and hypocritically sensitive about the poor negro. As near as we can get at it, Mr. Morton who is a sort of Raw-head-and-bloody-bones, is trying to convert the troubles of the South into an invigorating tonic for the dilapidated Republican party of Indiana.

While the revolutionary manner in which the Kellogg usurpation in Louisiana was overthrown cannot be sustained, yet it is sad to reflect that a government to which they are so largely opposed, had to imposed upon the people by the bayonet. The facts is that Louisana, when Kellogg is put back, will be ruled just at Austria and Russia are ruled—by some other authority than the will of the people. Kellogg is as much of a usurper as McEnery was, save that his usurpation is accomplished under a protence of legal form.

A man named Salmond desiring to commit suicide chose a very sensible plan. He went to Niagara Falls, and walking quietly into the rapids was swept over the cataract. This is a sublime death and all the expenses of funeral and the ungenteel appliances of a coroner's jury are rendered unnecessary. Think of a leap over Niagara, never to be heard of more, as compared with hanging or throat cutting?—Of course the best policy is not to suicide at all, but to any one who is determind about the matter it is good advice to take a trip to the falls.

The most infamous public speech of the present year is that of Mr. O. P, Morton on the Louisiana business. It is a speech replete with barefaced misrepresentation, hypocricy, shameless lying. The attempt of the senatorial demogogue to make it appear that the "war" was a contest on the part of the Louisiana whites aganst the blacks is squarely contradicted by every event every expression. and every account and report, from every source, since the "war" begun. As a demagogue, the man Morton is tremendous. As a statesman, there are few greater humbugs.

Elections.

The Press shows up a rooster, for the election in Maine. It turns out that even in that darkened land the Republican majority has fallen off in porportion to the vote cast. It is squeezing pretty hard for a little juice, but as this is the first chance the Press has had to crow this fall, we can overlook it. Look on this picture.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

John H. Baker is down in Marshall county, enlighting the farmors about their rights, telling them what a working man he was when a five year old boy on his father's farm!—how he hates railroad and all other monopolies, and how he laughs in his sleep at the thought of the apparent ease in which he can humbug the people. Let any farmer get up when John is descanting upon railroad extortion, and advocating the rights and duty of Congress to protect them by regulating the price of freights on all railroads through the State—let him ask John if he has not been the paid attorney of railroad monopolies, if he does not travel on them free of charge, if he was not engagd to rob our tax payers of their money paid in the assest in the construction of the White Pigeon, Goshen and Warsaw railroads, without completing the road?—ask John these questions and then one other, how much dependence can be put in the honesty or promise of such a man to defend the producing classess against the extortion of railroads.—Goshen Democrat.

The negro troubles which occurred about ten years ago in Jamaica seem likely to be renewed. The island contains about 440,000 negroes and 15,000 whites. The colored people demanded rights which were denied them and when they attempted to frighten the authorities into yielding they were promptly put down by millitary force. About 2,000 negroes perished and the lesson had its effect during the past decade. Now they are rebellous again.

The New York Evening Post claims that free trade, home rule and hard money is a creed which it began to preach years before the World had a being. Very well; it is about time, then, that it ceased to fight one way and preach another. No journal in this country has done more than the Post for the party in power, which has set every one of these principles under its feet. The Post, contends that neither political organization is to be trusted, and yet it keeps on helping the republican party. It has declared: The remedy, we say again, is disorganization and reformation. It is substantially that which has occured in Illinoise. Call the thing a rose or any thing you please, the real question is. Will the Post work for it? Why don't that journal step forward and take a leading part in the business of disorganization and reformation? It would find a strong host of comrades around it that would follow it to certain victory.

The account of the burning of Mill No. 1 at Fall River, on saturday becomes more terrible as the news comes in. Not less than forty young girls lost their lives and at least eighty others were more or less injured. The fire broke out in the upper story and as the only chance of escape for the inmates was by the way of an inside stairway, that was soon closed by the wall of fire. These poor creatures thus foiled in the attempt to penetrate to the outer air, were seized with the awful frenzy of despair and rushing to windows flung themselves headlong from the dizzy height. This fearful loss of lives might have been avoided entirely had there been adequate means of escape. Outside stairways would have furnished this means of escape. As it was the calamity was one of the most fearful which has ever befallen a city. The lesson is an awful one and should be heeded in the future. We doubt if the proprietor of this mill can held entirely guiltless. They owe it to their employees to provide buildings in which at least life is safe.

After working for ten years at reconstruction, the republican party has got so far advanced that the pretended governor of Louisiana has to be set on the neck of the people and held there by the general government, a congressman has to run out of Alabama for safety, and the people all through the South are according to Senator Morton. shooting each other down for the mere fun of the thing in the cotten fields and the cane brakes. This is rather slow business. At such a rate of progress, when does the party in power expect to restore anything like law and order to the South, to say nothing of prosperity and happiness? It is a simple question in the rule of three. If sombody would say just how far in advance the Louisiana of to-day is compared to the Louisiana of ten yerrs ago, the problem could be worked out. To simple minded people it looks as if reconstruction were going backward.

Senator Morton lays the blame of the failure of Southern government upon the leaders of the South, who he says were too proud to take part in the reconstructing their several states and threw the work upon ignorant negroes scalawags. The senator forgets that the southern ladies and indeed most of the rebels of any standing were disfranchised at the beginning of the reconstruction era, and could not have anything to say in politics even if they wanted to. He also forgets how kindly all men who had anything to do in the rebellion were informed by himself and others of like disposition at the North that it would become them to take a back seat and not attempt to mingle in politics for a few years.—Verily a short memory is sometimes a great convenience for a popular orator. The welcome which the Southerners received when they finally did try to take a hand in their own government is a sufficient proof of the style in which their interference would have been received just after the war

A Monstrous Mockery.

The New York organ of the Washington administration thus briefly outlines the situation in Louisiana.

There open insurrection in a state, blood has already been shed, the recognised state government has been overturned by an armed mob, and if the federal power does not interfere, utter anarchy will very soon prevail. These are the facts, nakedly stated—but how much there is to modify these fact! The people who have risen against the state government have been ruthlessly plundered and oppressed; the governor who was turned out has abused his office, and the state government which has temporarily been upset was a disgrace to the whole country. If we admit one set of facts, we must admit the other also. No man can honestly survey the codition of affairs without disgust. The spectacle of United States troops being sent to New Orleans to restor the Kellogg gang to power may be pleasing to some people, but the general public can only look upon it with regret.

This is unusal language in an administration party organ. It is language indicating a spirit of independence—some truncheon flourishers of the administration would call it insubordination—that regards the plain truth as of more importance to the general public than the necessities of spoilsmen placehunters. It is a brief but suggestive statement of what evry man of respectable information knows to be the truth.

The Kellogg government of Louisiana was a disgrace to the whole country. It was more than a disgrace.—In its beginning it was a monstrous outrage, not only upon the state of Louisiana, but upon the whole country upon the federal republic assuming to be a nation governed under established formed of law. Kellogg was never elected governor of Louisiana. This fact was ascertained and determind by the senate committee apointed to investigate the matter, upon an inquirly into all facts. The committee were only not satisfied that anybody was lawfully elected; but if either candidates was lawfully elected, McEnery was the candidate. That the whole election was voied by reason of monstrous fraud was probably the conclusion which the facts would have best warranted, and upon this conclusion the administration senator, Mr. Carpenter, most vehemently insisted. His exhaustive speech on the subject, in the last session, should be again read by people who would understand the monstrous outrage against our republican institutions perpetrated by the Kellogg usurpation.

Melvin Brandon, son of Peter B., about 12 years old, was "throwing out" sand, last Monday, and after getting the pit all cleaned out, he thought it would be nice to dig a cave in the bank. His father told him several times not to do so, but the lad went on, and in a short time the bank was on the out-side of him. Fortunately there were several men near by, and they soon dug him out. He was completely covered and after getting out walked off as natural as if the "old man's" hand had been testing the seat of his trousers—or was about to, rather.

THE GRANGERS

A ROUSING TURN OUT.

Flags and Banners Streaming.

A GOOD DAY FOR THE FARMERS

The Grand Granger Picnic which came off here yesterday, brought together a large concourse of people, the procession being over mile long. Flags and banners and gay decorations made it attractive, and the music from various bands gave an inspiration to the scene.

It was a magnificient gathering, and our neighbor of the Press might have enjoyed it, had it not been for the frequent stabs it has tried to give the movement since its inception in the county. All the known parties contributed its numbers but party fealty was ignored. Political demagogues and mountebanks found no abiding place with them, but they stood up in the strength of their manhood as independent farmers. It is a healthy sign, the yeomanry rising up in this strength against the corruption and profligacy of the age. It did us good to note that the movement is not a failure, as some have represented it. Three thousand farmers in one gathering, indicate the zeal manifested, and it wont do to decry the movement as a failure.

We notice several mottoes in the procession, such as, Union Grange. "The plow—the wealth of the nation.

Concord and Jackson Grange. "An honest laborer—the noblest work of God."

The Hicksville band headed the procession, and several martial bands were on hand with the beating of lively drums.

The procession halted at the grove, in the bottom, east of town, where a speakers stand and seats had been prepared.—Nearly all the lodges in the county were represented.

The principal speaker for the occasion was Hon. James Buchanan, of Indianapolis, no relation to the President of that name, but formerly a Republican. Mr. B. is editor of the Sun; the organ of the Independent party of the State.

Mr. Buchanan opened his address with a discussion of the finance question, and rather favored an expansion of the volume of currency. He made a very eloquit address, to which undivided attention was given. He made some very good points and seemed to give general satisfaction

Mr. T. C. Elson, one of our most enterprising farmers, who had the misfortune to loose his barn by fire a few months ago raised the frame work to a more extensive one on last Tuesday. It is 64x40, bank barn, and as built gives excellent room for stabling in basement. It is jolly work raising a large structure. All the neighbors call in, and the women get up a picnic dinner. We went for the dinner. It was in full view of the barn and it was fun to look over the table and see the good things, and then see the men work over at the barn. We like raisings on account of the dinner features.

Tom Mays, while anxious not to be personal in this campaign, would like to revive the old libel that the Republican candidate for Representative, at one time, favored a dissolution of the Union.—Press

Tom Mays, while anxious not to be personal, would like to revive indisputable facts in regard to the republican candidate for Representative... He knowingly signed a call for the Giddings Convention at Cleveland, for a dissolution of the union, four years before Jeff Davis thought of it. If he had not the "remotest idea" what he was signing, he would hardly be a fit person to send to the Legislature.—The fact is its a bad case for Mr. Taylor, and the Press tries to let him down as gently as possible.

The Hicksville Indipendent says: The Contractor of the bridge over the Maumee river of the Baltimore road has had several drawbacks and is not advanced with the work as far as would suit either him or the company. The falt has been with those furnishing the material for building the bridge and not with the contractor.—But now they have succeeded in getting everyting on hand and the work will be pushed to completion in short order, if no unforseen circumstances happen to prevent. Two piers are completed and a third soon will be, the fourth has just been commenced, but it is at the end and can be worked to better advantage than those at the water. The iron for the bridge is arriving, and two spans of it will be put in position immediately.

Flour $1.50 at the feed store, and delivered.

Corn 65cts per bushel at the feed store.

Mr. Kelley, the people's candidate for Congress, while working at his barn a few days ago, was kicked in the face by a colt and when found he was in an insensible condition. He is now able to be around but carries the scar. But what business has a candidate for Congress around a barn yard, and working his hands rough. He ought to be located in a nice office with carpet on the floor, where he can look down on the farmer and laborer and say "poor devils" work away, and send me to Congress. That has been the custom heretofore. By voting for Baker you still keep up this custom, by voting for Kelly you vote for a man that is not above you like a lord, but an honest man with every ability to defend your interests one who has bared his arm to toil and labor like yourselves, and therefore, a full sympathy with everything that is noble and honorable.

"The Press of last week says, "Two years ago, the Courier regretted exceedingly that personalities were introduced into the local campaign. Determined to give no cause for regret this year, we have studiously avoided making personal allusions to democratic candidates."

That is right and we observe the same rule as to our opponents. But when a candidate's incompetency comes up, is it to be considered personal to allude to it? On that ground the most unfit person in the county might be nominated for office and no allusion could be made to his qualifications, because of its being personal. It further says. "To prove that this insinuation is flagrantly untrue we refer to Mr. Hood's neighbors, including his democratic opponent." Our authority for making the statement comes from one of his neighbors, as we do not know Mr. Hood personally. In speaking of the relative merits of the two candidates he said Mr. Hood lacked the ability. This is from the authority the Press refers to. While we have nothing of a personal nature against Mr. Hood, and do not propose to be actuated by any feeling of that kind, we claim that being a candidate before the people he is public property, and we have a right to speak of his qualifications for office. We do not intend to be unjust towards Mr. Hood.

Congressional Matters.

"The fact is becoming generally known that Mr. Kelly, the people's candidate, the farmer's candidate, the laboring man's candidate for Congress, is just the man to represent the laboring class of the district. For years the people have been represented by those who have no sympathy in common with those that plow and dig, and sweat for their living, and these representations have of late years been confined to one family, of which Mr. Baker is an offshoot. Somebody connected with the Defrees family has always aspired to this position, and by hook and crook they have managed to keep it there An effort was made two years ago to get John nominated, not through any fault of his wife's relations.

We would ask intelligent voters of all parties, must one family have the disposal of this office and shall it dictate who shall be their representatives? Mr. Baker was nominated because he was a prominent lawyer, an excellent speaker, and because the Defrees family desired it and John wanted it. Mr. Kelly was not nominated because he was a smart lawyer and eloquent speaker, but because he was identified with the farming interests, because he came from the ranks of the laboring man, and is honest, upright and conscientious.

Mr. Kelley pledged himself before the Convention to stand by the interests of the people, and said party would not swerve him from such a course. Everybody personally acquainted with Mr. Kelly know him to be a man of his word and he never breaks a promise. If he is elected we are morally certain he will carry out just what he promises. The farmers heretofore have had no representation from their number, the laboring man has had to put up with some professional man, but now an opportunity offers to send one of their own class to Congress. Every farmer in the District can vote for him on the pledges he has made, and we believe they will if they look at their own welfare and the interest of the country.—We give below the opinions of several of our exchanges on the nomination:

From the Ligonier Banner.

Freeman Kelly.

Authentic reports from various parts of the district are to the effect that this gentlemen's nomination for Congress gives general satisfaction to the opponents of the dominant party. While no one (and least of all Mr. Kelly himself) claims that the nominee is possessed of extraordinary ability, and while all acquainted with both candidates readily admit Mr. Baker's superiority in point of scholarly attainments, no candid man will dispute the fact that Mr. Kelly is a man of ripe judgement, of strong common sense and of unquestionable integrity. He is emphatically a representative of the farming and laboring interests, his whole life being spent in these honorable pursuits.—The farmers now have it in their power to select one of their number as their representative in the halls of Congress.

Since Mr. Kelley's nomination numberless reports have been circulated to prejudice the public mind against him. He is accused of having been a Knight of the Golden Circle, a Son of Liberty and a rebel sympathizer during the war. Such charges, at one time, might have had a damaging effect, no matter how flimsy their foundation; but the people cannot at this period be gulled and misled into a disregard of their interests by the inventions of fanatical partisans.

We have it from the most trustworthy authority that these charges are utterly destitute of truth. Mr. Kelly, while he did not personally enlist in the army, was ever ready to discharge his duty as a patriotic citizen. He freely contributed his mite to the support of soldiers' families and was foremost in filling the quotas of the tp. in which he resided. We think is entirely safe to claim that so far as the war records of the rival candidates for Congress are concerned, no advantages can be claimed for Baker.

From the Goshen Democrat.

The Congressional Convention, called at Kendallville on the 9th, of men of all parties united in one common sentiment of hostility to further political corruption and restoring our country to its former purity and prosperity, gave fourth no uncertain sound. It laid down a platform of principles for its candidate which must succeed at the polls, without regard to party Mr. Kelly is an old citizen of DeKalb Co. He went into the wilderness with his axe in his hand, poor in purse, but rich in all the resources of industry, pluck and perseverance. He was one of those hardy pioneers to whom the word "fail" was never known—men who have made this wilderness country of ours to blossom as the rose, and who live to enjoy the fruits of their toil. But in this struggle in the wilderness, such men have but little time for polite literature or polished society.—They must be "nature's noblemen," but not the polished professional schoolman. Such is Freeman Kelly. But in him we see the true type of his class—with purity of character, temperate, earnest in his convictions of duty, and with a strength of natural intellect which commands respect He is fluent in speech, of a good personal presence, clear intellect and proposes to challenge his competitor to a joint canvass of the district. The working class to which he belongs, making all due allowance for the advantages which his competitor as a professional lawyer of prominent standing enjoys, will learn the true worth of native manhood, where the champion of the people's cause, rough and ready, will prove an over match for the polished craftiness of his more pretentious competitor. Mr. Kelly is a democrat politically as well as socially. John H. Baker is an aristocrat, politically and socially. He is destitute of real sympathy with the masses. What he affects is put on and made to order. Not so with Mr. Kelly.—His comes by natural endowment and by that closer contact with his fellows growing out of similar pursuits. Being to all intents and purposes a working man, by nature and pursuits, he is a proper representative of his class. The country longs for such representatives. It has been debauched and grows restive under the extortion and robbery of professional politicians. The revolution now going on in public sentiment is looking hopefully towards honesty, home-made men, identified with the toiling masses, and less after the professional office seeking beggars to lead them from this wilderness of political corruption. The people of the 13th congressional district will find such a man, we believe, in Freeman Kelly. Let them rally as one man to his support.—Wherever he comes among them let them honor him with their presence, and the ballot box. Let the true representative of the laboring classes be triumphantly elected.

Mr. Baker has accepted Mr. Kelly's challenge for a joint discussion.

Dr. J. Orr, of Niles, Mich., a vetenary surgeon of over thirty years experience, is stopping in town a few days.

Persons afflicted with Hernia, will do well to call at Davenport's, and examine the Jones' Ventilated Adjustable Truss—No springs, no elastic. One truss will last a lifetime. This is the best ever invented.

NEW GOODS—Mr. Stamets, of the millinery and fancy store, in Ensley's block, returned last week with an immense stock of new, fresh goods just from the east.—He has already opened them out, and we must say they make a most beautiful display. Everything in the millinery line in large assortment can be found here. Call in and see the many new additions to the fancy goods department. The ladies generally are invited to call and see the new stock just opened. No trouble to show goods.

Election Notice.

In persuance to an order to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court which is as follows, to-wit:

State of Indiana, DeKalb County, s. s.

To the Sheriff of DeKalb County greeting:

IN THE BARN.

BY BENJAMIN F. TAYLOR.

The Swallows.

A great dim barn with the fragrant bay
Up to the beam with the winter's hay,
And its shrunken, siding wasp-nest gray;

Where the cracks between run up and down,
Like the narrow lines in a striped gown,
And let in light of a golden brown.

They are bars of bronze—they are silver snow—
As the sunshine falls, or sifting slow
The white flakes drift on the wealth below

Of the clover blossoms faint with June
That had heard all day his small bassoon
As the ground-bee played his hum-drum tune.

Ah, what would you give to have again
Your pulse keep time with the dancing rain,
When flashing through at the diamond pane

You saw the swallow's rapier wings
As they cut the air in ripples and rings,
And laughed and talked like human things?

When they drank each other's health, you thought—
For the creak of the corks you surely caught—
[illegible]

Till the mud-walled homes with a foreign look,
A pictured street in an Aztec book,
Began to show in each rafter'd nook?

Never again! Alack and alas!
Like a breath of life on the looking-glass,
Like a censer smoke the pictures pass.

The Flails.

"Well, Jack and Jim," said the farmer gray,
"The flour is out and we'll thrash to-day!"—
A hand is on the granary floor,
And a step is on the threshing door—
It is not his and it is not theirs—
He went above by the Golden Stairs;
The boys are men and the nicknames grown,
'Tis James Esquire and Reverend John.

How they waltzed the portly sheaves about
As they loosed their belts, and shook them out
In double rows on the threshing floor
Clean as the deck of a Seventy-four!
And down in the midst in a tawny braid
The sculptured heads of the straw were laid;
It looked a poor man's family bed!
Ah, more than that, 'twas a carpet fair
Whereon the flails with their measured tread
Should time the step of the answered prayer,
"Give us this day our daily bread!"
Then the light half-whirl and the hickory clash
With the full free swing of a buckskin lash,
And the tramp—tramp—trump, when the bed is new.
In regular, dull, monotonous stroke,
And the click—clack—click, on the floor of oak
When straw grows thin and the blows strike through;
And the French-clock tick to the dancing feet
With the small tattoo of the driven sleet,
When the bouncing kernels bright and brown
Leap lightly up as the flails come down.

The Fanning Mill.

Hang up the flails by the big barn-door!
Bring out the mill of the one-boy power!
Nothing at all but a breeze in a box,
Clumsy and red in rattles and rocks,
Sieves to be shaken and hopper to feed,
A Chinaman's hat turned upside down,
The grain slips through at a hole in the crown—
Out with the chaff and in with the speed!
The crank clanks round with a boy's quick will,
The fan flies fast till it fills the mill
With its breezy vanes, as the whirled leaves fly
In an open book when the gust goes by,
And the jerky jar and the zig-zag jolt
Of the shaken sieves, and the jingling bolt,
And the grate of cogs and the axle's clank
And the rowlock jog of the crazy crank,
And the dusty rush of the gusty chaff
The worthless wreck of the harvest's raff
And never a lull, the brisk breeze blows
From the troubled grain its tattered clothes,
Till tumbled and tossed it downward goes
The rickety route by the rackety stair,
Clean as the sand that the simoon snows,
And drifts at last in a bank so fair
You know you have found the Answer'd Prayer.

The Old Barn's Tenantry.

The rooster stalks on the manger's ledge,
He has a tail like a scimetar's edge;

A marshal's plume on his Afghan neck,
An admiral's stride on his quarter deck.

He rules the roost and he walks the bay,
With a dreadful cold and a Turkish way,

Two broadsides fires with his rapid wings—
This sultan proud, of a line of kings—

One guttural laugh, four blasts of horn,
Five rusty syllables rouse the morn!

The Saxon lambs in their woolen tabs
Are playing school with their a, b, abs;

A, e! I, o! All the cattle spell
Till they make the blatant vowels tell,

And a half-laugh whinny fills the stalls
When down the rack the clover falls.

A dove is waltzing around his mate
Two chevrons black on his wings of slate,

And showing off with wooing note
The satin shine of his golden throat.

It is Ovid's "Art of Love" re-told
In a binding fine of blue and gold!

Ah, the buxom girls that helped the boys—
The nobler Helens of humbler Troys—

As they stripped the husks with rustling fold
From eight-rowed corn as yellow as gold,

By the candle-light in pumpkin bowls,
And the gleams that showed fantastic holes

In the quaint old lantern's tattooed tin,
From the hermit glim set up within;

By the rarer light in girlish eyes
As dark as wells, or as blue as skies,

I hear the laugh when the ear is red,
I see the blush with the forfeit paid,

The cedar cakes with the ancient twist,
The cider cup that the girls have kissed,

And I see the fiddler through the dusk
As he twangs the ghost of "Money Musk!"

The boys and girls in a double row
Wait face to face 'till the magic bow

Shall whip the tune from the violin,
And the merry pulse of the feet begin.

Money Musk.

In shirt of check and tallowed hair
The fiddler sits in the bulrush chair
Like Moses' basket stranded there
On the brink of Father Nile.
He feels the fiddle's slender neck,
Picks out the notes with thrum and check;
And times the tune with nod and beck,
And thinks it a weary while.
All ready! Now he gives the call,
Cries, "Honor to the ladies!" All
The jolly tides of laughter fall
And ebb in a happy smile.

"Begin." D-o-w-n comes the bow on every string,
"First couple join right hands and swing!"
As light as any blue-bird's wing
"Swing once and a half times round."
Whirls Mary Martin all in blue—
Calico gown and stockings new,
And tinted eyes that tell you true,
Dance all to the dancing sound.

She flits about big Moses Brown
Who holds her hands to keep her down
And thinks her hair a golden crown
And his heart turns over once?
His cheek with Mary's breath is wet;
It gives a second somerset!
He means to win the maiden yet,
Alas, for the awkward dunce!

"Your stoga boot has crushed my toe!"
"I'd rather dance with one-legged Joe,"
"You clumsy fellow!" "Pass below!"
And the first pair dance apart.
Then "Forward six!" advance, retreat,
Like midges gay in sunbeam street
'Tis Money Musk by merry feet
And the Money Musk by heart!

"Three quarters round your partner swing!"
"Across the set!" The rafters ring,
The girls and boys have taken wing
And have brought their roses out!
'Tis "Forward six!" with rustic grace
Ah, rarer far than—"Swing in place!"
Than golden clouds of old point-lace
They bring the dance about.

Then clasping hands all—"Right and left!"
All swiftly weave the measure deft
Across the woof in loving weft
And the Money Musk is done!
Oh, dancers of the rustling husk,
Good night, sweet hearts, 'tis growing dusk,
Good night for aye to Money Musk,
For the heavy march begun!

THE COQUETTE OF ARLON.

In very ancient times the inhabitants of Arlon worshiped the moon, and the learned maintain that the name of Arlon was derived from two words ara luna, signifying "altar of the moon." It is perhaps for this reason that the young women of this ancient town now and then had odd fancies. Apropos of this, I propose to relate a story which Mr. Adolphe Dechamps must have listened to when he was Governor of Luxembourg, for it is one of the traditions of that province. All the Arlonese knew it, and I write it down for the benefit of those who have not been governors of provinces, and whose ancestors have not worshiped the moon.

It is said that about one hundred years ago there resided in Arlon a young girl named Gertrude. She was eighteen years of years age, and was gay, frank and good-natured, always smiling and happy, and full of life and activity. She was the daughter of Charles Stock, a wealthy proprietor of the little town, and generally designated as Stock, Jr., to distinguish him from his father and grandfather, who were living. "They last long in the family," was a local expression.

Gertrude had many admirers, but none of them appeared to make an impression on her heart. This, with her fascinating manners, gave her the name of the "Coquette of Arlon." Do not take this appellation in its hardest sense, for her father and mother allowed her to do as she pleased, having the utmost confidence in her. And it was not misplaced. Among the many who sought her hand in marriage were four young men of the town who deserved special attention, their names, Sigismond de Vletter, Gilles Collin, Wenceslas Stroobant, and Lambert Von Moll. The first named was so calm and undemonstrative that the other three did not give themselves any uneasiness about him. They, on the contrary, were so pressing that the neighbors all expected that she would certainly marry one of them.

The four suitors pressed their claims, each one in his own way urging her to decide in his favor. So one day in September, 1743, she devised a stratagem by which to test their courage and affection. Her parents once more allowed her to have her own way, for as she never undertook anything without first consulting them, we may suppose that they were not the stern and tyrannical parents that usually fall to the lot of the unfortunate heroines of modern romances. About a quarter of a league from Arlon, in a field belonging to her father, Gertrude had often noticed an old Roman tomb, which no one dared approach on account of its ghostly reputation. All sorts of strange and mysterious stories were told about it. This tomb has now disappeared, I cannot say how. Gertrude resolved to make it the center of her batteries.

Gilles Collin came as usual and uttered more ardent and passionate protestation of love than ever, declaring that he would willingly walk over burning coals to please her.

"I am not so unreasonable as to require that of you," she said; "all things considered, I do not refuse to marry you, but I wish to have a proof of your devotion, and at the same time of your courage."

"Very well," answered Gilles, "I will give you any proof of that you can demand; only say what it shall be."

"You know," replied she, "the ancient tomb which is situated on a knoll a quarter of a league from town."

"Yes," replied the puzzled Gilles, "I have seen it from a distance; there is nothing remarkable about it."

"Well, this evening at 9 o'clock I want you to go, without saying a word to any one about it, and lie down in the old tomb.

"In the witches' den? What a caprice."

"And you must remain perfectly motionless until midnight."

"But, Gertrude, what are you thinking of? What is your object?"

"You are a coward. You are trembling already. Perhaps it is a caprice, but I have my project, and I wish to try you. If you do as I wish I shall know that I can trust you, and, providing that you remain there from 9 o'clock until midnight, my heart is yours. If you refuse I shall marry some one else."

Struck by the decided tone of the girl, Gilles dared not offer further objection, but he thought of the freezing recitals to which he had listened; of apparitions from another world that had been seen gliding around the tomb, and of the witches who held their nocturnal meetings and made it a place of deposit for their unguents and diabolical compounds. In truth fires had sometimes been seen burning near there through the night, and surrounded by groups of sinister or grotesque-looking faces; but they were undoubtedly gypsies, with which Luxembourg and Limbourg were at that period infested. But some persons professed to have seen supernatural beings, and thousands of wonderful stories were related about them. For a year, however, nothing had been seen there, and though Gilles was more afraid than he would have cared to acknowledge, he was so deeply enamored of the young girl that he accepted the condition, and promised to do what was required of him without divulging his intentions to any one.

Shortly afterward Wenceslas Stroobant came in his turn. Gertrude gave him a very gracious reception. He was handsome and rich, and fully conscious of these advantages, he felt confident of the success of his suit.

"It is not your fortune that tempts me," said Gertrude to him, greatly flattered.

Wenceslas bowed, as if he would say, "I understand, I have other attractions."

"I feel a deep interest in you," pursued she, "and would willingly give you my hand if you would render me a service that will prove your courage."

"You have but to command me," said the handsome young man; "I am entirely at your service."

"Well, then, you must know that one of my relatives has been killed in a duel. He is in the woods, and we are making every effort to secure him an honorable burial. In the meantime, the body is to be placed in the Roman tomb at 9 o'clock this evening. As the tomb is neither covered nor inclosed, we very greatly fear it may be disturbed; therefore I beg of you to go there at half-past nine.

"To the witches' den? What an idea!"

"You are afraid already? Mon Dieu, how faint-hearted the young men are."

"I am not afraid, but you are giving me a very queer commission."

"Call it a fancy, if you will; but I can only confide this to one who is very devoted, for it is absolutely necessary to conceal this my mystery from everybody. You must go there at exactly half-past nine, and you must dress yourself to personate an angel of light, and carry a torch in your hand. The fearful stories of which the tomb has been the subject will be of service to you, and those who may be scheming to carry away or rob the dead will, upon seeing you sitting at the foot of the tomb, with your torch in your hand, be so terrified that none will dare approach. At midnight you may return home. Will you do it?"

"I will," said Wenceslas, who feared to displease her.

"I must be certain that you have performed this service; but remember. not a word about it to any one, and at this price my hand is yours."

Wenceslas regained his usual composure, smothering as best he could those superstitious fears which sometimes assail the strongest minds. He swore that he would be both obedient and discreet, and that at half-past nine precisely he would be at his post, where he would watch the dead so carefully that not even a bat should approach. He soon took leave in order to make his preparations.

A few moments afterward Lambert von Moll, also faithful, appeared to render his homage to the young lady. He was a lawyer, and everybody predicted a brilliant future for him.

"If you really love me," said the coquette, "I am going to prove it. Some of the neighbors whom you know, and who are our enemies, wish to injure us. For this reason they have placed a dead body in the Roman tomb, which belongs to our family. I wish you to make every possible effort to carry off the corpse."

"I?" interrupted Lambert.

"Certainly. I know you are brave."

"That is true, but this is such a ridiculous commission."

"The body will doubtless be guarded by mere children, and in order to disperse them you must blacken your face and make yourself as ugly as you are handsome; in short, disguise yourself as a demon. Call it a ridiculous commission, if you will; but go to the Roman tomb at precisely ten—take up the body and bring it here, and you will gain all my gratitude."

Lambert von Moll reflected for a moment, and deciding that it was not too great a price for the heart of Gertrude, he, like the two others, promised punctuality and discretion, and accordingly withdrew to make his preparations.

Sigismond de Vletter then came to pay his respects to Mr. and Mrs. Stock; he wished Gertrude good evening, and conversed a few moments with her while taking a turn in the garden. Having drawn him aside, Gertrude, who had her projects, proposed he should in his turn assume a character in her comedy. But Sigismond, who perceived some malicious intention in spite of her grave tones, told her that for anything serious or important she might command, but that such childishness was only proper for children. The coquette, not finding him very complaisant, left him.

The night was very cold, and at 9 o'clock Gilles Collin arrived at the Roman tomb. He had furnished himself with a small lantern, not being very courageous. He went all around the tomb, and carefully examined the bushes and every place in which he thought any one might be concealed, and then, not at all reassured by the silence and solitude which surrounded him, he extinguished his light and enveloped himself from head to foot in a long white sheet, which he had brought concealed under his coat, and extending himself at full length on the tomb, soon became as gloomy and motionless as the object he personated. Very lugubrious were the thoughts that passed through his mind while lying there on his winding-sheet. A very long quarter of an hour had elapsed when he was startled by the cry of a screech owl. He uncovered his eyes and looked around, but could see nothing except some vague reflections of light in the direction of the town. Soon, however, he heard, through the silence of the night, footsteps which were evidently coming to him. He raised his head; rays of light caught his eyes, and he saw, not far off, a mysterious phantom, habited in a long robe of cloth or silver, which was confined by a blue girdle. The head of this apparition was crowned with stars (made of gilt paper), while from its shoulders floated two large pieces of muslin, representing wings.

Poor Gilles, who had not foreseen such an incident, cowered down under his sheet, utterly unable to explain the meaning of what he saw.

"It is an angel," said he to himself. But the angel coughed.

"It is not an inhabitant of heaven," thought Gilles; "if it is one of the sorcerers I am in a very bad situation."

The angel, on his part, appeared to be ill at ease. He cast an oblique glance at the winding-sheet that covered the dead, and did not appear anxious to make a closer examination. Holding the torch in his hand, Wenceslas Stroobant, thus transformed into an angel, appeared to make a great effort to seat himself at the foot of the tomb, and if the dead had not been in such a state of perturbation he would have noticed that the angel was trembling with cold, or something else. Wenceslas seemed to have contracted a very bad cold, which was manifested by a severe fit of coughing and sneezing, and being unable to hold his handkerchief, he was obliged to use one of his wings to wipe the moisture from his nose and mantle.

"That is not an angel, certainly," thought the dead. "It must be a sorcerer. Who knows if he be not master of ceremonies? He is there with his torch to call the others, and I shall find myself in the midst of their revels, and if the devil preside over them what shall I do?"

While making these disagreeable reflections he was struck by the sudden agitation of the angel of the torch, who appeared to behold a fearful object. It was a third personage approaching.

This latter (Lambert von Moll) was disguised as a specter of darkness. As he drew near, the light of the torch, which gleamed on him at intervals, gave him a fearful appearance. He did not appear greatly terrified, but, probably from motives of prudence, he approached in a zigzag line, as though he saw something he did not expect—the silvery robe of the angel glittering in the torchlight, and Lambert could not account to himself for this singular costume.

As the angel, whose trembling limbs refused to support him, remained fixed in his place, Lambert decided to make a flank movement, and accordingly he passed around to the other end of the tomb.

His disguise was frightful; he was muffled in an ox-hide, which was adorned with the long horns and ears; his face was blackened, and the lower part of it concealed by an immense red beard. In his hand he carried one of those wooden forks which are used to spread new-mown hay. Wenceslas, who had never lost sight of the demon, now signalized himself by the greatest effort of courage he had ever made in his life. He suddenly advanced with the torch at arm's length before him, and the specter recoiled. But the flame touched Lambert's great beard, and in an instant it was in a blaze. He quickly tore it off and sprang on the angel, whose torch fell and was extinguished.

They seized each other by the hair, mutually astonished, perhaps, to find each other palpable.

The corpse, who had seen all, and had begun to question whether it was really a scene among the witches, now took Wenceslas and Lambert for a good and a bad angel who were disputing possession of him, and overcome by a terrible fear, he suddenly sprang out of his tomb with his winding sheet around him, and took flight across the fields.

The two companions, seeing the dead rush forth, were seized with the same terror, and letting go of each other by common consent, they fled as though pursued by all the witches.

The three lovers returned to their respective lodgings, utterly overcome by what they had seen and passed through; and the next day none of them were able to leave their beds. To finish their adventures, Gertrude sent word to them that they must have very little esteem for her, since, instead of fulfilling their promises, they had run away in such a ridiculous manner. And she married Sigismond.

The Age of Coal.

It seems probable that vegetable matter may, under favorable conditions, be converted into coal much more rapidly than most chemical geologists are in the habit of assuming. At least, a curious instance of an approach toward such conversion within the historic period, has been brought before the German Geological Society. In one of the old mines of the Upper Hartz some of the wood originally employed as timbering has become so far altered as to assume most of the characteristics of a new lignite, or brown coal. It appears that certain of the levels in the ancient workings of this mine are filled with refuse matter, consisting chiefly of fragments of clay-slate, more or less saturated with mine water, and containing here and there fragments of the old timbering. This wood, when in the mine, is wet, and of a leathery consistence, but on exposure to the air it rapidly hardens to a solid substance, having most, if not all, the characteristics of a true lignite. It breaks with a well-marked conchoidal fracture, and the parts which are most altered present the black lustrous appearance characteristic of the German "pitch coals." At the same time, chemical examination of the same wood shows that it stands actually nearer to true coal than do some of the younger tertiary lignites. This instance seems, therefore, to prove that pine wood, when placed under highly favorable conditions, may be converted into a genuine lignite within a period which, from what we know of the history of mining in Hartz, cannot have extended beyond four centuries.

Hair Snakes.

The common belief is that these creatures are a transformation of a horse hair that has remained for some time in the water. "When a walking stick," says Dr. Slack, "becomes a snake, a horse hair will become a worm. As the former miracle has not taken place since the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, it is safe to say that the latter transformation has not recently been made. A dry hair placed in water will absorb the moisture, and from the unequal expansion of the exterior and interior layers will become contorted; so, too, would a piece of two inch rope, yet we have never heard of the latter having been accused of possessing vitality. The hair snake is a living creature, endowed with organs of locomotion and respiration, and capable of propagating its species. Scientifically it is known as 'Gordius aquaticus,' the generic name being derived from the Gordian knot, in allusion to the tangled appearance often presented by a multitude of these animals. The specific name aquaticus is not so appropriate, for they thrive out of water." Dr. Slack had taken Gordii six inches in length from the body of a grasshopper. They have also been found in the stomachs of insectivorous birds.—Turf, Field and Farm.

A Wonderful Machine.

An Eastern paper says: "A wonderful piece of mechanism has recently been produced by F. Schroeder, an Amsterdam jeweler. It is called the 'Great Mechanical City,' and is twenty feet long by fifteen wide. There are houses, castles, churches and stores in it, just as they appear in almost any European city. People walk and ride about. Horses and wagons and railway cars pass through the streets. Boats pass up and down the river, while some are loading and others unloading at the docks. Mills are in motion. A fountain plays in the public park and a band of musicians fills the air with melody. There are also forts with soldiers parading about them, blacksmith shops with artisans at work in them and pleasure gardens with people dancing in them. Other scenes go to make this a wonderful structure indeed."

The Nose—Its Beauty and Uses.

Although this prominent organ is a leading feature, yet few of us care to be led by it, except in the direction of a good dinner. This need not prevent us from pursuing it as a subject, showing wherein the importance of the organ is not duly estimated.

As a feature of the face it, more than any other, changes its character, although not so capable of expression as the eyes and mouth. Its ideal beauty varies with different races. The Africans of Sierra Leone prize the flat nose, and the Egyptian dotes on the veritable, pure, and unadulterated pug. The Tartar races, having very small noses, consider them the very highest type of beauty. The most beautiful woman in all Tartary was considered so because she had only two holes where the nose ought to have been. There seems to be no universal standard of nasal beauty. The Romans adored the aquiline, the Greek the straight line; the latter, coming nearest our ideal of the beautiful, is accepted as the standard in this latitude.

But there are other uses for the nose beyond its element of beauty or the reverse. The sense of smell is popularly supposed to be the only service it is called upon to perform; at least we should judge so from the number of open mouths we meet sailing along the streets.

One of the main objects of the nostrils is for respiratory purposes. There is very little doubt that air passing through the nostrils is refined, purified, and eliminated of all injurious gases, infection and dust, before being permitted access to the lungs. It is very easy to see how habitual respiration through the mouth is not only unnatural but productive of disease. More especially at night we should accustom ourselves to sleep with the mouth closed. All the energies of the system are then at rest, and its power of resistance at the lowest ebb. If the mouth be open the enemy is allowed to enter, and we may be sure he will fasten upon the most delicate part of our organization.

In a recent lecture by Prof. Tyndall he demonstrates fully the danger of sleeping with the mouth open, a practice unknown to the lower animals. He says:

"If I were to endeavor to bequeath the most important motto which human language can convey, it should be these words:

"SHUT——YOUR——MOUTH.

"In transactions of life this might have its beneficial results, as the most friendly cautionary advice, or be received as the grossest of insults; but where I would print and engrave it—in every nursery and on every bed-post in the universe—its meaning would not be mistaken, and, if obeyed, its importance would soon be realized."

Treatment of Diphtheria.

A physician of high repute offers to the public, through the columns of the New York Tribune, some valuable suggestions concerning the treatment of this terrible malady. He says:

In every case of the disease of course pure air, if possible, and good food, even if it have to be begged, should be procured. Any really good home-made soups, be they of beef, mutton, chicken, are just as good, and often far better, than beef tea; and they may be changed from one to the other as they pall upon the patient's taste. Good, undiluted milk is quite as useful as soup of any kind; and it may always be prevented from turning sour, or making the patient bilious or feverish, by the addition of a large pinch of soda to each teacupful of milk.

Beef tea, soup or milk should be taken frequently, and in as large quantities as the stomach will bear and digest without danger of causing disgust or nausea.

If stimulants are required, and they are generally wanted early and abundantly, milk punch is the best; but it should always be made with the addition of soda or lime water to the milk, for the reasons above stated.

If milk punch becomes distasteful, barley water, rice water, arrowroot, etc., may be used as a bland vehicle for administering stimulants.

Then of all the remedies that a long experience (over thirty years) has proved eminently reliable, chlorate of potash is the best; but it should be given in one way only, and also thoroughly. It should be given dry upon the tongue, pure, not mixed with sugar, and not in solution. By giving it in this way, it dissolves slowly in the mouth, and gradually and efficiently comes in contact with all the diseased parts of the throat.

This treatment must be persisted in, the chlorate of potash being given in doses of two, three, five or more grains every hour at first, until some decided improvement commences, or for one, two, three, or even more days, without hesitation or faltering. Often no apparent improvement seems to take place for one, two, or more days; sometimes not until nearly up to the fourth day. But courage and perseverance will almost certainly be rewarded with success; certainly four or five times out of six.

This treatment is considerate, but efficient; the child never becomes afraid of its physician or attendants; and generally, with a little management, takes or does all that is required of it, because its handling is always gentle, or at least not harsh or distressing.

If the debility be very great, muriate tincture of iron may be required. If the mouth be dry, glycerine may be put into it frequently.

THE "GREAT CLOCK OF ETERNITY."—A Washington lecturer says that the earth's orbit has been widening out for 20,000 years past, and will continue to do so for 20,000 years to come. It will then begin to contract, and will continue to do so for 50,000 years. The eccentricity of Mercury has been steadily increasing for the last 100,000 years, but has now nearly attained its limit. In about 5,000 years it will begin to diminish and will continue to do so for more than 100,000 years. The orbits of the planets must go on oscillating in this manner as long as the laws of nature remain unchanged, forming what a French writer has called "Great Clocks of Eternity, which beat ages as ours beat seconds."

A Cornered Legislator.

A gentleman who now occupies a seat in the upper branch of the New York Legislature, but at the same time was a member of the Assembly, relates the following:

"Perkins was as honest a man as ever set foot in Albany. Money wouldn't buy him, and I knew it, but I thought I would have a little fun with him, so I went down to his room one evening, and said: "Perkins, what do you think of the underground railroad bill? Are you going to vote for it?"

"Well," said Perkins, "I haven't made up my mind yet, exactly. I am inclined to think it is a good bill; but why do you ask?"

"I thought you were in favor of it," said I, "and as long as you have concluded to vote for it, I just wanted to say to you that the men interested in it pays five hundred dollars for votes, and as it is coming up on its final passage to-morrow, you can just as well have the money as not; you'd vote for the bill anyway."

"Vote for the bill! I'll be hanged first," cried the irate Perkins. "No, sir, If improper means are being taken to pass this thing, as you say, I for one will vote against it every time. You can put me down no."

"Oh, I don't care anything about the bill," said I. "I was only trying to do you a favor, and I think I can yet, for, to tell the truth, the rival companies are here in full force, and are moving heaven and earth to defeat it. They are paying the same amount for 'noes,' and as long as you are bound to vote that way, I'll get you the five hundred dollars all the same."

"Can such things be?" exclaimed Perkins, rising from his seat and tearing up and down the room in a whirlwind of righteous wrath and virtuous indignation. "What a state of things this is! A plague on both your houses, and I won't vote at all!"

"All right," said I, and I laid my hand on the door, "I'll get your five hundred dollars for being absent."

And as the jolly Senator brought to mind the horror of perplexity in which his last proposition involved old Perkins, he roared with laughter.

Eli Perkins Publishes the Fashions for 1874.

For the benefit of many young ladies who remain away from Saratoga, this beautiful spot where

The weary cease from troubling and the wicked are at rest,

I send the following account of the latest watering place fashions:

Shoes—Are worn high in the neck, flounced with point aquille lace, cut on the bias. High heels are common in Saratoga, especially in the hop room. Cotton hose, open at the top, are very much worn, some of them having as many as three holes in them. Cotton plows are not seen.

Children—Are very forward this year, but they are very often dispensed with entirely for quiet toilets. They are too loud. A neat thing in babies can be made of drab pongee, gored and puckered to match the panier. Little boys ruffled, fluted, and cut on the bias to match the underskirt are very much worn. Many are worn all down to living skeletons by such fashionable ladies as Miss Management, Miss Usage, Miss Behavior, Miss Doing, and Miss Guidance.

Bonnets—Are worn high—none less than $35. They are made high in the instep and cut decollete in front, trimmed with thedevilknowswhat. Low neck bonnets with paniers are no longer worn. The front of the bonnet is now invariably worn behind.

Lovers—Are once more in fashion, They are worn on the left side for afternoon toilets and directly in front for evening ball-room costume. A nice thing in lovers can be made of hair (parted in the middle), a sickly mustache, bosom pin, cane and sleeve-buttons, dressed in check cloth. Giant intellects are not fashionable in Saratoga this season. The broad, massive, thick skull is generally preferred. The old lover, trimmed with brains, character, and intelligence is no longer worn.

Dresses—Are not worn long—none over two days. They are trimmed with Wooster street sauce, looped up with Westchester county lace, with monogram on 'em. Shake well and drink while hot. Inclose twenty-five cents for circular. ELI DE PERKINS, Medist.

The Pullman Car Abroad.

Col. Thomas W. Knox, the journalist, who has been traveling in Europe for a year past, writes from Berlin, on the 10th of August, as follows:

"For the last three weeks I have been knocking around with Col. Gourand in a Pullman car, which you are doubtless aware was taken to the continent two or three months ago. The car has been from Liverpool by the way of London and Ostend to Paris, Mont Cenis Tunnel, Turin, Florence, Rome, Naples, Bologna, Venice, Sommering Pass, Vienna, and Berlin, and since coming here it has made two trips to Potsdam and one to Frankfort-on-the-Main. It starts to-night for St. Petersburg, by the way of Bromberg, Koenigsberg, and Wilna, stopping a couple of days at the frontier to adapt the trucks to the Russian gauge. When it reaches St. Petersburg it will have traveled 7,000 kilometers from Ostend. So far there has not been the slightest accident, not even a hot box. The car attracts as much attention as a menagerie in a country town, and has been visited by thousands of people, including Grand Dukes, Princes, railway-officials, and all sorts of 'swells' generally. All have expressed the greatest admiration, and several contracts are under negotiation in addition to those already concluded."

MRS. FANNY BALDWIN, a poor but respectable woman of South Carolina, walked recently from her home in Oconee county to the residence of her father, near Pendleton, a distance of 34 miles, carring her baby, 6 months old, weighing 21 pounds, in her arms. She left home at 6 o'clock in the morning, and reached her father's at 5 in the afternoon, making an average of a little over three miles an hour for eleven consecutive hours, over a rough and mountainous road, with the thermometer standing at 96 all the time. Mrs. Baldwin is 26 years old, and the mother of four children.

The Boy Who Ate Turnip.

Most everybody knows "red-headed Tim," the newsboy and bootblack. He is always getting hurt, crossing the path of the police or falling into the river, and yesterday he came near having his earthly career cut off in its spring-time. He helped himself to a turnip from a farmer's wagon on the Campus Martius as he came down town, and as he meandered down Griswold street folks saw him giving the turnip a rub on his elbow and then biting out "hunks" which would have made stoppers for catsup bottles. One of these bites failed to go down. It went into his throat and stuck there, and Tim was suddenly seen to drop his box and jump up and down and throw his arms about. "Tim's got a new circus trick!" yelled a boy on the other side of the street; and in a moment half a dozen ran over. Tim jumped up and came down on one foot, tried to cough and his eyes hung out like porcelain door-knobs. "Isn't that just old high circus, though!" exclaimed one of the boys, and the other boys threw up their caps and hurrahed. Tim jumped up and down again and mentioned for some one to pat him on the back, and an old gent came around the corner and said that if such fooling wasn't stopped he'd whistle for a policeman. Tim tried to motion out that he had something in his throat, and the old gentleman went on to say that things had come to a pretty pass in Detroit when an old pioneer couldn't walk out without a boy making faces at him. "Give Tim three cheers!" shouted a little muffin as Tim backed up against a telegraph pole, hopped up and down and grew purple in the face. "Look at the great American distortioner!" shouted another boy, and they knocked their boxes together and cheered lustily. One of the letter-carriers halted and said that if he had a boy who would act that way he'd take his hide off and hang it on the fence, and a bank porter said that it made him shudder when he remembered that he was the father of nine children. Things were getting black with Tim. He made more motions for some one to pound him on the back, and he wheezed like a locomotive off the track, but they thought he was in fun. "It is sad to think that the prison doors will clash behind him before he reaches manhood," sighed a woman who was carrying letters to the postoffice. "When I see such actions in one so young I can no longer wonder that our jails are running over with Dick Turpins," chimed in a melancholy looking student, and the boys shouted: "Fling 'er up again, Tim!" Just then a policeman came running across, thinking it was a fight, and he caught Tim by the neck and gave him a lively shake, causing the hunk of turnip to fly out like a cork, and then everybody knew that the boy had been a martyr and that they had wronged him. It took him almost a whole minute to get his breath, and then he looked around on the boys and growled: "Circus tricks! circus tricks! you blasted bean eaters! Can't you tell when a feller's dying!"—Detroit Free Press.

Railway Earnings for August.

A Deceptive Advertisement.

A good joke is told of a gentleman who was so charmed with the descriptions of numerous country residences, which he daily encountered in print, that he became tired of his own house, and determined to sell it. He instructed an auctioneer, famous for his descriptive powers, to advertise it in the papers for private sale, but to conceal its location, telling persons to apply to his office. In a few days the gentleman happened to see the advertisement, was pleased with the account of the place, showed it to his wife, and the two concluded it was just what they wanted, and that they would secure it at once. So he went to the office of the auctioneer and told him the place he had advertised was such a one as he desired, and he would purchase it. The auctioneer burst into a laugh, and told him that was the description of his own house, where he was then living. He read the advertisement again, and pondered over the "grassy slopes," "beautiful villas," "smooth lawn," etc., and broke out, "Is it possible?" Well, make out your bill for advertising and expenses, for, by George! I wouldn't sell that place now for three times what it cost me."

HALF PEAS.—An irrepressible joker at a club, while touching up his oysters with pepper from the castor, observed that the pepper was "half peas." "Oh, no," said the polite attendant, "that is the best sort of pepper." "Well, I tell you it is half peas; I always expect to get the best of everything in this house, but this pepper is half peas." "That can't be so; we take especial pains to procure it, and have it ground in our own mill." "Well, it is so; I can prove it." "If you can, I should like you to do so." "Well, John, you spell the word pepper, and see if it is not half p's."

Caution to Water Drinkers.

A medical correspondent of the Sanitarian calls attention to the impure water so often drank in the country. He says:

While traveling recently our attention was inconveniently called one morning to empty water tanks. But there were others, children especially, who on crawling out of the sleeping bunks, were in want of water more than we were—to drink. It was not long, however, before the cars halted, and the tanks were filled from a roadside stream. Of this the thirsty drank. We ventured to suggest to the porter that possibly this water was not wholesome. But the suggestion that "water as clear as that," was not clean, was to him absurd. The same suggestion to the conductor was equally incomprehensible. It is just such water that collects and holds in solution the poison of typhoid fever, which summer travelers so often take home with them.

Let it never be forgotten that very few rivers, small ones and rivulets, especially, or wells, are safe sources of water supply, and that many are more dangerous and deadly than loaded firearms. The shallow wells of villages and some watering places and other health (?) resorts are among the pests of the country. It is indeed shockingly disgusting in many country places to observe the uniformity with which the cesspool and well are made to stand side by side, as though each were necessary to the other; and to think of the foul, sewerage-reeking soil through which the water percolates to its fetid bed! The practice should not only engage the attention of every health officer in the land, but every person of ordinary intelligence. It is always practicable to provide cities and large towns with good water, but in small villages and country places, where houses are few and money scarce, and forethought scarer, it is a matter of some difficulty, but it should, nevertheless be overcome. Meanwhile, country sojourners and travelers—be wary.

Le Journal de Marseilles gives the latest news from the other side of the Atlantic of the abominable Beecher scandal. It says, in effect, that terrible troubles have broken out between the American preachers, Beecher, Stilton and Moulton, because love letters written by Stilton to Madame Beecher Stowe have been found in the possession of Moulton. Stilton, on his part, has instituted an action at law against M. Beecher for the seduction of his youngest daughter, Mlle. Florence Stilton, claiming $50,000. Madame Beecher Stowe, adds Le Journal, is the mother of the celebrated Uncle Tom, the renowned blind pianist, who a few years ago created so great a furor all over France. Verily, we live and learn, but for an education in current events we can scarcely recommend the newspaper offices of Marseilles.

THE SILVER TRADE DOLLAR.—The Superintendent of the San Francisco Mint writes to the Treasury Department at Washington that he is coining trade dollars at the rate of $20,000 per day. which is all that can be made by ten hours' work of the entire institution. When he gets into the new mint, which he expects to do about Nov. 1, and gets fairly started, he thinks he can make all the trade dollars required for commercial purposes on the Pacific coast. He says the coin is a perfect success, and, if enough of them could be made, the Mexican dollar would be entirely shut out of the market. The trade dollar keeps up the price of crude silver, and at the same time opens a very large market for silver bars.

MARSHAL BAZAINE is described by the French police as being five feet six inches and a half in height, stout, 65 years of age. His forehead is said to be low, and his hair short and turning to gray. Mme. Bazaine is represented to be of low stature, very dark, and with regular features. She is about 30 years old.

MEDICAL MANIACS.—There are numbers of medical men so wedded to the old formulas, that all changes seem to them like innovations. These medical maniacs are, fortunately, incapable of much mischief in this practical age. While the VINEGAR BITTERS are curing Indigestion, Nervous Debility, Constipation, and countless other diseases that defy the remedies of the pharmacopœia, it is impossible to thrust down the throats of intelligent invalids "heroic" doses of mineral poison, or to persuade them to take adulterated alcohol, impregnated with cheap astringents, as a "healing balm" or a "balsamic preparation." VINEGAR BITTERS, a pure botanical tonic and alterative, guiltless of the curse of distilled or fermented liquor, is actually accomplishing what the mineral and alcoholic cure-mongers have so incessantly promised but have never yet performed. Under these circumstances it is no wonder that this medicine has taken precedence of all those burning fluids mis-called tonics.

THE NORTHWESTERN HORSE-NAIL CO.'s "Finished" Nail is the best in the world.

Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, &c.

A few months after having commenced the manufacture of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the proprietor began to receive numerous letters from all parts of the Western and Southern States bestowing the most unbounded praise upon it for having promptly cured the writers or their friends of Fever and Ague, or other forms of miasmatic or malarious diseases. He was repeatedly urged to make known the wonderful virtues of the Discovery in the cure of Ague and kindred diseases. He always replied that it was not intended for a "cure-all," and should he recommend it to people as a remedy for so many different forms and classes of disease, he feared those who had never tested its virtues would at once class it among the numerous humbugs of the day. This answer was satisfactory to no one; they argued that the whole country ought to know it at once, and expressed their astonishment at his indifference to the subject. His ear and heart being at all times open to the call of suffering humanity, he has at last, after having received testimony from hundreds who have been speedily cured by it, and many of them after quinia and all the usual means had failed consented to make the matter known.

NEWMAN, Jeff. Co., Kan., Jan. 6, 1873.

Dr. Pierce:

DEAR SIR—Having used a few bottles of your Golden Medical Discovery, and believing it to be the very best medicine for Chills and Fever, I wish to buy it by the dozen. Please give me your price for it.

THE MILWAUKEE MONTHLY for September opens with the second and concluding article on "Poultry," beautifully illustrated. Then follows "The Broken Shell," an excellent story, charmingly told; a graceful little poem by Pauline Filer, a new and promising contributor; almost a dozen pages of "Wooing," and the promise of its conclusion in the October number; "Dr. Scrivarius' Mask," a most ingenious and pleasing tale; an elegantly illustrated and practical article on Fall Fashions; and a number of essays and editorials—"The Toilet," "The Difference Between I and We," "Winter Flowers," "Summer Visiting," etc.; while a new American humorist makes us acquainted with the trials and tribulations of cake-baking, as he experienced them, in a laugh-provoking article of just the right length.

WE hear very favorable encomiums regarding the Elmwood and Warwick Collars, manufactured by the Narragansett Collar Company. These collars have linen facing, and, owing to the peculiarity of cut, are most comfortable and neat-fitting articles. The edges of the collars are folded in underneath all around, thus strengthening the collar and preventing the points from turning up. We recommend these collars to our friends.—*Fashion Article, N. The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly chin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxurious tresses, they become irresistible.

Fell from a Railroad Car, and nearly broke his neck. Pat picked him up, rubbed him with Mexican Mustang Liniment, and sent him on by the next train. Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions, lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel-plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

On Everybody's Tongue.—Eulogiums of the great National Regenerator of Health, PLANTATION BITTERS, are on everybody's tongue. This gratuitous viva voce advertising is better than all paid-for puffing to which the owners of bogus bitters are obliged to resort. It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

From the Indianapolis Sentinel·

State Finances·

In another column will be found a letter from the Hon, James B. Ryan, ex-treasurer of state, in answer to sundry tale statement put farward by the republican paper of this city, purporting to contain details in regard to the democratic and republican expenditures during the past three years. The great parade of statistics, which was originally made in the Journal, was suddenly stopped by the last volley from the Sentinal, and the author of the display charged his base to the News. The general opinion among the republican politicians, after the perusal of Mr. Ryan's letter, will be that the annoyance of this misrepresentation on the financial question has been kept up too long. It has evoked a crushing answer.

Mr. Ryan takes the expenditures of the government for the year 1871, 1872 and 1873,and, giving due credits each case, leaves the balance representing the cost of two years of democratic administration and one year of republican administration. The result is startling, The expences for 1871 were $853,144,33; for 1872 646,804-38 for 18731,427,334 72. Nothing could be better than the ex-treasurer's terse summing up these results, proving that the single year of republican rule has cost within $72,606 of as much the two Previous years of democratic rule put togather, The unaccountable impudence with which the partisan press endevors to argue away such a record, and struggles to convince the people against the evidence of their own senses, is something wonderful. Leaving the reader to study Mr. Ryan's figures for a full appreciation of the financial issues, the Sentinel will, for the present note but two points in the attack made by the News upon the democracy in general, and Governor Hendricks and Mr. Ryan in particular.

It is charged as something peculiarly wrong on the part of Mr. Ryan that, while treasurer, received the interest on $603,000 left in his hands. His latter explains how the money came to be left in his charge, and in putting the sum at interest, he simply followed the immemoral usage of the state officials. The law ought to provide for securing use for public money but it does not. To judge of Mr Ryan's conduct, it is only necessary to contrast it with Mr. Glover, the present republican treasurer. According to the monthly statement published by that gentleman, the following balance have remained in the treasury at the beginning of each of the last three months;

July	$464,798 64
August	447,856 22
September	403,296 89

That is to say Mr. Glover is carrying a balance of public money on hand amounting to nearly half a million dolars. What renders this fact doubly remarkable is that while he is receiveing interest on that amount belonging to the state, the state is paying heavy interest for the temporary loan made necessary by republican extravagance.

Why don't the Courier get out his old rooster and crow over the election in Vermont. It is more than probably that the old fellow is sick at the stomach.—News. Well, no. We left this work for the Republican papers, and this is the way they do it.

From the Boston Advertiser—Republican.

There seems to have been in Vermont this year, much of the same kind of irregular, and independent voting which surprised parties in this State last fall. Republican candidates for the Legislature have failed of election in districts which were thought to be safe beyond a peradvenre. The Republicans will have, as usual, a large majority. but the Democratic and Independent members will number more than in any Legislature for a long series of years. . . . The result seem to have astonished the steady State that her people forgot to tell the world promptly what happened Tuesday.

From the Boston Journal—Republican.

The extent of the disaffection appears to have surprised even those who took part in it. The first obvious suggestion which comes from this occurrence is that it is advisable—this year particularly—to take unusual care in the selection of candidates,for voters seem to have little regard for the binding authority of regular nominations, unless meeting their approval. . . . . If Vermont, therefore, sends out a good influence as to the expendiency of making careful nominations, in view of the present political situation, her election may be beneficial as if she had rolled up one of her heavy Republican majorities. While those papers are with this State, we scare up the following.

New Hampshire—Democratic Governor and Denocratic Legislature.

Connecticut—Democratic Governer Democratic Legislature and Democratic United States Senator.

Oregon—Democratic Governor, Democratic State officers and Democratic Congressmen.

North Caroline—Seven Democratic Congressmen out of eight, large majority in the Legislature and Democratic State ticket.

Tennessee—Nearly every county in the State Democratic.

Kentucky—All Democratic

How does the News man like that picture.

California raised this season 20,000,000 bushels surplus wheat. The New York Herald, in order to assist the understanding, that if loaded in carts, each containing a tun to be hawled to New York, the first would be at its distination when the last was leaving San Francisco. The Bulletin suggests that, if loaded in vesels of 1,000 tons burdon, and the 600 ships were to sail in sight of each other, say, 20 miles, or half-way round the globe.—The last one might be just leaving the Golden Gate when the first one was entering the harbor of Liverpool.

SOUTHERN SENTIMENT.

A Northern Man in Tennessee.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel:

Sir: It is with feelings akin to mortification that I have noticed the course of some of the partisan journals in their treatment of the Southern question. It hardly seems posible that these editors represent the views of that republican party to which I gave my allegiance in 1860-61—a party which I believed was composed of true men, whose regard for the public wellfair was above person greed, whose utterance in favor of universal freedom and against the intolerance of private opinion were morally and intellectually very much superior to the partisan spirit, which under the title democracy had controled the government so long. For a few months after my removal from the South I was frequently surprised at the unjust accusations of the press as against Southern men and Southern society generally, but attributed it to the ignorence of the real conditions rather than to design. But as the election campaigns opened, I discover a deliberate pupose to mislead the popular intelligence for the promotion of partisan ends. Mr. Harrison on Friday night exposed the key to the whole programme when he opened his remarks by saying, in effect, that just before the elections we are wont to hear of murders and outrages innumerable over the Southern border, which kindly anew the republican enthusiasm and unites the party in defence of its principles—chiefly, I should judge represented by its negro policy. To any one who will give the subject a moment's thought, it will appear plainly absurd that the policy, which is so invaribaly to the advantage of the one party, should be persistently adobted year after year by its apponent. It is the republican party which profits by these outrages, and is it not reasonable to suppose that it is, therefore, the chief instigator of them, if not directly to quite as much effect indirectly.—Entering the army in Butler's New England division in 1861, I served until the surrender in 1865 in the Gulf department. During most of that time I occupied a position which gave me a pretty thorough acquaintance with the people of New Orleans and of Alabama After the surrender I had charge of the reconstruction of one of the little principal Southern railroads for a few months, and when that work was completed was engage in business in Kentucky for a term of years. In 1869 I removed to Tennessee, which was my residence untill last November. In writing therefore of Southern affairs I may claim to know something from actual experience of the subject under discussion, and it is said of the West Tennessee now some prominently in the public eye that I wish to say a few words. The cost of appearing is in defence of those people who have been so grossly maligned, has been fully counted but will not prevent my bearing true testimony in their behalf. Senator Morton in his speech on Friday night asserted unqualifiedly, that it was unsafe for a Northern man to enter the South and make his home there My own experience is very much at variance with the assertion. During a residence of eight years as a private citizen there was never occasion when I felt the slightest hesitation in private or in public, about defending the federal cause for which I had done service. Often have I defended Gen. Butler from the absurd charge of spoon stealing and when on one occasion an editor who had skulked into Indiana from Kentuckey during the war attempted to make capital by a public attack upon that question, his action was promptly denounced by all of the more influential citizens. Frequently did I sustain Senator Morton's public course a few years since although I am free to say that I would have been ashamed to act with such men as controll the Republican party of Tennessee. There was never a moment when I carried arms about my person or kept them at my residence or did I ever see any occasion for the use of them.

There are districts along the Tennessee river, and along some of the smaller streams, inhabited by the people who know comparatively nothing of civilization who never knew what a common school was, and who live principally by hunting and fising, which is a turbulent element in the State.

Their prejudices are deep rooted, and especially against the negro, who has been wont to assume superiority to them, both before the war and since. East Tennesse has a large proportion of this population, and it is from this class that the federal regiments were mostly recruited during the war, and it is this class which votes largely with the republicans—principally negroes—in Tennessee to-day. Having no sympathies with the better classes of the State, but rather harboring feuds of long standing, the war gave opportunity for gratification of their revenge, and the necessities of the republican office holders have still further afforded an ample field for the exhibition of their blood-thirsty proclivities. I need not charge the responsibility directly upon the republican party, only in so far as they defend the action of unscrupulous adventurers, who unblushingly seek office, with the connivance and aid of federal officials, among a people with whom they have no shadow of sympathy, and from whom by such a course they cannot expect to be regarded with very much of respect.

The antipathies and antagonisms we hear so much about, are only as between the negroes and those whites who never owned a negro, and the anti war prejudices are the inspiring cause. Even these have been suppressed by the influence of the property holders and substantial citizens, whose business interests, if nothing else, prompt them to sustain the law and maintain order; and shall the people of the North, who boast of their common schools and their superior intelligence, withhold from them that symyathy and co-operation which the necessities of the situation demand?—After the perpetration of the Trenton outrage, for which I have no words of condemnation sufficient to severe, the State authorities, with a promptness becoming their responsibilities, moved for the arrest of the fiends. The United States Marshal, it appears, acting under the general instruction of the atty. general's circular, also proceed d to act, not in conjunction with the State authority, but independently.—Gov. Brown, than whom no truer man lives in any State, addressed the prisident setting forth the facts, and representing the State authorities were competent to take care of its criminals and to bring them speedily to justice. The answer was as heartless as could well be conceived, to the effect that a law of Congress permitted the action of the marshal and he should not interfere. Well may the good people of Tennessee writhe under the infliction of such injustice—all in the interest of the great republican party. Let us for moment suppose a similar course of proceeding for Indiana:

A party of ruffians rob a train or rob and tie a victim to the track in the face of the train, both acts of special atrocity. The State authorities move vigorously to discover the perpetrators. Can we conceive of any excuse for federal interference? The whole north would rise as one man to resist such an usurpetion. Would it not be well to regard the precepts of the golden rule a trifle closer. It is at the best a stupendous task devolved upon the good people of the south, to adapt themselves and their surrounding to the changed conditions resulting from the war, and it is deplorable that anybody at the north can be found to throw obstacles in their way and this for no other pretext than to advance the interests of a party.

CHAS. W. GREEN.

Gen. Sheridan and Black Hills.

The lady doth protest too much, me thinks. When Gen. Sheridan, after the fire Chicago, policed that city with United States troops, he created quite a stir, which nearely envolved his friend at the head of government in a political muss, which threatened the loss of his political head. Gen. Sheridan's martial threats to burn up the wagons, annihilate the trains and arrest the adventures who shall attempt an invasion of the Black hills conutry for the purpose of golddigging, is an assumption of sholderstrap authority, which perhaps may not meet with success, such willings soul may hope for the treaty with the Sioux Indians, getting apart a certain tract of land, including the Black hills country, for their exclusive use was made in 1868 and it stipulated that on one should have the power or the right to enter the said reserve. This is all clear enough, but while it protects the Indian from aggressive visits of restless Americans, it certainly does not establish martial law which gives to Gen. Sheridan or any other West Point ratrap an unlimited power over their property or their persons. If a citizen violates a law of the land, he becomes subject to the law of the land, which do not yet whatever they may ultimately do, constitute a one man power armed with a drumhead authority and power almost unlimited.—St. Loui Republican.

The Congressional Canvass.

The following correspondence explains itself:

Waterloo, Ind., Sept. 16, 74.

Hon. John H. Baker, Goshen, Indiana—Dear Sir: The Democratic and Liberal Convention assembled at Kendallville on September 9th placed me in nomination for Congress from the 13th Indiana District. While I recognized that your training for professional life, your association with professional men, and long experience as a lawyer, gives you in debate an advantage over me who is a farmer and whose opportunity for study have been limited to such moments of time as could be seized upon in the brief intermission from labor, incident to such a calling; yet with an abiding faith in the justness of the cause I have been selected to represent and impressed with the belief that the corruptions, extravagence and maladministration of those you represent, cannot withstand discussion and exposure before the masses, I respectfully invite you to join me in a joint discussion of the political question of the day, and same to commence at such early time as may be mutually convenient and to continue until the election. Allow me to suggest the name of Samuel Schutt, of DeKalb County, to act jointly with some friend of yours in naming the time, place and conditions of discussion in the northern and central part of the District, and Daniel McDonald of Plymouth to confer with some one on your behalf in Marshall and Kosciusko counties. I hereby authorize the gentlemen named to act for me in the matters suggested.

I remain,
Very respectfully, yours,
FREEMAN KELLY.

Goshen, Ind., Sept. 21, 1874.

Hon. Freeman Kelley, Waterloo, Indiana—Dear Sir: Your letter dated "Waterloo, Ind., Sept. 15th" was handed to me at Ligonier, Ind., by Hon. J. B. Stoll; and I now avail myself of the earliest moment after reaching home to answer it.

You are pleased to say in your letter that you recognize that my training for professional life, my association men and long experience as a lawyer give me the debate an advantage over you. Permit me to state that either your modesty or generosity has led you to make a concession as to my ability in political debate, which I cannot justly claim. It is true that I have for some years been engaged in the practice of that profession of which you have recently become a member; still my experience in political debate has been limited, as I have never, as a candidate made a speech prior to the present year.

I cannot forget that your experience as a politician and political debater commenced as early at least as the Democratic Presidential Convention held at Chicago, Illinois, in 1864, where you delivered a speech which attracted some notice. Nor can I forget that within the last ten years you have repeatedly been presented as a candidates for office before conventions of your party friends, nor that you have twice when a candidate for Legislative honors and once when a candidate for County Treasurer canvassed DeKalb County with great thoroughness and ability to secure your own election. A politician who has thus three times run for office, and three times canvassed his own county, once at least jointly with his competitor, can justly claim to be my superior both as a politician and more political debater. 'Yet with an abiding faith in the justness of the cause I have been selected to represent and impressed with the belief that the corruptions, extravagance and mal-administration of those you represent cannot withstand discussion and exposure," I respectfully accept your invitation to join in a joint discussion of the political questions of the day.

Allow me to suggest the name of Dr. E. W. H. Ellis, of Elkhart county to act jointly with your friend Samuel Schutt, Esq. of DeKalb county, in naming the time, places and conditions of discussion in the counties you suggest, and Wm. G. Piper, Esq., of Kosciuko County, to act jointly with your friend Daniel McDonald, Esq., in making similar arrangements for joint discussion in Marshall and Kosciuko Counties.

I authorize the gentlemen above named to act for me in the matter.

Respectfully Yours,
JOHN H. BAKER.

THE DRUNKARD'S BRIDE.

BY ANNA GRAY.

Eager she listened to the pattering sleet
Out in the long deserted street;
Listening to hear the well-known tread
Of one whom others had already said,
Better, far better, she had never wed.
Beside her lay, in all its grace,
Her long white veil of marriage-lace;
But the face it had decked was sad and wan,
As if that day had long since gone.
Days have wrought, with their blighting tears,
Changes not to be erased in years.
Still she listened, as her heart beat low;—
Why did he linger away from her so!
Only yesterday morn she stood by his side
And breathed the vows of a happy bride;
But to-night she prayed, in that lonely room,
For one ray of sunshine to break the gloom.
Then, still, as she listened to the driving sleet
That seemed on her very heart to beat,
Distinctly she heard the heavy tread
That told her heart bore home the dead!
Wildly she watched them, though without a fear,
Bearing in the heavy, unsightly bier;
And listened on, with eyes unblurred,
To each unfeeling, thoughtless word,
As they whispered round, in a careless way,
"Good for her that he died in this drunken fray!"
Then they bore the form from the lonely room
That seemed too small to bear its doom,
And smoothed her tresses of silken hair,
And told her, "life would yet be fair."
Yes, they bore her away, and she never stirred;
The grief in her heart they never heard;
But she who loved him too well to dread
The frightful looks of the ghastly dead,
Lit her lamp and slipped away to his side,
Where, briefly before, she had stood a bride;
And, kneeling there, gazed long and well,—
Asked if those lips would no secret tell,
Mid the horrid scenes of the drunken strife,
Did they breathe no sigh to your lonely wife?
Was there no thought of her whose unfaltering trust
Would have mingled her own with a drunkard's dust?
Did'st never think, O dearest dead!
Of the plighted vows you had lately said?—
Then, lifting the death-lamp from the icy brow—
Is there no way to answer me now!—
Must I wait and watch, and never know
The secret that wrought this heavy blow!—
Must think that I was forgotten quite,
In the short, short hours of a single night!—
No white-winged vision thrilled her soul,
As a strange, wild tremor o'er her stole;
No broken whisper sounded near,
But the very air breathed in her ear,
"I know and feel thy presence, dear,
Which, though loved of earth, is more so here;
I feel thy breath fan lip and cheek
In the same old way, but they cannot speak;
I feel thy tears fall for my sake,
But the seal of death they may not break;
But to thee, who wert earth's idol dear,
I'll tell the secret that brought me here:—
My paltry gold lured the tempter's snare;
I forgot thy loving word, 'Beware;'
And, though I loved thee as I ought,
I drained the cup of its bitter draught.
Madness came; but God knows well
That I loved thee then more than words can tell;
And as heavy grief as may meet me here,
Is to see thy heart bleed at a drunkard's bier;
And to know that thy mind, so like a child,
Must leave Reason's throne to ravings wild;
For God, 'who doeth all things well,'
Will consign my bride to a maniac's cell."

A HEADLESS HORSEMAN.

A GHOST STORY OF THE COUNTY CORK.

"God speed you, and a safe journey to you, Charley," ejaculated the master of the little shebeen house at Ballyhooley, after his old friend and good customer, Charley Culnane, who at length had turned his face homeward with the prospect of as dreary a ride, and as dark a night as ever fell upon the Blackwater, along whose banks he was about to journey.

Charley Culnane knew the country well, and moreover, was as bold and as daring a rider as any Mallow boy that ever rattled a four-year-old upon Drumrue race course. He had gone to Fermoy in the morning as well for the purpose of purchasing some ingredients required for the Christmas dinner by his wife, as to gratify his own vanity by having new reins fitted in his snaffle, in which he intended showing off the old mare at the approaching St. Stephen's-day hunt.

Charley did not get out of Fermoy until late; for although he was not one of your very particular sort in anything relating to the common occurences of life, yet in all the appointments relating to hunting, riding, leaping, in short, in whatever was connected with the old mare, Charley, the saddler said, "was the devil to plase." An illustration of this fastidiousness was afforded by his going such a distance for a snaffle bridle. Mallow was full twelve miles nearer Charley's farm (which lay just three-quarters of a mile below Carrick) than Fermoy, but Charley had quarreled with all the Mallow saddlers, and no one would content him in all particulars but honest Mick Twomey, of Fermoy, who used to assert—and who will doubt it? that he could stich a saddle better than the Lord Lieutenant, although they made him all as one as King over Ireland.

The delay in the arrangement of the snaffle bridle did not allow Charley Culnane so long a visit as he had at first intended to his old friend and gossip, Con. Buckley, of the Harp of Erin. Con., however, knew the value of time, and insisted upon Charley making a good use of what he had to spare. "I won't bother you waiting for water, because I think you'll have enough of the same before you get home; so drink off your liquor, man, it's as good Parliament as ever a gentleman tasted."

Charley, it must be confessed, nothing loth, drank success to Con., and success to the jolly "Harp of Erin," with its head of beauty and its strings of the hair of gold, and to their better acquaintance, and so on, from the bottom of his soul, until the bottom of the bottle reminded him that Carrick was at the bottom of the hill on the other side of Castletown Roche, and that he had got no further on his road than his gossip's at Ballyhooley, close to the big gate at Connamore. Catching hold of his oilskin hat, therefore, while Con. Buckley went to the cupboard for another bottle of the "real stuff," he regularly, as he termed it, bolted from his friend's hospitality, darted to the stable, tightened his girths, and put the old mare into a canter toward home.

Charley cantered gayly, regardless of the rain, which, as his friend Con. had anticipated, fell in torrents; the good old woman's currants and raisins were carefully packed between the folds of his yeomanry cloak, which Charley, who was proud of showing that he belonged to the "Royal Mallow Light Horse Volunteers," always strapped before him, and took care to never destroy the military effect by putting it on.

Nothwithstanding that the visit to the jolly "Harp of Erin" had a little increased the natural complacency of his mind, the drenching of his snaffle reins began to disturb him, and then followed a train of more anxious thoughts than even were occasioned by the dreaded defeat of the pride of his long anticipated turn-out on St. Stephen's day. In an hour of good-fellowship, when his heart was warm, and his head not over cool, Charley had backed his old mare against Mr. Jepson's bay filly Desdemona, for a neat hundred, and he felt sore misgivings as to the prudence of the match.

He now arrived at the bottom of Kilcummer Hill, and his eye fell on the old walls that belonged, in former times, to the Knights Templars; but the silent gloom of the ruin was broken only by the heavy rain which splashed and pattered on the grave-stones. He then looked up to the sky to see if there was, among the clouds, any hope for mercy on his new snaffle reins; and no sooner were his eyes lowered than his attention was arrested by an object so extraordinary as almost led him to doubt his senses. The head apparently of a white horse, with short, cropped ears, large, open nostrils, and immense eyes, seemed rapidly to follow him. No connection with body, legs or rider could possibly be traced. The head advanced—Charley's old mare, too, was moved by this unnatural sight, and, snorting violently, increased her trot up the hill.

The head moved forward and passed on, Charley pursuing it with astonishing gaze, and wondering by what means and for what purpose this detached head thus proceeded through the air; he did not perceive the corresponding body until he was suddenly startled by finding it close by his side. Charley turned to examine what was thus so sociably jogging on with him, when a most unexampled apparition presented itself to his view. A figure, whose height he computed to be at least eight feet, was seated on the body and legs of a white horse fully eighteen hands and a half high. In this measurement Charley could not be mistaken, for his own mare was exactly fifteen hands high, and the body that thus jogged alongside, he could at once determine, was at least three hands and a half higher.

After the first feeling of astonishment was over, he exclaimed, "I'm sold now forever!" But still he directed his attention to this extraordinary body, and having examined it with the eye of a connoisseur, he proceeded to reconnoiter the figure so unusually mounted, who had hitherto remained perfectly mute. Wishing to see whether his companion's silence arose from bad temper, want of conversational powers, or from a distaste to water, and the fear that the opening of his mouth might subject him to having it filled with rain, he endeavored to catch a sight of his companion's face, in order to form an opinion on that point. But his vision failed in carrying him further than the top of the collar of the figure's coat, which was a scarlet single-breasted hunting frock, having a waist of a very old-fashioned cut, reaching to the saddle, with two huge shining buttons at about a yard distance behind.

"I ought to see farther than this, too," thought Charley, "although he is mounted on his horse, like my cousin Darby, who was made barony constable last week, unless it is Con's whisky that has blinded me entirely." However, see farther he could not, and after straining his eyes for a considerable time to no purpose, he exclaimed, with pure vexation, "By the big bridge of Mallow, it is no head at all he has!"

"Look again, Charley Culnane," said a hoarse voice that seemed to proceed from under the right arm of the figure.

Charley did look again, and now in the proper place—for he clearly saw, under the aforesaid right arm, the head from which the voice had proceeded, and such a head no mortal ever saw before. It looked like a large cream cheese hung around with black pudding. No speck or color enlivened the ashy paleness of the depressed features; the skin lay stretched over the unearthly surface, almost like the parchment-head of a drum. Two fiery eyes of prodigious circumference, with a strange and irregular motion, flashed like meteors upon Charley, and a mouth that reached from either extremity of two ears, which peeped forth from under a profusion of matted locks of lusterless blackness. This head, which the figure had evidently hitherto concealed from Charley's eyes, now burst upon his view in all its hideousness. Charley, although a lad of proverbial courage in the county of Cork, could not but feel his nerves a little shaken by this unexpected visit from the headless horseman, whom he considered this figure doubtless must be.

The crop-eared head of the gigantic horse moved steadily forward, always keeping from six to eight yards in advance. The horseman, unaided by the whip or spur, and disdaining the use of stirrups, which dangled useless from the saddle, followed at a trot by Charley's side, his hideous head now lost behind the lapel of his coat, now starting forth in all its horror as the motion of the horse caused his arm to move to and fro. The ground shook under the weight of its supernatural burden, and the water in the pools was agitated into waves as he trotted by them.

On they went—heads without bodies and bodies without heads. The deadly silence of night was broken only by the fearful clatter of hoofs and the distant sound of thunder, which rumbled above the mystic hill of Cecauno a Mono Finnea. Charley, who was naturally a merry-hearted and rather talkative fellow, had hitherto felt tongue-tied by apprehension; but finding his companion showed no evil disposition toward him, and having become somewhat reconciled to the Patagonian dimensions of the horseman and his headless steed, plucked up all his courage, and thus addressed the stranger:

"Why, then, your honor rides mighty well without stirrups."

"Humph!" growled the head from under that horseman's right arm.

"This is not an over civil answer," thought Charley; but no matter, he was taught in one of them riding houses, may-be, and thinks nothing at all about bumping his leather breeches at the rate of ten miles an hour, I'll try him on the other tack. Ahem!" said Charley, clearing his throat, and feeling at the same time rather daunted at this second attempt to establish a conversation. "Ahem! that's a mighty neat coat of your honor's, although 'tis a little too long in the waist for the present cut.

"Humph!" growled again the head.

This second humph was a terrible thump in the face to poor Charley, who was fairly bothered to know what subject he could start that would prove more agreeable. "'Tis a sensible head," thought he, "although an ugly one; for 'tis plain enough the man doesn't like flattery." A third attempt, however, Charley was determined to make, and having failed in his observations as to the riding and the coat of his fellow traveler, he thought he would just drop a trifling allusion to the wonderful headless horse that was jogging on so sociably by the side of the old mare; and as Charley was considering about Carrick to be very knowing in horses, besides being a private in the Royal Mallow Light Horse Volunteers, who were every one of them mounted like real Hessians, he felt rather sanguine as to the result of his third attempt.

"To be sure that's a brave horse your honor rides," recommenced the persevering Charley.

"You may say that, with your own ugly mouth," growled the head.

Charley, though not much flattered by the compliment, nevertheless chuckled at his success in obtaining an answer, and thus continued:

"May-be your honor wouldn't be after riding him across the country?"

"Will you try me, Charley?" said the head, with an inexpressible look of ghastly delight.

"Faith, and that's what I'd do," responded Chasley; "only I'm afraid, the night being so dark, of laming the old mare, and I've every halfpenny of a hundred pounds on her heels."

This was true enough. Charley's courage was nothing dashed at the headless horseman's proposition; and there never was a steeple-chase, riding or leaping in the country that Charley Culnane was not at it, and foremost in it.

"Will you take my word?" said the man who carried his head so snugly under his right arm, "for the safety of your mare?"

"Done," said Charley, and away they started, helter skelter, over everything, ditch and wall, pop; the old mare never went in such style, even in broad daylight, and Charley had just the start of his companion, when the hoarse voice called out; "Charley Culnane, Charley, man, stop for your life; stop!"

Charley pulled up hard. "Ay," said he, "you may beat me by the head, because it always goes so much before you; but if the bet was neck and neck, and that's the go between the old mare and Desdemona, I'd win it hollow!"

It appeared as if the stranger was well aware of what was passing in Charley's mind, for he suddenly broke out quite loquacious.

"Charley Culnane," says he, "you have a stout soul in you, and are every inch of you a good rider. I've tried you and I ought to know; and that's the sort of man for my money. A hundred years it is since my horse and I broke our necks at the bottom of Kilcummer hill, and ever since I've been trying to get a man that dared to ride with me, and never found one before. Keep, as you have always done, at the tail of the hounds, never baulk an inch, nor turn away from a stone wall, and the Headless Horseman will never desert you nor the old mare."

Charley in amazement looked toward his right arm for the purpose of seeing in his face whether or not he was in earnest; but, behold, the head was snugly lodged in the huge pocket of the horseman's scarlet hunting-cloak. The horse's head had ascended perpendicularly above them, and his extraordinary companion rising quickly after his avant-courier, vanished from the astonished gaze of Charley Culnane.

Charley, as may be supposed, was lost in wonder, delight and perplexity; the pelting rain, the wife's pudding, the new snaffle—even the match against 'Squire Jephson—all were forgotten; nothing could he think of, nothing could he talk of but the headless horseman. He told it directly he got home to Judy; he told it the following morning to all the neighbors, and he told it to the hunt on St. Stephen's day; but what provoked him, after all the pains he took in describing the head, the horse, and the man, was, that one and all attributed the creation of the headless horseman to his friend, Con. Buckley's "X water parliament." This, however, should be told—that Charley's old mare beat Mr. Jephson's big filly Desdemona by Diamond, and Charley pocketed his cool hundred; and if he didn't win by means of the Headless Horseman, I am sure I don't know any other reason for his doing so.

Best Organs on Most Favorable Terms.

Cabinet or Parlor Organs are capital things for peddlers to work with, because very poor ones can be made at half the cost of good ones, and few people are competent to tell the difference from a first examination. Manufacturers print in their catalogues prices which are three or four times as high as the value of such cheap work. Then the peddler starts out and puts them on the people in various ways. He sells at an enormous discount, if he can get cash; takes part trade if necessary, or leaves the organ awhile on trial, and sells it on long time at "manufacturer's price," exhibiting the catalogue to show that it is such, or even at a discount from this, which he can well afford.

The Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. have recently announced a plan which is likely to interfere with this business. This company, as is well known, makes only the best work, which, by its uniform excellence, has obtained the highest reputation for their organs. They proved the best, and obtained the highest awards, at the recent Vienna and Paris World's Expositions, as they have uniformly done in American Industrial competitions. The fact that these organs are the best in the world is indeed too well established to need further indorsement.

The company have now added a large new factory to their former extensive works, and design to greatly increase their business. This they propose to do by offering organs for time payments, or for rent with privilege of purchase, at barely sufficient advance on the cash prices to afford a reasonable interest for the time. An organ may be hired by the quarter with privilege of purchase at any time in one year or longer. If purchased within the year, the whole cost, including rent paid, is only five to ten per cent. more than if the cash had been paid down at the beginning.

Persons having any idea of purchasing will be wise to send a note to the Mason & Hamlin Co., at either Boston, New York or Chicago, and obtain their new circulars, before purchasing.

The Deacon's Subterfuge.

Deacon Moses Fetlock was a pillar of the church, and, all things considered, a pretty strong pillar, too; for he paid liberally toward sustaining the preached word. But he was human. He loved to make money, not for the sake of hoarding it, but for the sake of making it. In short, it made him feel remarkably good to drive a sharp bargain. Would the deacon tell a lie? Not for the world; and no one had ever thought thus to accuse him. Would the deacon deceive? Ah, my dear sir, when you built your house of pine block-work, and plastered the same with red sand, you meant to deceive—to deceive the eye, if not the understanding. The deacon had his little subterfuges, but he was above lying.

Know ye that Deacon Moses was a horseman. He kept a village stable, and bought and sold equine prodigies. On a certain occasion he had several horses which he wished to sell. He had been buying some fine young stock very cheap, and concluded to sell off some of the older; and this conclusion on his part he gave to the world—not that he wished to sell, but that he was willing to sell. Late one evening he gave to his wife his pocket-book, and having lighted his lantern, he went with his spouse to the stable, where the following little scene transpired:

"Mrs. Fetlock, what will you give me for that horse?" asked the deacon, placing his hand upon one of the beasts he was willing to sell.

"I will give you two hundred dollars," answered the good wife. And she counted out the sum in bright new greenbacks, and proffered it.

"No, no, madam," said the deacon, with professional decision. "I couldn't look at any such money for that horse."

And so they went through with the lot.

Three days afterward an eager customer appeared at the deacon's stables, and after much examination he fixed his eyes upon a beast which he thought he should like, and asked the lowest price. Two hundred and fifty dollars was the owner's price.

"But, Deacon Fetlock, that is too high. I had thought of paying not more than a hundred and fifty."

The deacon elevated his eyebrows with a surprised smile.

"Why, bless your soul! I was offered two hundred dollars for that horse, only three days ago, and had the money shoved into my face in bright new greenbacks; but I wouldn't look at it! I guess we'll have to pass this horse."

But the customer had fancied that particular horse, and he finally bought him for two hundred and forty dollars, apparently well-pleased that he had knocked down ten dollars.

And the good deacon retired into his house to tell his wife of his bargain, never dreaming that he had compromised with strict integrity in behalf of subterfuge.

A Grasshopper Omelet.

The desolation of the locust is a harvest for the itemizer, and the first crop report of this kind is now on its way through the country. The story goes that a family from the edible-clay district of South Carolina settled in Kansas, near Lawrence. The daughter, the hope of the family, was a confirmed earth-eater. After suffering a long time from the inability of the soil to supply her appetite, she at last discovered a deposit of edible earth, with which she allayed her cravings. In a short time her body swelled, with every appearance of dropsy, her desire for clay abated, and she suddenly set herself to devour green vegetables, grass and grain, until the parents were troubled with a fear that their crops would be destroyed before the harvest arrived. At last the grasshoppers, which had been gradually growing, rose with a rushing sound; she rose from the crouching attitude she had been compelled to assume, flapped her arms in imitation of their movements, and yielded up the ghost. An autopsy revealed the presence of a crowd of full-fledged locusts in her stomach. She had eaten eggs with her earth, and partaken inwardly of a grasshopper omelet. This is a sad story. Parents who read it will ever regard the mud-pie of ingenious infancy with peculiar aversion, and forbid its introduction into the cuisine of the play-ground as an abomination.—Chicago Tribune.

A Carnivorous Plant.

A remarkable plant was exhibited to the British Association for the Advancement of Science by Dr. Hooker, who gave the inaugural address as President biology section. The address was upon the subject of carnivorous plants, and Dr. Hooker explained and demonstrated by experiment some extraordinary discoveries of Mr. Darwin's. Among other things, says a Liverpool paper, he showed a plant called "Dionial," the leaves of which were open. A fly was captured and put upon a leaf, which instantly closed, and on reopening it was found that the fly was completely dissolved. A bit of beef was afterward consumed in the same way. The leaf was then fed with cheese, which disagreed with it horribly, and eventually killed it. Dr. Hooker explained that the plant's action was precisely similar to that of the human stomach. The leaf rejected a piece of wet chalk. Prof. Huxley, in moving a vote of thanks, said these phenomena formed a wonderful problem. The plant had certainly a nervous system of its own.

Time to Begin.

Two ministers were walking together one Sunday morning to a country church several miles off, where one of them was to preach and the other was to listen. The conversation turned on the length of sermons. The listening brother asked the preaching one how long he meant to preach.

"I shall speak an hour and a quarter at least," said Brother Preach.

"An hour and a quarter!" responded Brother Listen, "Why, I never preach more than half an hour."

"Don't preach more than half an hour!" said Brother Preace; "why, it takes me half an hour to get ready to begin."

"Well, then," said Brother Listen, "we'll have about that long till we get to church. You had better begin now, and save the time of the congregation."

A Big Lawsuit.

Of late there has been slumbering in the courts a suit, the importance of which is likely soon to startle the whole country out of its indifference. The popular belief that the Western Union Telegraph Company is only awaiting its opportunity to secure a controlling interest in the Atlantic and Pacific and Franklin companies is indorsed and invested with a new meaning by many who are more intimately acquainted with telegraphic interests. While these two opposition companies have an independent existence, it is claimed there is a rallying point around which the general interests of the country may gather to afford that aid and moral support which in a popular government is likely to win in the end. It is known that the Western Union Company lay claim to a patent which if sustained by the courts and enforced would destroy every telegraph enterprise in the country, or compel them to pay an onerous tribute to the reigning company. The Western Union Company has shown its disposition to enforce its claim by bringing several suits, but for reasons, as it is claimed, suggested above, have abstained from pressing them. Events that are now developing promise to bring the contest to a speedy issue.

The Western Union Company sues on a patent granted to Prof. Charles Grafton Page, April 14, 1868. With it, as plaintiff, is joined Priscilla, the widow of Prof. Page, from whom a part interest in the patent was purchased for $50,000 soon after its procurement and the almost simultaneous death of her husband. The principal suit was brought against the Manhattan Quotation Company, to restrain it from making instruments and devices claimed to be protected by the patent. The defendants say the patent was granted under circumstances which should cause it to be looked upon at least with suspicion, and that it covers almost every point of the original Morse patent, while they offer to show that the principal claims are for inventions announced to the world or put into practical use not only by Prof. Morse, but by Prof. Henry and other American and English scientists before they were even spoken of by Prof. Page. These questions will mainly occupy the attention of the court. The defendants insist they have irrefragable documentary proof, and on the other hand it is significantly hinted by the friends of the Western Union Company that the claims of Prof. Morse will receive such an overhauling before a jury as they have never yet experienced.—New York Graphic.

A New Way to Dine Without Price.

Lucy Hooper, writing to the Philadelphia Press from Paris, says: "One of the nastiest tricks, but at the same time one of the cleverest of the day, was recently perpetrated on the restaurant-keepers here. An enterprising genius set out one day to get a first-class dinner without paying for it, and he succeeded in this wise: Having procured a quantity of cockroaches, he killed them by immersing them in boiling water, and with the lifeless remains of his victims tied up in a handkerchief and concealed in his pocket, he sallied forth in quest of dinner. Entering the Cafe Brabant, he took a seat at a table in the public room and ordered some soup. The soup was brought in its neat little plated tureen, and the hungry customer proceeded, to ladle out a plateful of it, which he consumed with much appetite. Having nearly finished his soup, he watched his opportunity, popped one of his cockroaches into the tureen, and then screamed for the waiter. The waiter came, and with speechless indignation the rascal pointed to the defunct insect. 'Bring the proprietor!' at last he gasped. 'I will complain—I—I—' 'For heaven's sake be silent, sir,' whispered the distressed waiter; 'you will ruin the reputation of the house. Of course we will charge you nothing for the dish, and if you will say nothing—' 'Ah—well—in that case—but I can eat nothing more here. I am too sick. Good morning.' So off went the gentleman, followed by a storm of apologies and regrets from the repentant waiter. He proceeded to the Maison Doree and ordered a dish of fish, which he obtained on the like cheap terms and in the same ingenious manner. The Cafe Anglais supplied him with a roast, the Cafe Riche with fowl and salad, and he wound up his day's campaign with some ices and cakes at the Cafe Neapolitaine, having obtained a first-class dinner without spending a single cent. When the waiters of the different cafes began to compare notes, of course the trick was discovered, but it was then too late to punish the adroit swindler."

The Miser's Dorg.

Ye never knowed that dorg, Jim—sorter yaller hound? He warn't no slouch when fightin' war around! He didn't take long to peel his teeth and make considerable litter! The way he wrastled, fit and clawed improved a hurtful critter. Neow, purty soon thar warn't no dorg about that claim but him, an' though he couldn't curse an' drink, we doted on him, Jim. But arter that he lay and moaned, it bursted me right up. Says I, "That beast must have a muss or he's a dog-goned purp!" "My pards," says I, "I quit the ranch; Gouge sickens at the fork!" Yer ought ter heerd my pardners weep; they doted on the dorg. He had a accident, did Gouge. Yer never knowed him, Jim? Sho! I feel a kinder chokin' a thinkin' about him. He seed a circus elephant a hobblin' about, an', when the cuss warn't lookin' he grabbed him by the snout. That clumsy critter put his foot too suddint on the ground, an' spread that dorg like pumpkin sass on twelve square yards around!

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL.

It is now fifteen years since the attention of the public was first called by Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart to this wonderful remedy, and so well has it stood the test of time that to-day it not only has the confidence of the entire community, but is more frequently prescribed by physicians in their practice than any other proprietary preparation in the country. It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the Tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. For the following complaints, Inflammation of the Lungs, Coughs, Sore Throat and Breast, Bronchitis, Consumption, Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Disease of the Kidneys, Urinary Complaints, Nervous Debility, Dyspepsia, and diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, there is no remedy in the world that has been used so successfully or can show such a number of marvelous cures. The following will serve to show the estimation in which this sovereign remedy is held by those who have used it.

Consumption for Ten Years Cured.

DR. L. Q. C. WISHART: Dear Sir—I am grateful to you from the fact that you have made a medicine that will cure the disease of the Lungs. My wife has had the Consumption for ten years. Physicians had told me that they could only patch her up for the time being. She was confined to her bed and had been for some time. I heard of your Pine Tree Tar Cordial and secured one bottle; it relieved her cough. She has now finished the fourth bottle, and is able to do the work for her family; and may God speed you on with your great discovery and cure you have made for Consumption.

DR. WISHART, PHILADELPHIA: Dear Sir—During a visit to Philadelphia, some three years ago, I was suffering from a severe cold, and was induced to take a bottle of your Pine Tree Tar Cordial, which had the effect of curing me in a few days. I have used it in my family ever since, and am of the opinion that it saved the life of my daughter, who was suffering from a severe and painful cough. If the publication of this will be of any service, you are at liberty to use it. Yours respectfully,

A Spanish Massacre.

A dispatch published in the London newspapers gives the following account of a massacre by Carlists:

"These ill-fated men were at Olot when an attack against Puigcerda was arranged. In order to proceed to the succor of the place, the Republican troops had to march in the direction of Olot. Fearing a rescue, the Carlists marched their captives toward Vallfogona. Once there, Saballs came to the horrid resolution of shooting them all. Whether it was from objections made to him against such a wholesale butchery, or some other cause, the order was modified. It was directed that all douaniers, or custom-house troops, were to be executed, and that every fifth individual of the commanding officers and soldiers of the line on the list of prisoners should suffer the same fate. This was done, a cross being affixed to the name of each victim on the margin of the paper containing the list of prisoners. These 114 men, with the 75 carabineros, took the direction of Ripoll, and at a short distance from that place the 75 carabineros, with their guard, turned off to the left and the soldiers to the right. The first, on arriving near the cemetery of Llanes, in the parish of Ripoll, were informed that they were about to die. They were tied in couples, and, as the executioners were less in number than the victims, the latter were made to enter in parties of eight, ten and twelve each, and were then shot. Seventy-five prisoners, among them an officer of carabineros, married men, most of them fathers of families, were thus murdered and interred in the cemetery of Llanes. While this massacre was taking place, the 114 troops of the line, or every fifth man selected for death, proceeded in the direction of the town of San Juan de las Abadesas. At about two miles' distance from that place the fatal order was communicated to them, and they were made to take off their coats, which were thrown upon a pile of wood. Strange to say, four men managed to hide themselves among the coats, and succeeded in escaping. The doomed party were then tied in couples and shot. Their corpses were left with an order to the parish authorities to be buried at San Juan. An immense trench was dug in the cemetery, and in it lie the 110 victims of this Carlist atrocity, among them being a field officer, twelve officers and a doctor."

Long Battle Between Oxen.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal has the following account of a protracted battle between two oxen in that State:

"Mr. Corydon Chadwick and Mr. Sullivan Erskine have a pasture in common at South China, which they use for the pasturage of cattle. They have the present season had several yokes of cattle in the pasture. Mr. Chadwick and Mr. Erskine have each an ox with a lopped or crooked horn, the right horn of one and the left of the other having that peculiar formation. These oxen were turned loose into the common pasture, and it was between them on that spot that the pitched battle of which we are to speak took place. For several days these cattle had been missing; when the other cattle came up these were not among the number. How many days they had been missing before search was instituted is not definitely known, but becoming alarmed the owners went in quest of them. Coming to an opening in the woods, covering an area of about half an acre, Mr. Chadwick, who went in search came upon a sickening spectacle. The lopped horns of the oxen were clasped, and the exhausted animals, united compactly, stood face to face, waiting for death, having apparently given up the struggle. It is supposed that while they were engaged in play their horns became entangled; failing to disconnect themselves, a terrible struggle of several days took place. The open space was literally torn up as though it had been plowed with a subsoil plow. When they were turned into the pasture they were large, fat, 7-feet oxen, but now they had become so emaciated and famished that a person could almost clasp them round with his arms. They were perfectly docile when found, but Mr. Chadwick could not untie the knot. The horn of each was sunk into the other's head, and it was only by calling help, and sawing the horns off, that a separation could be effected. There were festering sores where the horns went in. Thus a mortal conflict, lasting eight days, had been going on between these oxen, who in that time had not partaken of any substance, and perhaps had not been able to lie down. Their jaws had to be pried open, and gruel administered to them. Their heads had been united so closely that their faces were bare to the bone. It is possible the animals may live."

The Pulse.

Every intellectual person should know how to ascertain the state of the pulse in health; then, by comparing it with what it was when he is ailing, he may have some idea of the urgency of his case. Parents should know the healthy pulse of each child, as now and then a person is born with a peculiarly slow or fast pulse, and the very case in hand may be that peculiarity. An infant's pulse is one hundred and forty; a child of seven, about eighty; and from twenty to sixty years it is seventy beats a minute, declining to sixty at four-score. A healthful, grown person's pulse beats seventy times in a minute; there may be good health down to sixty; but if the pulse always exceeds seventy, there is a disease—the machine is working too fast; it is working itself out; there is a fever or inflammation somewhere, and the body is feeding on itself, as in consumption, when the pulse is quick—that is, over seventy—gradually increasing with decreased chances of cure, until it reaches one hundred and ten or one hundred and twenty, when death comes before many days. When the pulse is over seventy for months, and there is a slight cough, the lungs are affected.

A Utica paper, ridiculing the ridiculous little country fairs, which make no effort at good shows, says that the Clearfield fair consisted of a calf, a goose and a pumpkin. It rained so hard the first night that the goose swam off, the calf broke loose and ate the pumpkin, and a thief prowling around stole the calf, and that ended the fair.

Ancient Connecticut Laws on "Tobacko."

In the code of laws passed by the towns of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield, in the years 1638-9, may be found the following on tobacco chewing: "Forasmuch as it is observed that many abuses are crept in, and committed by frequent taking of tobacko, it is ordered by the authority of this court, that no person under the age of twenty-one years, nor any other that hath not already accustomed himself to the use thereof, shall take any tobacko untill hee hath brought a certificate under the hands of some who are approved for knowledge and skill in physick, that it is useful for him, and also that hee hath received a lycense from the courte for the same. And for the regulating of those, who, either by theire former taking it, have, to theire owne apprehensions, made it necessary to them, or uppon due advice, are persuaded to the use thereof. It is ordered that no man within the colonye, after the publication hereof, shall take any tobacko publiquely in the street, highways or any barne yardes, or uppon training days, in any open places, under the penalty of sixpence for each offence against this order, in any of the perticulars thereof, to bee paid without gainesaying, uppon conviction, by the testimony of one witness, that is, without just exception, before any one magistrate. And the constables in the severall townes are required to make presentment to each perticular courte, of such as they doe understand, and evict to be transgressors of this order."

No More Heroics.—The deadly vegetable alkaloids, such as Mercury, Strychnine, and Prussic Acid, cannot cure disease or produce any but the most disastrous results. Perhaps no event has occurred of late years which is so well calculated to disabuse the public mind of a belief in the efficacy of mineral poisons and bleeding as the discovery of Dr. Walker, of California, of certain medicinal herbs, whose healing principles he has extracted and combined in the form of Vinegar Bitters. The cures wrought by it seem marvelous. Its action is mild and agreeable, but at the same time rapid and effectual; and being unimpeded by the presence of alcohol or fermented liquor of any description, is attended with results hitherto unachieved by any remedial agent. The cures of Bilious Complaints, Malarious Fever, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Scrofula, and all diseases arising from impurities of the blood, attest the paramount excellence of this medicine, and justify us in recommending it. 2

Interesting to Invalid Ladies.

Harlemville, Columbia Co., N. Y., July 9, 1873.
R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: Your favor is just received. I intended to have written to you several weeks since, concerning the improvement in my health, which is now very apparent. I have used one bottle of Favorite Prescription with the best results, although I will admit I was somewhat discouraged after its use (for a short time only). I took it under very disadvantageous circumstances—having the supervision of the house, and during the season of "house-cleaning" I was obliged, through the incompetency of help, to do more than I ought, and, of course, suffered dreadfully, lifted when I ought not to have raised my hand, and did all I could to bring "order out of chaos,"—but upon laying aside all cares and continuing the remedy I find after using less than one bottle to be so much benefited that I have discontinued the use, with no return of the symptoms of which I wrote you. I have suffered terribly, and what added to my distress was the consciousness of not procuring relief from ordinary sources; at times it seemed about impossible to stand, so great was the distress. All of those severe neuralgic pains have disappeared; they were so bad at times I could hardly walk without some external pressure. They seem to have left me like magic, suddenly, and have had no return; all other symptoms have been removed. The severe weakness and faintness have disappeared, and I can go up stairs with comparative ease now. I would have informed you ere this of my improvement, for I appreciated it, but I was fearful it was only transient benefit I was receiving, but I think sufficient time has elapsed to consider the beneficial results permanent. Accept my best wishes for your future success and your kindness in advising me. Very truly, Mrs. M. Nettie Snyder.

The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly chin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxurious tresses, they become irresistible.

Fell from a Railroad Car, and nearly broke his neck. Pat picked him up, rubbed him with Mexican Mustang Liniment, and sent him on by the next train. Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions, lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel-plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

On Everybody's Tongue.—Eulogiums of the great National Regenerator of Health, Plantation Bitters, are on everybody's tongue. This gratuitous vice voce advertising is better than all paid-for puffing to which the owners of bogus bitters are obliged to resort. It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

Wilhoft's Tonic!—Unfailing and Infallible!—This great Chill Tonic cures Chills without the intervention of doctors and their bills. No consulting visits—no prescriptions to be filled—no huge bills, entailing pecuniary embarrassments, added to loss of health. It is the friend of the poor man, because it enables him to earn a living, and of the rich, because it prepares him to enjoy his wealth. This great boon to mankind is cheap, safe and prompt. The Gift Concerts in aid of the Kentucky Library are chartered by the State of Kentucky. The first prize in the next drawing, which takes place November 30, is $250,000. It is a reliable institution, and some one will get that money. That there may be no doubt as to the honesty of its management, we cite the fact that the best banks in Louisville indorse it, and that Gov. Tho. E. Bramlette, of Louisville, is the general manager. An institution so fathered is certainly deserving of confidence.

Something Nice.—Gentlemen have been troubled for want of a paper collar more closely resembling linen. This is furnished them in the Elmwood Collar. It has a cloth surface that must certainly be linen from the quality, and folded edges that prevent its looking like paper. It is so perfect an imitation of linen that it cannot be detected even on close scrutiny. It is for sale at all gents' furnishing stores, and we would recommend every gentleman to try it.—Boston Herald.

CANCER.
It is well known that the whole medical faculty of all schools of medicine have pronounced Cancers incurable. What sublime effrontery in any person to stand up boldly in the face of all this authority and claim to be able to cure Cancer. To put forth such a claim in the teeth of the medical profession, in the city of Philadelphia, with its world-renowned scientific professors and medical colleges, would be, unless it be substantiated in the most unquestionable manner, a height of impudence rarely attained by mortal man. Dr. Thorpe boldly claims that he can cure, has cured, does cure, and will cure Cancer, as well as diseases of a chronic and scrofulous nature; and, further, HE CURES EVERY CASE TAKEN BY HIM. He does this by a system which no other physician in the world practices. His method of treatment invigorates the body, stirs up the dormant energies of nature, purifies and cleanses the system, and imparts tone and health to all the organs of the body. His method is the most potent ever discovered, and that it is what it is claimed to be will be established to the entire satisfaction of any one who will investigate. John H. The Vermont Democrats have elected fifty-six members to the house against twenty-two in the last Legislature.

The geologist who has authoritatively denied the stories told of immense gold deposits in the Black Hills, is one Col. Fred. Dent Grant. Col. Fred. is very decisive about it.

Gov. Brown, of Tennessee has Written a manly protest to President Grant, against the occupacy of any portion of the state by federal soldiers for the purpose of enforceing the law, and against the interference on the part of the officers of the general government in the arrest, prosecution and conviction of criminals.

Parson Brownlow, the ardent southern Radical and well-known Senator from Tennessee, declares that the passage of the civil rights bill by the United States Senate has brought about the troubels which have broken out in several localities in the South. The Radicals of Indiana have endorsed the civil rights bill in their platform and have thus deliberately given countenances to the scheme to bring about a war of races.

The Chicago Times reprints an extra from the Memphis Appeal, in which that excellent journal finds a remedy for the currency starved South. There is no prospect that the volume of our currency will be enlarged during Grant's administration, and now that hard money ideas are gaining wide currency, such probability is becoming more and more remote. Indeed, two years more of financial experiment in Congress, and the discussion of the same by the newspapers, will bring about such a state of public sentiment that inflation will become entirely unpopular. What will Tennessee do in that case.

Queen Victoria has come gallantly to the rescue of her son Albert Edward whose debts for a young man of small family has grown to be overshadowing. The good queen paid these debts cheerfully, after Mr. Gladstone had determined to make an appeal to Parliament in behalf of the young spendthrift.—For this plain duty, the queen will probably receive unbounded praises from the British journals. The frugalty of the queen is certainly commendable, if for no other reason than that in her old age, after amassing an immense fortune, she should have the wherewithal to liquidate the debt of her dessolute progeny. Wales, with an income equal to several millions of dollars, cannot keep his head above water. He will make a modle king in a few years, and will be a rival of Charles I, in more respect than one.

Desreputable Electioneering.

Gen. Thomas J. Brady, Chairman of the Indiana State Republican Committee, has sent a damnable letter to every Republican editor in the State, the Valparaiso Vidette, of course included in which he among other thing, says:

I desire to call your attention to the horrible scenes of violence and bloodshed transpiring throughout the SOUTH AND, SUGGEST THAT YOU GAVE THEM AS GREAT PROMINENCE AS POSSIBLE IN YOUR PAPER FROM THIS TIME TILL THE ELECTION.'

The Rensselaer Union, which supported Gen. Grant in 1872, but which since has become disgusted with Grantism and corruption generally, denounced Gen. Brady's villaiouns suggestion in the following forcible language:

After the election we presumed Gen. Brady and the Republican Central Committee will not care so much whether these reports of Southern outrages are published or not. This method of electioneering is not only disreputable, but it is absolutely wicked. That negroes are killed, and whitemen too, for that matter, there is probably no doubt, but that they are killed on account of their political views to the extent published by the Inter-Ocean and Indianaplis Journal is very improbably. This "Southern outrage" business is kind of stock in trade which certain unscrupulous politicians; the cry is a denier resort seized upon in the extremity of the party in power to create a division in their favor and cause people to forget, for the time being, such infamous measures as the newspapers gag law," the salary stealing the railroad and steamship subsidies, the high protective tariff the class legislation, the oppressions, the proscriptions, the short comings and the infinite corruption of the Republican party.

That these reported outrages are grossly exaggerated, the careful reader can not doubt. Only a few weeks ago the Indianaoplis Journal had this item published at the head of its editorial columns: ABOUT THIS TIME LOOKOUT FOR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTS OF A WAR IN THE SOUTH; just precisely as the old almanacs used to say of the weather—ABOUT THIS TIME LOOK OUT FOR RAIN. When the Journal published that observation for a piece of pleasantry, the order had not gone forth from headquarters to give these reports AS GREAT PROMIENCE AS POSSIBLE TILL ELECTION; but the Journal had heard this wolf cry in previous campaigns, and knew when to expect it again. Let any person read the Inter Ocean and remember from day to day what appears in its intensely pastizan columns, and he will be struck with the similarity of the report published from week to week. For illustration: Monday we have Coushatta murders, Tuesday the Trenton massacre, Wednesday trouble in Missouri Thursday violence in Mississippi Friday Bloodshed in Louisiana Saturday outrages in Texas. Then there will be a general fusilade all along the line.—Drunken brawls are magnified into a war of races, while murders and robberies are made to assume a political aspect. This paper scans its Southern exchanges and Southern telegrams for reports of lawlessness, collects them into a column, exaggerates, magnifies, and gives them political coloring for mere partizan purpose.

If we are not mistaking the managing editor of the Inter Ocean was at one time a carpet bag member of Congress from a Virginia district. By the term "carpet bag" we mean that he was down in that region directly after the war closed, and by some hocus pocus obtained a certificate of election during the time of transition from rebellion to reconstruction. He was promptly a citizen of another State, where the people hold entirely different views upon political questions even the most trivial; he did out reflect the feelings of the people whom he assumed to represent was not of them, did not understand them, could not sympathize with them did not have their confidence, and was not a representative men.—Of course after political disabilities were removed from the people and they were permitted to choose for themselves this man could on longer be sent to Congress from that district, and having on enterest there his trade being gone, he was compelled either to work, to leave or to starve. He chose to leave; and now the columns of his paper are filled with intense, proscriptive, partizan, illiberality; hoping thereby to revenge his personal disappointments upon a people who prefer to exercise the constitutional rights of freemen and choose representatives from those whose interests are identical with our own being misrepresented by men of unholy ambition whose highest aim is to own plethoric purse. The illiberality, hatred, and proscriptiveness of the managing editor of the Inter Ocean is well illustrated in an article which appears in its columns last Monday. Having said of the Shrevport Times that it was [illegible] and aggressive, and the murders which have illustrated its teachings show plainly enough that it truly represents Southern whites sentiment, that paper replies HERE THE INTER OCEAN TELLS A PLUMB SQUARE LIE.—We have never preposed to drive the negroes of their rights, nor to kill any negroes. The Inter Ocean is telling nauseous, filthy, loathsome lies about the South, and particularly about the people of Louisiana. In answer to this the Inter Ocean says: This man is the deadly foe of society, he ought to be sent to the penitentiary, or hung, as accessory to a hundred murders, and his paper suppressed. The argument advanced by the Inter Ocean is that a Southern editor who does not acquiesce in its manufactured outrages, its partizan misstatements, and its wicked falsehoods, ought to be hung and his paper be suppressed—if the Republican party cannot keep itself in power by the votes of Southern people, Northern people must be frightened into keeping its corrupt representatives on controll of the administration, and should this measure fail also, than the bayonet the halter and the suppression of the press must follow.

That crimes are commited in the Southern States is not doubted. That they are commited in Northern States is true. That more crimes equally as horrible and revolting, are commited daily in the cities of Boston, New York Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago and San Francisco, than in the entire Southern States outside of their large cities is altogether probable; but to charge these atrocities to political account would be outrageous.

There are people from Jasper county living in the South—in Tennessee Missuri, Arkansas and in Texas—who are intelligent outspoken Republicans.—They have friends and relatives here with whom they correspond. But we have yet to hear that they are timorous or have any trouble on account of their political faith.—One—a lady who is very outspoken and a radical Republican in her sympathies—was at Little Rock during the Baxter-Books war.—She wroteto friends in [illegible] sselaer about her experience [illegible] sked if certain male acquantances were still warm friends of Pr sid nt Grant. IF YOU COULD ONLY SEE SOME OF APPOINTEES HERE IN THE SOUTH, she said, YOU WOULD LOSE YOUR RESPECT FOR HIM And so far as we are able to learn from people who has no personal interest to subserve, the conclusions of this lady represent the universal sentiment of Northerners who go into the oppressed and misruled State of the South.

Then again, there is another phase of the question which it is well to consider, if these reports of Southern political violence are true. For nearly ten years the Republican party has had controll of the Government. Its policy has been enforced by the bayonet and civil authority throughout the country during the whole time.—Since May, 1868 the platforms of that party have been congratulating the country on the assured success of the reconstruction policy.—Securing equal civil rights to all. Either the platforms are false, or the current newspapers are false. We believe the statements in the platform are nearer true than those which are now filling the editorial and news columns of disreputable journals. But if the reports are true, then it follows that the Republican party has been deceiving the people year after year by its reiterated statements concerning the success of reconstruction measures. If the administration is powerless, if the government is powerless, to guarentee peace and protection to its people, everywhere in the State, then it is high time that such wretched imbecility substituted with something more efficient. It is wicked for papers to color the report from the South as they do.—It is wicked to foster the prejudices that were engenered by the war. It is wicked to deter emigration and prevent capital from developing the natural resources of that section by publishing these grossly exaggerated reports which are invented slowly to gain temporary political advantage in sections far removed.

The Republican State platform endorses Senator Morton and Pratt, and in view of this fact the people should remember that both the Indiana Senator voted for the law passed to muzzle the press, and for the Civil Rights bill to compel the education of white and negro children in the same schools and in the same classes; and also to compel all hotel keepers and proprietors of public conveyances to treat negroes on terms of perfect equality with white people, under the penalty of heavy fines and imprisonment. Pratt is a candidate for re-election and if the voters of this county elect E. H. Taylor to the Legislature he will cast his vote for Pratt. Men who desire to be used as well as negroes will do well to cast their vote for a candidate who will not vote to send Senator Pratt back to the United States Senate.

The People's Candidate for Congress.

We clip the following from the proceedings of the democratic convention of Noble County, published in the New Era. Our farmer candidate for Congress starts out well.

It being announced that Hon. Freeman Kelley, candidate for Congress, was in the room, he was called to the platform in a storm of applause, and addressed the convention in a fervent and forcible speech. He alluded to the fact that he had always been a laboring man—a practical farmer, constantly at home, excepting the time when he went on foot to California—every mile of the distance on foot—during the time of the gold-mining excitement—that in cosequence of his comparative seclusion his speech and manners was somewhat rugged and rustic, compared with those of his competitor, who, while Kelley was chopping down forest and ditching swamps, was being scraped down and polished off by the influences of college and professional life, and he claimed to have given a life-long and earnest study to the great questions immediately involving the dearest interests and rights of the people, and the posession of sense enough to defend the right, under the circumstances.—He was prepared to encounter much surprise among certain classes (the scraped down and polished ones) at the specacle of the candidacy; but although somewhat surprised himself, at first, he could not fail to perceive in it the glimmer of the dawn of a coming day, when the great masses of the people would rejoice in a ,ratical recognition of their own dominant influence, and in the enjoyments of full councills of the country, by men of their own calling and occupations. In this view, he found not only a hope and gratifications for higher than any mere personal satisfaction, but an inspiration to labor confinently to overcome the partisan majority in which the friends of his own competitor relied so much and to make the people's triumph complete, by winning a place, where he could act in the national legislature as a perfect embodiment of the ideas, the interest and the culture of the agricultural and laboring masses of the nation. If elected (and he expects to be) he hoped his right arm might drop from its socket, and his tongue be forever palsied, if by any act or vote of his they should be injured, financially, or in hororable fame as the great, sustaining classes of the country.

Throughout this strirring address, (of which we do not profess to have given even adequate outlines to say nothing of its inimitable spirits and force) Mr. Kelley was cheered to the echo, and decended from the platform in a perfect thunderstorm of applause.

Our town is filled with strangers. New families are locating here almost daily, and we look for Auburn to soon become one of the "boss" towns of Northern Indiana. Building lots of good location can be had at reasonable prices, and rents are quite low.

A Grand Fireman's Tournament will take place on the last day of the fair at Defiance next week, in which $300 are offered as premiums. This will be a splendid feature of the fair, and if a special train is run from Auburn there will be a good attendance from along the line.

Lost.—Last Sabbath morning between Feagler's Corners and two miles south of Auburn on the Fort Wayne road, a memorandum book, containing one hundred dollars. A liberal reward will be given for its recovery at the postoffice.

Solomon Thomas.

This cry about Mr. Kelly making anti-war speeches, will only catch a few credulous people like the editor of the Indiana, but up here where Mr. Kelly is known it needs no refutation. But there is nothing in the war record of Mr. Baker, so why bring up the question at all.

Mr. Baker spoke at Waterloo last Tuesday evening. We were not present, but one who was describes it as thin as the bluest of skim milk. The attendance was good. Mr. Baker is not making a brilliant campaign. His efforts generally are pronounced failures.

A. P. Swineford, Esq., editor of the Mining Journal, Mayor of Marquette, on Lake Superior, and brother to our big, fat landlord, was in town the other day, with a black eye, which was legitimate, and not the result of any indiscretion, so we are assured.

The Democracy of Noble County have placed in nomination the following ticket: Representative, O. D. [illegible]; [illegible], H. G. Zimmerman; Auditor, J. C. Stewart; Treasurer, Wm. The Fort Wayne Palace of Fashion was awarded the first premium for the best Men's and Boys Clothing at the Northern Indiana Fair, held September 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12.

The fair at the new Catholic church is meeting with good success and will be continued during the week. The awarding of prizes will commence Thursday evening and continue each night until finished. The ladies have everything tastefully arranged, and it is quite a pleasant picture to look in upon.

Prof. Perkins will organize another class in penmanship after the time of the present term expires, provided a sufficient number are secured for the term. To-night the present term closes. The Professor has given good satisfaction, and we doubt not all will be eager to avail themselves of his services for another course.

That certificate from Maj. Saylor does the business for Hague. Mr. Saylor says Mr. Hague did not recommend Miss Blair as his successor in his resignation. But Saylor says in a letter accompanying said resignation, Mr. Hague did recommend Miss Blair, by certifying to her capacity and character.

The first term of the Normal Conservatory opens next week and the prospects are for a good attendance. Prof. Kinsey seems to be a live, energetic young man, and from the way he is spoken of where he is know assures us that the enterprise in which he has entered is bound to win. Our citizens generally should give him every encouragement.

Those of our citizens who can accommodate a few scholars with board or rooms are requested to leave notice at Dr Casebeer's office. There will be a good many students in attendance at the conservatory of music who will want rooms and board, and we hope there will be an effort made to accommodate them.

An Ohio paper contains the following: "Sally S. requests us to say to a certain young man that she would take it as a special favor if he would, before visiting her again, wash his feet and bathe them in Phelan's Night Blooming Cereus, in order to preserve the atmospheric purity of the parlor." Such notices may be necessary in Ohio but we are glad to say they are not needed in this locality.

School Picnic.

Owing to a hard season of study and good work done last week in a general examination of our schools, the Principal, Mr. Huffman, and his assistant teachers have concluded to give a pic-nic to-morrow afternoon in one of the groves. The parents of the children are especially invited to lend their presence to the occasion.

Two of our "high-cock-a-lorums" had a match the other night, to see which or 'tother could get out-side of the most peaches. They done well, considering the state of their stomachs, getting away with about a peck, skins and all. They borrowed the peaches for their match of a lady, promising to pay her back with clings. She is yet clinging—for her pay.

The leaders of the Grant party are circulating Morton's speech, or the war over again, in this county. This is rough on Morton, considering that he was snubbed at the County Convention while Pratt was endorsed. But a war speech from Morton is the ne plus ultra of a campaign document for the Rads in this county. If the passions of the people can be excited, it will raise their hopes.

Bob Taylor is the Independent candidate for Congress in the Fort Wayne district, vice, Pap Walters resigned. This man Taylor has about as much sympathy for the common classes, as a burglar would entertain towards a policeman, and is repelling and unsocial in his nature.—there are enough of these now in Congress Let us have a few, with a big heart that can sympathize with the poor man's lot.

"Peters' Musical Monthly is, to our mind the best of all the periodical publications containing songs and piano pieces. The music it disseminates is always pleasing and of excellent character, without being classical, and is well calculated to elevate musical taste in American homes. It is issued from the well-known music house of J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New-York. Send thirty cents for sample copy."

If every little disagreeable affair that happens among citizens and neighbors, or every querulous complaint, or hasty expression of opinion, or unpleasant criticism, should find its way into the newspapers, what would become of society, or law and order? The press has a far higher and nobler duty to perform in leading men—rather than attempting to drive them—to better opinions, more manly habits and grander ambitions, and in purifying and elevating the social, moral, and political elements of society by the gently constraining power of apt argument and sound teaching. Let peace reign in our midst, and its good fruit will make all the people glad.

FAIRS.

The fair commences at Waterloo next week and will continue four days. It seems to us from appearances that there is a lack of interest in the enterprise, though there is no good reason why it should not be as good a success as former ones.

The Fair at Defiance, Ohio, is unfortunately at the same time next week. Quite a number of our citizens would attend, especially if a train is put on the Baltimore road from that point to Auburn, as has been talked of.

The Indianapolis exposition is meeting with great success, and the attendance is unusually large.

To cure dull times—apply an advertisement to the afflicted part.

A sign board can't tell anything. It takes an advertisement to do that.

All who advertise do not get rich, but precious few get rich without it.

The world is full of advertising, yet every one wants to see what is new.

The world's memory is short. It will forget you if you do not jog it frequently.

The world is sure to find out an honest man; but it will find him out a great deal quicker if he advertises.

If you would note the changes of the seasons, watch the advertisements Dealers in stoves don't announce their stocks in dog days, and dealers in Linen suits become silent before Christmas.

Early to bed and early to rise-
Will all be in vain if you dont advertise.

A Beautiful Prayer.

Lord! bless and preserve that dear person whom thou hast chosen to be my husband; let his life be long and blessed comfortable and holy; and let me also become a great comfort and blessing unto him, a sharer in all his joys, a refreshment in all his sorrows, a meet helper for him in all the accidents and changes of the world make me amiable forever in his eyes, and very dear to him. Unite his heart to me in the dearest union of love and holiness and mine to him in all sweetness, charity and compliance. Keep from me all ungentleness, all discontentedness, and unseasonableness of passion and humor; and make me humble and obedient, charitable and loving, patient and contented, useful and observant, that we may delight in each other according to thy blessed word and ordinance, and both of us may rejoice in thee, having our portion in the love and service of God forever.

Administrator's Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned has been appointed administrator of the estate of Christopher Cool, late of DeKalb county, deceased. Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

SYLVESTER KUTZNER.

A Parallel.

Mr. Baker being a lawyer, is crafty and fond of scheming, because a lawyer must be up in these to be successful. Mr. Kelley is a farmer, has good common sense and has dealt honestly by everyone all the days of his life. Mr. Baker is for party, Mr. Kelley is for the people. Mr. Baker has had wealth and influence to assist through life, Mr. Kelley has toiled for years to secure a home of his own. Mr. Baker has always associated with the fashionable and the froth of society, Mr. Kelley has always been found commingling with the laboring man, the farmer, the mechanic; the true and the faithful. Mr. Baker has devoted his time in looking through law books and conniving at schemes to defeat his opponent, Mr. Kelley has had for his implements the axe and the hoe. Mr. Baker has devoted his energies exclusively to the law, Mr. Kelley has employed his spare moments, as farmers generally do in acquiring a general information of State and National affairs. Mr. Baker received his education through schools and colleges, Mr. Kelley is a self-made man. Mr. Baker has fine ideas and theories, Mr. Kelley has experience and practicability. Mr. Baker is conventional and fond of ceremony, Mr. Kelley is honest and sincere. Mr Baker is lofty and commanding in tone, Mr. Kelley is humble and frank in his intercourse with men. Mr. Baker is a member of a profession that cast a vote of about one hundred in the district Mr. Kelley belongs to that class which holds the greater part of the entire vote. Farmers, Mechanics, laborers, which of these two men are the nearest in accord with your sentiments, your interests, your wants and the rights a good government vouchsafes to you. Let the ides of October determine.

Married.

Raseley—Moody—On last Sabbath, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Rev. J. E. Fisher, Mr. Hiram Raseley and Miss Jennie Moody, all of this county.

The first outgrowth of this union was a large jelly cake for the printer, and we are at all times ready to say, "Hurrah for union." We make a specialty of jelly cake, and if there is anything we like it is one thing more than another. We thank the happy Hiram and his beautiful, blushing bride for their remembrance, and wish them many happy returns of the occasion. Unlike George in "Led Astray," he need not now say:

"I have another life I long to meet,
Without which life my life is incomplete.
Oh, sweeter self! like me art thou astray!
Trying with all thy heart to find the way
To mine! Straying, like mine, to find the breast
On which alone can weary heart find rest."

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

FIVE men recently entered the Wellsboro (Pa.) bank at night, gagged the President and his family, and robbed the institution of $50,000.

NEW YORK dispatches state that the Beecher-Tilton case is in a greater stew than ever. All kinds of conjectures are entertained and all kinds of rumors in circulation, some stating that Beecher will commence a suit for libel against Moulton or Tilton; others stating that the next Grand Jury will be asked to find a criminal indictment against them; and still others, that Beecher will rely upon the righteousness of his cause and do or say nothing more. The best friends of Beecher declare, however, that if he takes no legal measures against his accusers, it will be equal to a confession of his guilt. The Plymouth Church people are exceedingly exercised, but the general sentiment among them is to await Beecher's return, and then declare what further steps to take, if any.... Some curious developments were brought to light in the recent investigation of the Kings County (N. Y.) Almshouse. The grave-digger testified that deceased paupers are buried in pits twelve feet square and ten to twelve feet deep, 250 being buried in each pit.

THE libel suit of Miss Edna Dean Proctor against Frank D. Moulton has been set for trial on Oct. 7.

The West.

AT Madison, Wis., last week, Mrs. J. R. Jacobs, of St. Louis, was robbed of diamonds valued at $10,000, by Mrs. Mary Seerey and her husband, servants, who were arrested, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for three years each.

ALL of the Wisconsin railroads are preparing to comply with the Potter tariff law.... The marriage of Lieut. Fred. Grant, son of the President, and Miss Honore, of Chicago, is announced to take place in the latter city on the 20th of October. The bride is a daughter of H. H. Honore, a wealthy real estate dealer, and a sister of Mrs. Potter Palmer.

VARIOUS parts of Iowa were visited by a destructive hurricane, accompanied by heavy rain, on the 18th inst. At Davenport, fences in all parts of the city were blown down, and the market house unroofed. Lumber in the lumber yards was scattered profusely around and broken up. The East Davenport engine-house was washed away with its contents; part of the new High-School building fell to the ground; hundreds of trees were uprooted, and cellars flooded. At Rock Island, Ill., several buildings suffered material damage, particularly the Presbyterian church, where the roof fell in, breaking down floors and smashing the organ and pulpit. Within a few miles of Dunleith, Ill., a part of the track of the Illinois Central railroad was washed away, and a freight train thrown into the ditch. The engineer, Anderson; fireman Orton, and a brakeman named Allison, who was riding on the engine, were extricated from the mass of ruins badly crushed and scalded. Allison died from his injuries in a few hours; Anderson and Orton are at Galena, the latter with very little chance of recovery. Mr. Peter Rider, while standing near a corn-crib feeding hogs on his farm, four miles from Dubuque, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. A man named John Mahoney, who took refuge from the storm under a car in the yard of the Illinois Central railroad, at the depot in Dubuque, was crushed to death under the wheels. After Mahoney got under the car, an engine was attached, and the train moved, causing his death.

BY decree of the United States Circuit Court, the Chinese women imported into San Francisco for purposes of prostitution are to be returned to their native land—a victory for the cause of morality against formidable opposition....Important news comes from Gen. Miles' expedition against the Comanche and Kiowa Indians. A dispatch from Dodge City, Kansas, says: "Col. Miles has had to fall back 100 miles to meet his supplies, and has telegraphed to Gen. Pope for large reinforcements, as the Indians are in such force that he cannot protect his supplies and carry on offensive operations. Gen. Pope's answer is that Miles has all the men he can get. One large supply train of thirty-six wagons has been captured, the assistant wagon-master killed and the men compelled to abandon the entire train, after a desperate resistance, bringing twenty-seven wounded men into Camp Supply. The train contained 300 stand of arms, 200,000 rounds of ammunition, besides commissary supplies. The Eighth cavalry came in from Arizona and joined Col. Miles. They lost all their supply and baggage trains, coming in entirely destitute. The Indians are becoming more bold and extending their depredations every day. They seem thoroughly organized, and are working systematically, more so than ever."....The Chicago Common Council has passed the amended fire ordinance making the city and fire limits co-extensive.

GEORGE W. STEWART, of Le Sueur, Minn., died at Omaha a short time ago, while on his way to Colorado with his son. Physicians decided that his decease was caused by apoplexy; but suspicion is entertained that he was partially insane, and secured a large insurance on his life for the benefit of his family with the deliberate purpose of committing suicide. He was insured in various companies for a total of $97,000, passing a strict medical examination in all cases....The mortality report of Chicago for one week shows 187 deaths—one in 3,000....The Lincoln monument is to be unveiled at Springfield, Ill., on the 15th of October.

THE Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company is about to build a new bridge across the Mississippi river at Clinton, Iowa, for its own accommodation, and the citizens of Clinton propose to construct a wagon-way over the same bridge....The Iowa State Fair was held at Keokuk last week. The display was a fine one, and the fair in every respect a grand success. The show of horses and cattle is said to have been the finest ever witnessed west of the Mississippi....St. Louis will have a professional base-ball club next season.

The South.

THE Grand Jury of Gibson county, Tenn., has returned upward of fifty indictments against parties implicated in the murder of the colored prisoners at Trenton. A number of them voluntarily came forward and gave bail in the sum of $10,000 each to appear for trial.

THE James and Younger boys have been heard from again. Their new exploit is the robbery of four stages running between Malvern, on the Iron Mountain railroad, and the Hot Springs in Arkansas. They carried off as booty about $2,000 in money and much valuable jewelry. At last accounts a Sheriff and special posse were in hot pursuit, and confident of overtaking the robbers.

GEN. MILES' expedition against the Indians in Northern Texas has been experiencing a lively time. Twenty men of the 6th cavalry recently had a five days' fight with 400 redskins on the Wichita river, killing about thirty. Two soldiers were killed and six wounded. Maj. Price, of the 8th cavalry, defeated a large force of Comanches near the same locality, killing a large number. Lieut. Baldwin, with three scouts, had a long and desperate running fight with a band of Kiowas, killing five and capturing one. Six couriers for supplies were surprised by 125 Comanches on the Wichita, and after a gallant defense, the loss of one of their number killed and all but two wounded, repulsed them with a loss of twelve killed.

A NEW ORLEANS telegram of the 21st says: "Reports come in from the country parishes of tumult and disturbance consequent upon the changes of officials. The McEnery appointees now have possession in most of the parishes of the State, and the fact of the five days mentioned in the President's proclamation having expired does not seem to alarm them. It is likely that the Kellogg parochial officers will meet with a great deal of opposition in getting back unless they are assisted by United States soldiers."

NEW ORLEANS advices state that there is some prospect of another insurrection in Louisiana, with the design of forcing the establishment of a military rule.

Washington.

MR. LEGGETT, the Commissioner of Patents, has resigned, to be succeeded by Deputy Commissioner Thatcher.

PRESIDENT GRANT, in reply to the protest of Gov. Brown, of Tennessee, against the interference of United States Marshals in the matter of the arrest of persons supposed to be implicated in the Trenton outrages, says that Congress has passed laws giving the Federal authorities jurisdiction in such cases, and that the Constitution makes it his duty to enforce the acts of Congress.

THE President has issued an order to the effect that, as a trial of the civil service rules has proved them efficient at Washington and New York, they are to be extended to the several Federal offices at Boston.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL JEWELL is evidently determined to administer his office in the interests of the people. In awarding the contract for stamped envelopes to the Plympton Manufacturing Company, the other day, he gave them definitely to understand that they must not expect any favors from him merely because they were his fellow-townsmen, and that if they did not live up to their contract he would annul it.

General.

THE Navy Department is informed that there is no abatement in the yellow fever at Pensacola Navy-Yard.

FIFTEEN dollars is now the price of passenger tickets on the ocean steamships for Europe. Competition between rival lines is the cause.

THE creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., in Washington, held a meeting a few days ago, and resolved to push their claims against that firm vigorously, and to have a fair and thorough showing as to the causes of the failure, and of the proceedings of the members of the firm after the failure.

Political.

THE Democrats of New York, in session at Syracuse on the 16th and 17th of September, nominated Samuel J. Tilden for Governor, and William Dorsheimer for Lieutenant-Governor. The resolutions declare: Gold and silver the only legal tender; steady steps toward specie payments; payment of the public debt in coin; Federal taxation for revenue only; no sumptuary laws; corporations the creatures of the State; no third Presidential term....Gen. John F. Farnsworth has been nominated for Congress by the Independent-Reform party of the Fourth Illinois District, now represented by Hon. S. A. Hurlbut.

THE Republicans of Tennessee have nominated Horace Maynard, at present Congressman at large, as their candidate for Governor. ....The Republicans of South Carolina, in their convention at Columbia, adopted unanimously a resolution favoring Gen. Grant for a third term. This is the first open adhesion to the third term movement by any regular political body....Official returns from all but seventy-nine towns and plantations in Maine give Dingley 49,768 votes, and Titcomb 39,018; Dingley's majority, 10,750.

A PHILADELPHIA dispatch to a Western paper states that a new political order, with signs, grips and pass-words, called the "Order of Independents," has been started in that city. Its leading principles are stated to be: Equal political rights to all citizens without regard to race, color or religion; a full recognition of the necessity of combination of capital for business purposes, and laws to protect such combination, but no monopolies; all paper money should be issued and redeemed by the general government without increasing the public debt; the government to issue bonds, representing gold, of the denomination of $5 and upwards, bearing a low rate of interest, and to be made a legal tender; prohibiting all banks from paying interest on deposits; all business transactions to be founded on a specie basis; the rate of interest to be made uniform throughout the United States; an increase in the number of courts; no perquisites to be allowed to officers; a system of instruction at the public expense; no private corporation to receive aid from the general government, State or municipality.... The Conference Committee of the Kellogg and McEnery partisans in New Orleans, after a five days' session, has adjourned without coming to a compromise. Everything apparently progressed satisfactorily until the question of the Returning Board was reached. This board, which is the key to the whole election scheme, consists of five members, elected by the Senate. The question of representation upon this board was the only point upon which an agreement could not be reached, and finally blocked all negotiation.

PRESIDENT GRANT is reported by a Washington correspondent to have said in conversation, the other day, that he intended to remove all incompetent or otherwise unfit Federal officials in the South so fast as he became convinced of their unworthiness.

THE New York State Republican Convention met at Utica, Sept. 23d, and renominated all the present incumbents of the State offices for re-election: Governor, John A. Dix; Lieutenant-Governor, John C. Robinson; State Prison Inspector, Ezra Graves; Canal Commissioner, R. M. Stroud, Associate Judge Court of Appeals, Alexander S. Johnson. The platform demands obedience to the laws; full protection of every citizen in his rights; the public faith must be preserved inviolate, and the public debt be paid in coin; opposes inflation of paper currency, and favors a return to specie payments; that taxation should be kept at the lowest practicable point, and be so adjusted as to be least burdensome to all classes ....The Missouri Republican Convention met at Jefferson City, Sept. 23, and after indorsing the Reform platform and ticket adjourned without making any nominations. A platform was adopted relating principally to State affairs, and urging Republicans in every part of the State to keep up their allegiance and party organization....The Democratic and Liberal Republican Convention of Minnesota was held at St. Paul on Sept. 23. Wescott P. Wilkin was nominated for Chief-Justice and William Lochren for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. A platform was adopted declaring in favor of the resumption of specie payments as soon as the interests of the country will allow; a tariff for revenue only; equal and exact justice to all men; a free press; no gag laws; no sumptuary laws; no government partnership with protected monopolies; the right of the State to supervise chartered corporations.

Foreign.

THE trial of the accomplices in the escape of Bazaine has been concluded at Grasse, France. Col. Villette and Plantin were sentenced to six months', Doineau to two, and Gigeaux to one month's imprisonment. The remainder of the alleged accomplices were acquitted.

The Louisiana War Ended.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 17.—The war is over, and the city is now under military rule, as shown by the following:

"HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 17, 1874.
[Circular.]

"John McEnery and D. B. Penn, styling themselves respectively Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of the State of Louisiana, having informed the department commander of their willingness under the President's proclamation to surrender the State property now in their possession, and to disband the insurgent forces under their command, Brevet Brig.-Gen. J. R. Brooke, Lieutenant-Colonel 3d infantry, is charged with the duty of taking possession of the arms and other State property. He will occupy the State-House, Arsenal, and other State buildings until further orders. He is hereby appointed to command the city of New Orleans until such time as the State or City Governments can be reorganized. The present police force in the city, under the charge of Thomas Boylan, will remain on duty and be responsible for the good order and quiet of the city until regularly relieved.

"By command of Col. and Brevet Maj. Gen. W. H. Emory."

In accordance with arrangements previously made, Gen. J. R. Brooke, accompanied by Lieuts. Wallace and Roe, went to the executive office at the St. Louis Hotel. Upon the entrance of Gen. Brooke, Govs. McEnery and Penn, shaking hands with him, introduced the three Federal officers to a number of prominent citizens present. Gov. McEnery then stated to Gen. Brooke that he gave him possession of the State Capitol and all other State buildings within the limits of the city. Gen. Brooke merely bowed in acceptance, and the Governor read to him a protest against the occupation of the State buildings by the military, in which he stated that it was never the intention of the Citizens' party to resist the Federal authority.

At the conclusion of this address, Gen. Brooke was seated in his office, and required from Lieut.-Gov. Penn a statement of all records, etc., which were in the building when they took possession. Gov. McEnery and his followers then withdrew, leaving the Capitol of Louisiana in possession of the military officers of the Federal Government. At 7 p. m. two companies of the 3d infantry marched down, and were quartered in the building. Col. Thomas Boylan, McEnery's Chief of Police, remains on duty with his force. The city is very quiet. McEnery and Penn issued an address to the people, advising a cheerful obedience to the constituted authorities.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 18.—The following explains itself:

"HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 18, 1874.

"To the Hon. William P. Kellogg, Governor of the State of Louisiana:

"SIR: In obedience to the order of the President, I have the honor to inform you of the surrender of the insurgents lately in arms against the State Government, and to afford you the necessary military support to re-establish the State Government. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. H. EMORY,
"Colonel and Brevet Major-General Commanding."

In accordance with the above, Kellogg at once resumed the functions of Governor, and at once issued an order directing all the deposed State officers to return to their official posts.

AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Orders have been issued to the 22d regiment of infantry to proceed to New Orleans. Three war vessels have been ordered to proceed from Key West at once.

Orders have also been issued for the troops in Fortress Monroe to hold themselves in readiness.

Gen. McDowell is gathering up such forces as can be spared from the department for service in Louisiana.

It is supposed that about 6,000 troops can be concentrated in Louisiana within a week or ten days.

The Postmaster-General says that there is now no obstruction to the mails in Louisiana.

Republican Louisianians here are not pleased with the terms of the surrender, as Boylan, appointed by Penn as Chief of Police, remains in office, and the late insurgents retain their arms, with their White League organization. They regard the arrangement as a compromise, and think matters are thereby complicated as to the future.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The President, in conversation to-day, said that he believed that all serious trouble in Louisiana was now over, and expressed the hope that the business aspect would be fully resumed in New Orleans and elsewhere in the State. It is not probable that any further instructions will be sent Gen. Emory at present.

THE BROOKLYN SCANDAL.

Tilton's Second Statement—New Documents and New Names Introduced.

The long-expected statement of Theodore Tilton was published simultaneously in the New York Graphic and Chicago Tribune on the 18th of September, and fills twenty-eight columns of the latter paper. The statement contains a large mass of new documentary evidence to sustain Tilton's indictment against Mr. Beecher. It starts out by showing the kindly relations existing between the author and Mr. B. down to the period of 1870, in which year a public and fraternal correspondence passed between them in New York in their capacity as Presidents of two suffrage societies holding their meetings in that city. These evidences of the uniform friendliness of Tilton toward Beecher down to the time when the alleged discovery was made by the former of Beecher's fatal assault on the honor of his house are given to disprove Mrs. Tilton's charge that for ten years her husband had made an almost daily threat that he lived to crush out Mr. Beecher. This charge of Mrs. T. of malice on his part toward Beecher, Tilton declares was a pure invention.

Mr Tilton next gives copious extracts from his wife's letter showings the harmonious relations existing between them up to July, 1870. And to throw a side-light on the happy domestic relations which this correspondence portrays, the appended letter from Oliver Johnson, at present one of the editors of Mr. Beecher's paper, is given:

"DEC. 12, 1872.

"MY DEAR THEODORE: I wonder what you would give for a chance to kiss the little woman who only an hour since kissed me!

"Ah, my dear fellow, it is a great sacrifice you make in leaving such a home as yours.

"I was delighted this morning on receiving a visit from your wife, and hearing her say what beautiful love-letters she gets from you. She seemed well, and smiled on me through her tears as she spoke of you and the long season of separation that is before you.... Yours, lovingly, OLIVER JOHNSON."

The following extract from a written statement of Mr. Tilton's father and mother is also given to prove that the relations of husband and wife were harmonious:

"KEYPORT, N. J., Aug. 30, 1874.

* * * Also we further testify that we never heard of any ill-feeling between our son Theodore and his wife, or any complaint of ill-treatment by him towards her, until we lately heard of it for the first time in Elizabeth's published testimony, which we believe to be untrue.

(Signed) "SILAS TILTON,
"EUSELIA TILTON."

Tilton then narrates with great minuteness the circumstances attending Mrs. T.'s confession of adultery with Mr. Beecher. It was, as he alleges, after her return to the city after several weeks' absence in the country. Before disclosing the secret she extracted from her husband a solemn pledge that he would not injure the person of whom she was about to speak, nor communicate to him the fact of her making such a revelation.

This confession, Mr. T. says, was made voluntarily, and not in response to any accusation from the husband, for he had never suspected her of any wrong-doing. A letter from Miss Susan B. Anthony to Mrs. Isabella Hooker (a sister of Mr. Beecher) is quoted in proof that Mrs. Tilton confessed her conduct with the Plymouth pastor.

Tilton gives the following letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton to Francis D. Moulton, dated as late as the 2d of September last:

"DEAR FRIEND: In your forthcoming statement, whatever you say or fail to say, do not forget as a brave knight to bring your steel on the head of 'The Great Preacher' for the base charge that Elizabeth Tilton thrust her love on him unsought.

"You know, better than Susan or I do, the time and arguments by which he achieved his purpose.

"Alas! alas! how little charity, to say nothing of common justice, has been shown woman in this tragedy. . . . . Sincerely yours, ELIZABETH CADY STANTON."

A considerable portion of the statement is devoted to a refutation of the charge that Mrs. Tilton "thrust her affections upon him (Beecher) unsought," and much evidence is produced to show that the pastor rather sought the affections of Mrs. T. Much space is devoted by Tilton to the alleged machinations of Mrs. Morse, his mother-in-law, to create unhappiness in his family, and a number of letters are quoted which place her in an unenviable light. Tilton charges her with hiring and bribing the girl Bessie to invent and propagate false stories about him. Says Tilton: These are the tales which Bessie referred to four years ago, when in a letter to Mrs. Tilton, she said:

"Your mother, Mrs. Morse, has repeatedly attempted to hire me, by offering me dresses and presents, to go to certain persons and tell them stories injurious to the character of your husband."

The object for which these tales were told is thus described by Mrs. Tilton in a letter to a lady friend, dated June 13, 1874:

"My husband has suffered much with me in a cruel conspiracy made by my poor, suffering mother, with an energy worthy of a better cause, to divorce us," etc.

The stories which Mrs. Morse propagated in the carrying out of this conspiracy are mentioned by Mrs. Tilton in a letter to Mr. Moulton, as follows:

"The story that I wanted a separation was a deliberate falsehood coined by my poor mother, who said she would take the responsibility of this and other statements she might make," etc.

In the report of the Plymouth Church Investigation Committee occurs the following:

"Tilton's allegation that she (Mrs. T.) confessed to her mother, Mrs. Morse, is pronounced false by the mother, who testified before the committee."

To disprove this, and to show that Mrs. Morse uttered, as Tilton alleges, a deliberate falsehood, he quotes a letter from Mrs. Tilton to Mrs. Morse, dated Marietta, Ohio, November, 1870. Inclosed in this was a duplicate of a letter addressed at the same time by Mrs. T. to her husband to chide him for the supposed recklessness into which she had been informed by her mother that her husband had lapsed ever since the time of her confession of adultery. In this letter Mrs. Tilton says:

"Dear mother, I will now add a line to you. I should mourn greatly if my life was to be made yet known to father; his head would be bowed indeed to the grave. I love him very much, and it would soothe my heart could you be restored to him. I was greatly touched by his saying to you that 'you were still his wife.'

"You will see that by reading or showing this letter to any one you discover my secret. It is because I trust you, dear mother, that I send you this, that you may know my spirit completely toward you both.

"I have been told, Confide not in your mother; but I reply, To whom on earth can I confide?

"I think it pre-eminently wise for us to destroy our letters respecting this subject, lest Flory or some one should pick them up."

Mr. Tilton publishes several letters to show how heavily his wife's guilty secret pressed on her heart, particularly at times when exposure was threatened.

In regard to Mr. Beecher's charge that Tilton's attack on him originated in the latter's troubles with Henry C. Bowen, he produces documentary evidence to prove that Bowen and he were on the very best of terms; that Bowen had made costly presents, including a $600 watch, as an evidence of his appreciation of his valuable services, and offered to engage him for five years at a heavy salary. He then narrates with minuteness the first occasion of the broaching of his domestic troubles in Bowen's presence, Oliver Johnson also being present at the interview. Bowen referred Tilton's not going to Plymouth Church, and wanted to know the reason. Tilton reminded Bowen first of his own oft-repeated charges against Beecher as a clergyman given to loose behavior with women, and dangerous to the families of his congregation, and then told him of the pastor's improper behavior toward his own wife. This, Tilton alleges, [illegible] Beecher. Tilton's statement on this point is very important, and we give it in his own words:

"All his past grievances against his pastor seemed to be rekindled into sudden heat. He walked up and down his library, denouncing Mr. Beecher as a man guilty of many adulteries, dating from his Western pastorate, and running down through all the succeeding years. Mr. Bowen declared that Mr. Beecher had, in the preceding month of February, 1870, confessed to him certain of these adulteries, and Mr. Bowen pointed out to me the exact spot in his library whereon Mr. Beecher, with tears and lamentations, had (as Mr. Bowen said) acknowledged to him his guilt.

"Mr. Bowen, in this interview, declared that he and I owed a duty to society in this matter, and that I ought to join him in a just demand on Mr. Beecher to retire from the ministry, to quit the city, and to betake himself beyond the reach of the families whose homes he was invading like a destroyer.

"Mr. Bowen challenged me to write such a demand, and begged for an opportunity to bear it to Mr. Beecher in person, saying that he would support it by a great volume of evidence, and would compel its enforcement. I wrote on the spot the note mentioned in Mr. Moulton's statement, and which seemed to please Mr. Bowen greatly. Just as I was leaving his house, his last word to me was: 'Henry Ward Beecher is a wolf in the fold, and I know it; he ought never to preach another sermon, nor write another word in a religious newspaper; he endangers families and disgraces religion; he should be blotted out.'"

Tilton relates in detail the interview between Beecher and himself, in the presence of Moulton, on the night of the 30th of December, 1870, concerning the pastor's alleged adulteries with Mrs. Tilton, the closing part of which we give in his own words:

"After I delivered my message, I unlocked the door and said to Mr. Beecher, 'Now that we understand each other, you are free to go. If any harm or disgrace comes to Elizabeth or the children, I shall hold you responsible. For her sake I spare you, but if you turn upon her, I will smite your name dead before the whole world.'

"When I ceased speaking, he hesitated to leave his chair, but sat with bowed head, and with eyes riveted to the floor. At length, looking up into my face, he said: 'Theodore, I am in a dream—I am in Dante's Inferno.'

"I pointed to the door and said again, 'You are free to retire.'

"In going out he stopped on the threshold, turned, looked me in the face, and asked with quivering lip whether or not I would permit him to see Elizabeth once more for the last time. I was about to answer, 'No, never,' but remembering my wife's grief, and her expressed wish that his interview could have taken place in her presence, I felt that she would be better satisfied if I gave him the permission he asked, and so I said, 'Yes, you may go at once, but you shall not chide Elizabeth for confessing the truth to her husband. Remember what I say: If you reproach that sick woman for her confession, or utter to her a word to weigh heavily upon her broken heart for betraying you, I will visit you with vengeance. I have spared your life during the past six months and am able to spare it again; but I am able also, to destroy it. 'Mark me,' I added, 'Elizabeth is prostrate with grief—she must hear no word of blame or reproach.'

"'Oh, Theodore,' he said, 'I am in a wild whirl!'

"After these words he retired from the room, and almost immediately (as Mr. Moulton has narrated) accompanied that gentleman to my house, where (as Mr. Beecher admits) he fell upon Elizabeth with 'strong language,' that is, full of reproach, and procured from her a retraction which he dictated to her, and which she wrote at his command,—her tremor and fear being plainly visible in her handwriting, as shown in the Graphic's fac simile."

Just prior to this interview with Mr. Beecher Tilton had made two contracts with Bowen, signing them only a few days previous, from which he was to receive as large a salary as the pastor of Plymouth Church—was, in fact, in the most independent circumstances—and hence the subject of financial embarrassments could not have been the object of the interview. This fact, fortified by proof, Tilton claims puts an end to that passage in the committee's verdict which says: "It is clear that, on the 29th of December, when the so-called memorandum of confession was procured from Mrs. Tilton, the chief inciting cause of that step on Tilton's part was his belief that Mr. Beecher had caused him his loss of place, business, and repute."

Tilton devotes considerable space to the statement of Beecher—that he (Beecher) "attempted to keep Tilton from public trial by Plymouth church" for having circulated scandals derogatory to the Christian integrity of its pastor—and quotes from the church records to prove that the Investigating committee stultified themselves when they reported that Tilton's original statement "presented no square issues upon which Mr. Beecher's guilt or innocence could be tried." Tilton shows that the committee falsified the church records, believing that he possessed no official copy, and concludes under this head by asking:

"Why did Mr. Beecher keep me from a public trial by the church? It was to save, not me, but himself. It was not I, but he, who feared to be tried, and who put forth the labors of a Hercules to prevent a trial. And with good reason; for, unless Mr. Beecher's case in that perilous hour had been conducted by the present Committee of Six, on their novel plan of acquitting at all hazards, the trial would have proven him guilty. With wise sagacity, therefore, Mr. Beecher sought to keep me from that trial in order to save himself from that ruin. I well remember that, at that time, he spoke of his anxious and sleepless nights, full of fear and apprehension at the possible failure of his cunning attempt to prevent the coming on of a trial which, at the same time, he had to pretend to invite!"

Tilton claims that his relations with Mrs. Woodhull were known to and joined in by Beecher, and for the same end the hushing up of the great scandal. Beecher formed her personal acquaintance, and strove, by his kindly interest in her, to maintain and increase her good will.

Tilton then cites numerous occasions from the winter of 1871 to the spring of 1874, when Mr. Beecher made allusions, in Moulton's presence, to the abiding grief which, he said, God would never lift from his soul for having corrupted so pure-minded a woman as Elizabeth Tilton to her loss of honor, and also for having violated the chastity of friendship toward Tilton as his early and trusting friend, and concludes this section of his statement as follows: "Mr. Beecher's recent denial under oath that he committed adultery with Mrs. Tilton is known to him, to her, to Mr. Moulton, to me, and to several other persons to be an act of perjury."

Tilton next proceeds to deal with the alleged hypocrisy of Beecher before the Investigating Committee. Taking up this sentence from his defense—

"His (Mr. Tilton's) affairs at home did not promise that sympathy and strength which makes one's house, as mine has been, in times of adversity, a refuge from the storm and a tower of defense;"

—he compares it with some expressions of Beecher to Tilton previous to the exposure of his guilt, as—

"O, Theodore, God might strip all other gifts from me if He would only give me a wife like Elizabeth and a home like yours;"

Or—

"I dread to go back to my own house; I wish the earth would open and swallow me up."

Tilton closes this part of his rejoinder with these words:

"I know that my allusions to Mr. Beecher's home-life is rough and harsh, but I know, also, that it is true; for, as I pen it down, there rises in my mind a vivid recollection of the many years of my daily association with Mr. Beecher, during which he taught me to sympathize with him for the very reason that his house, instead of being what he now calls it, 'a refuge from the storm,' was more often the storm itself, from which he sought refuge in mine."

Commenting on Beecher's statement that his greatest error consisted in simply advising Mrs. Tilton to separate from her husband, Tilton holds that such advice, given on the theory that she had been deprived of food, [illegible] the giver of it would never need to have repented of such action. Tilton concludes this part of his argument as follows:

"But I will go further, and say that, granting such advice to have been given, and to have been bad, yet since Mrs. Tilton did not accept this advice, but rejected it—since she did not separate from her husband and home, but remained with her family as before—in other words, since Mr. Beecher's bad advice was not followed by ill consequences, but no harm whatever came of it;—it is a mockery of human reason to say that he spent four years of remorse in contemplating the giving of bad advice which was never taken and which produced no effect of harm or ill!"

Beecher's charge of blackmailing is disposed of by Tilton, who shows that at the period Mrs. Tilton was instructed to say that she was deprived of food and fire, and Mrs. Morse wrote that if Tilton's debts were paid he would not be worth a cent, Mr. Beecher was informed by one of the custodians of Tilton's money that he had no debts unpaid, and that he had several thousand dollars in cash to his account. Tilton's denial of the charge of blackmailing is couched in these words:

"I have pride enough to say that, were I clothed in the rags of beggary and perishing with hunger, I would not accept a penny from Mr. Beecher for food or raiment. Had I known of this man's surreptitious gift to the Golden Age, I would have returned it to him, saying, 'Thy money perish with thee!'"

A visit from Mr. Kinsella, editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, is described by Tilton, in which the following language is attributed to Mr. Kinsella—the interview having occurred a few days previous to the reading of Tilton's sworn statement to the committee:

"Mr. Tilton, I know the justice of your case; Mr. Beecher has himself admitted to me his guilt; he has wronged you most foully; I acknowledge it all. But remember that he is an old man; his career is nearly ended, and yours has only just begun. If you will withhold your forthcoming statement, and spare this old man the blow which you are about to strike him, I will see that you and your family shall never want for anything in the world."

This proposition was politely declined by Tilton.

The remainder of this statement is devoted to Tilton's magnanimity in condoning his wife's grievous sin, and Beecher's selfishness in sacrificing every one so that he might be shielded, and concludes as follows: "No regret beclouds my mind for this forgiveness of my wife—which, I am sure, I shall look back to from my dying bed with pleasure, not with pain. I forgave this gentle woman because I loved her; I forgave her for her children's sake; I forgave her because I despise the public sentiment which condones such faults in men, and then compel omen to punish them in women; I forgave her because, even after her grievous error, she still remained a woman, loving right rather than wrong, and seeking good rather than evil; I forgave her because I tenderly remembered that Christ Himself forgave a similar fault in a more wicked woman—and who was I to scorn the law of His great example? No criticism of my forgiveness of Mrs. Tilton can prick me with any pang. If all the acts of my life had been as righteous as this good deed of charity—albeit toward a woman who has since but poorly requited me for it—I would now be a better man than I am."

Young Men in Cities.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago has issued the following circular:

"City life holds out attractions which continually draw young men from their rural homes into our large cities, where the enemy of souls is ever on the alert to allure them into sin by the multitudinous devices and agencies which abound in the city, and which are not suspected by the unsophistocated until too late. We desire to save all such from ruin, and, in the furtherance of this object, wish to call the attention of clergymen, parents and friends to our rooms and the privileges which can be secured to young men, strangers, coming to our city, that they may have letters of introduction to us. To become acquainted with proper associates and mingle in good society upon their first arrival in the city, is a matter often of vital importance. We are prepared to introduce all young men into any church of the denomination which they have been accustomed to attend, where they will be at home at once and under good influences. Our association is as a vestibule to the church, to receive and distribute the strangers that come into our midst, and we shall be pleased to meet every young man that enters our city as a stranger. Our reading rooms are at No. 148 Madison street, near LaSalle, open every day from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m., having the principal papers and magazines on file, and a well-selected library of 2,500 volumes.

"Young men wishing to spend their evenings pleasantly as well as profitably, are invited to the Lyceum for debates, music, readings, etc., every alternate Tuesday evening.

"Our Employment Bureau is at No. 145 Fifth avenue. We would, however, suggest to young men not to come to Chicago for work, as there are at the pesent time thousands of persons without employment. But our latch-string is always out to all strangers visiting the city, and we cordially invite them to call."

The Austrian Polar Expedition.

According to accounts in the late London journals, the Austrian North Pole expedition was frozen in at the north point of Nova Zembla, in August, 1872, and was driven in a northwesterly direction with the ice. The crew worked five months in vain, during the summer of 1873, to free the ship. In the autumn of that year, north of the 80th degree of latitude, unknown land was discovered, whose boundary-line north and west was not to be seen. A thin line was explored, in sledges, from the 9th of March to the 4th of May, 1874, up to the 83d degree. In honor of the Emperor of Austria, this was named Franz Joseph Land. There were no signs of animal life. On the 25th of May, 1874, the crew left the ship Tegethoff, in four sledges, and after traveling ninety-six days, reached Nova Zembla, where they met with some Russian seamen and were taken to Wardoe, in Norway, after undergoing indescribable suffering and privations.

FARM AND HOME.

Canada Thistles.

It is a good plan to apply salt to Canada thistles growing in pastures. The thistles should be cut in time to prevent seeding. All the salt allowed to the stock in the pastures should be placed on the thistles—a small handful to each. Sheep thus tempted will entirely destroy the weeds.—Rochester Democrat.

A Good Whitewash.

To make whitewash that will not wash off by the rain: One peck of lime should be slacked in five gallons of water, in which one pound of rice has been boiled until it is all dissolved. The rice water should be covered up closely until the lime is slacked. Then a pound of salt should be added, and the wash heated to boiling when used.

Fattening Hogs.

Hogs intended for fattening should be pushed now. A pound of corn now will lay on more fat than a pound and a half in cold weather. Besides, early pork pays better usually than that made in winter. The butchers want light pigs, and will pay fairly for them. Give the swine plenty of water and shade, but not much range.

Hops.

In Sweden a strong cloth is manufactured from hop stalks. The stalks are gathered in autumn, and soaked in water during the whole winter. The material is then dried in an oven and woven as flax. The buds or hops can be used as an esculent, and when boiled will do as a substitute for asparagus. The tendrils, when young, may be used in the same way.

A Farmer's Experience.

That success of farming is experience.

That to ask a man's advice is not stooping, but often of much benefit.

That to keep a place for everything, and everything in its place, saves many a step, and is pretty sure to lead to good tools, and to keep them in good order.

That it is a good thing to grow into farming and not jump into it.

That kindness to stock, like good shelter, is a saving of fodder.

That by making home pleasant you keep your boys out of the city.

That to fight weeds is to favor grain, and to do justice to your neighbors.

That it is a good thing to keep an eye open to experiments, and note all both good and bad.

That it is a good, paying thing to take papers, keep posted, and be sociable with the neighbors.

Horses at Rest.

There is no reason for anxiety from the fact that a horse does not lie down when he sleeps. It is natural to many horses to sleep on their feet, and no doubt it is a good thing that they can do so. A hard worked horse can catch many a nap while stopping for a short rest, if he is not dependent upon lying down. Nevertheless, it is good for a horse to lie down at night, and there is no better way of inducing him to do so than to give him a clean, dry bed in a roomy stall. A horse that has ever lain down in a narrow stall, and had trouble in getting up, will surely, if he is an intelligent animal, be cautious about subjecting himself to like embarrassment a second time. A change of stall, too, is very likely to effect a change in habit, especially if any accident has happened to him in his old stall.

Sowing Plaster.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: Recently I saw a plan of sowing this fertilizer, new to me, that was efficient and very expeditious. Several bushels were placed in the rear end of a wagon box; the sower sitting on a stool or what is easier, placing his knees in the plaster, and facing the rear end of the box. As the team moves along, about ten feet from the fence, the sower fills his right hand with plaster, throws it quickly to the left; as the body moves to the right, fills the left hand with plaster and hurls it to the right, and continues thus alternately. An active boy can by this plan sow more plaster in a half day than two strong men, and with a few moments' practice sow it equally as even. If the ground is quite hard it will answer to sow plaster in this way on spring sown grain; but it is especially recommended for clover ground. A strip of twenty feet in width is sown at each passage across the field in any direction, so that the dust may not fly on the horses; the wagon tracks being a sufficient guide for the return trip.

Pastures.

One of the great advantages of natural pastures is, there are varieties following each other, so that there is always a profusion of young and tempting herbage for all kinds of animals; then another great desideratum is gained by a crop always sure without any plowing or cultivation, or seed; and this saving of labor and wearing of implements is important in this country of dear manual help. America might be a very great sheep country, and instead of buying wool might sell it to bring in more than all the corn does, and it is positively certain, if half the land now in cultivation was put into grass, and brought up to a proper state of fertility, and the half of all new land was held inviolable, the moiety which was under cultivation for the growth of corn and grain would produce more than double per acre on account of the more careful working of the soil and the increased quantity of manure obtainable through the keeping of so much more live stock; for when pastures and mowings have become once established on good fertile ground, it is a wonderful assistance to the arable land to have an equal quantity of grass land on the farm.—Rochester Democrat.

A Cheap Cellar Bottom.

In sections of the country where there is an abundance of cobble-stones, collect a few loads of them about four or five inches in diameter, grade the bottom of the cellar, lay the cobbles in rows, and ram them down one-third their thickness into the ground, so that they will not rock nor be sunk below the line of the rows by any heavy superincumbent pressure, such as the weight of a hogshead of molasses or a tierce of vinegar. The bottom of the cellar should be graded so that the outside will be at least two inches lower than the middle. A mistake sometimes occurs by grading the cellar bottom in such a manner that the center will be two or three inches lower than the outside. When this is the case, should water enter from the outside it will flow directly toward the middle. A straight-edged board should be placed frequently on each row of stones as they are being rammed, so that the upper sides may be in line with each other. After the stones are laid and well rammed down, place a few boards on the pavement to walk on; then make a grouting of clean sand and water-lime or Rosendale cement; and pour it on the stones until the interstices are filled. As soon as the grouting has set spread a layer of good cement mortar one inch thick over the top of the pavement, and trowel the surface off smoothly. In order to spread the mortar true and even on the surface, lay an inch board one foot from the wall on the surface of the pavement, stand on the board, and fill the space with mortar even with the top of the board; after which move the board one foot; fill the space with mortar and trowel it off smoothly. Such a floor will cost less than a board floor, and will endure as long as the superstructure is kept in repair.

A floor built in the foregoing manner on the ground in the basement of a barn, a piggery or stable, would be rat-proof, and would be cheaper and more serviceable than a plank floor. The work should be done in the former part of the growing season, so that the cement may have sufficient time to become dry and hard before cold weather.—Selected.

Domestic Recipes.

GOOSEBERRIES and raspberries in conjunction make an estimable jam.

MOLDINESS.—Preserves and jellies may be kept from moldiness by covering the surface with pulverized loaf sugar; thus protected they will keep for years.—Detroit Press.

A BUTTER stamp should always be washed in cold salt water before it is used. If soaked in hot water the butter will stick to it, but never if soaked in cold brine. The salt absorbed keeps it moist while in use.

CATSKILL APPLE PUDDING.—One pint sweet milk, four eggs beaten to a froth, one teaspoonful soda, a little salt, flour enough to make a stiff batter, four large apples, chopped; mix well, or, rather, stir; bake in deep tins; serve hot, with butter or sugar or sweetened cream.

JELLY ROLLS.—Take three eggs, one-half cup of sugar, a cup of flour, a teaspoonful of soda, or, in lieu of the soda and cream of tartar, a teaspoonful and a half of baking powder; bake in thin cakes; spread with jelly, and roll up with the jelly side in; cut in slices across the roll.—Country Gent.

APPLE PUDDING WITHOUT PASTRY.—Pare and cut up enough apples to weigh two pounds. Boil them and rub through a colander. Add a large spoonful of butter while they are hot, and when cold add half a pound of crushed white sugar, six well-beaten eggs, and the grated rind of a lemon. Pour the mixture into a deep dish and bake for half an hour.

NON-POISONOUS FLY PAPER.—Put one pound quassia wood in five pounds water and let stand over night in a warm place. The decoction is then boiled down to about two pounds. The wood is afterward put in two pounds fresh water and boiled down to one pound. The two decoctions are mixed, one-half to three-fourths pound sugar added and paper passed through it, drained and hung on lines to dry. Ordinary unsized blotting paper is usually employed, and may have something printed on it before saturation with the quassia solution.

COCOANUT CRACKNELS.—To a quart, good oatmeal, medium grade (that usually known as Scotch oatmeal), add a spoonful of sugar and 4 of desiccated cocoanut, or 6 of freshly-grated cocoanut. Then add 3½ gills of boiling water, or what will barely wet it, so that it can be rolled out. Flour the board well and roll to about one-fifth of an inch thick, cut out with a cake cutter, stick a currant in the center of each, and bake in a moderate oven about 20 minutes, or until they will break readily between the thumb and fingers. Watch them closely, that they do not brown. Serve them as cake.

TO PRESERVE GRAPES.—First, pick off all unsound or unripe ones, and lay the clusters in an empty room on papers until dry, for in all packages some will be crushed and dampen others. Then any empty crate will do to pack them in. First a layer of grapes, then a thickness of paper, so as to exclude air and keep them separate, then grapes and then paper, and so no until you have three or four layers—no more than four. If the box is to hold more, put in a partition to support the others that are to be packed. We packed hundreds of pounds thus last year, and they kept perfectly until the middle of March, and, had the supply not been exhausted, they could have been kept much longer.—Cor. New York Tribune.

Swearing at Large.

A late Duke of Athol had invited a well-known character, a writer of Perth, to come up and meet him at Dunkeld for the transaction of some business. The Duke mentioned the day and hour when he should receive the man of law, who accordingly came punctually to the appointment and place. But the Duke had forgotten the appointment, and gone to the hill, from which he could not return for some hours. A Highlander present described the Perth writer's indignation, and his mode of showing it by a most elaborate course of swearing. "But whom did he swear at?" was the inquiry made of the narrator, who replied, "O, he didna sweer at ony thing particular, but juist stude in ta middle of ta road and swoor at lairge."

Crop Movements and Hard Times.

Out of the gloom and shadow which settled upon the business of the country like a great pall a year ago, we are surely, if slowly, emerging into a brighter light and more cheerful prospects. It is to be regretted, however, that the lessons so harshly learned during the past twelve months should in so many important respects be either forgotten or misapplied. And in no instance is this to be more earnestly depreciated than in the present attitude of the farmers West toward the markets. Whether the result of granger advice or influence or simply the consequence of individual lack of forethought, it involves a fatal error, both of judgment and action, the full effect of which can scarcely be estimated. It is a violation of all the laws of trade as well as of natural instinct. Providence in its beneficence having seen fit to compensate us for our losses of last year by an abundant harvest, we recklessly and ungratefully throw the gift in His face by refusing to market it. This, not to put too fine a point upon it, is what the Western farmers, who are holding back their grain to-day for higher prices, are doing. And stupidly, too. As stupidly as the cheap economic philosophers who at one time were so urgent with their advice to the South to plant cotton short, so as to advance the price. We know what happened when the crop was necessarily short. Our farmers now invite similar consequences in respect to grain. They virtually abandon the Liverpool market to Russia, France, Hungary and the other grain-producing districts of Europe, where the harvest has been as abundant as our own, and with the provincial purpose, narrow alike in conception as in the means of carrying it out, of endeavoring to regulate the price in Chicago abandon to rival traders the higher market, which rules Chicago as readily as it rules London or Manchester. It is, of course, annoying to the toiling farmer that he should be cheated of a full price for his wheat by the idle speculator, but he cannot remedy that state of things by holding back his produce; he simply loses his market altogether.

Grain should be going forward freely at the present time, while the canals are open and ocean freights exceptionally low. Even if the farmer does not get the price he expected, the cheap transportation tells in his favor; but, to sacrifice the opportunity thus afforded to occupy the Liverpool market, while it is still open, for the trivial satisfaction of cornering the Chicago speculator, is suicidal. It is to be borne in mind, however, that it is only in respect to wheat that we have this great abundance. Corn, oats and barley are deficient—the former, in fact, being so much so as to seriously affect pork, farmers being unable to afford feeding it to their hogs.—New York Herald, Sept. 14.

The Scientific Frog.

A discontented and curious frog seeing a couple of men sitting under the shadow of a tree by the side of a stream of water, and engaged in conversation, hopped up to the bank, and seated himself before them to learn something from their conversation.

One of them was a scientific quack, and was just now warmly advocating "the development hypothesis."

"We know nothing of God," says he; "this stream flows on because water runs down hill; the wind blows because nature makes it blow; the sun shines and the plants grow, all as the result of law. Who sees any design in it? A man is a fool to believe what he cannot see. What are we men? Only higher developments of some lower animals, such as fishes and frogs!"

And then the men departed. Thenceforth the frog was a philosopher. He held up his head with pride, and endeavored to hop only on his hind legs. He was not particularly proud of his ancestry, but entertained great expectations of his numerous family pollywogs. One of them at least he hoped would develop into a little man.

After this he determined to travel and enrich his mind by observation.

The first place visited was a saw-mill, of which he had often heard his father speak. He seated himself upon a log with his back toward a large revolving saw and began to soliloquize.

"Now the saw-mill," said he, "my father told me, was designed by a higher power for the purpose of making boards. Nonsense! There is no such thing as design. The mill made itself. It was developed by nature and law. How foolish to believe in what you cannot see!"

In the meantime the miller let on the water, and the log began to glide smoothly and the saw to revolve, and while the frog was absorbed in meditation the saw reached him, and presto! he was cut asunder, and that was the end of his travels and philosophy.

Moral: It is not well for frogs or men to know too much, for excess of knowledge and stupidity are sometimes the same thing.—Dr. E. O. Haven.

Who Not to Marry.

Don't marry a man who wears an eye-glass, or tight boots with high heels, who curls his hair or his mustache, who puts scent in his whiskers, or bleaches his eyelids, who lisps, who has his finger-nails long and pointed, carefully cut in an almond shape, who wears four button gloves, takes six and three-quarters and tells you so, who, if he be dark, wears a red cravat, if he be fair, a sky blue one—there is no surer indication of a man's character than his necktie; I always look at that first—who has enameled visiting cards and a brilliant monogram, and who always wears a rosebud in his buttonhole.

Don't marry a man who keeps bull-dogs. He is sure to be like them.

Don't marry a man who gets up early. Nothing makes a person so insufferably conceited.

Don't marry a man whom nobody ever says any evil of. Be sure that he is a poor creature.

Don't marry a good-natured man. Good nature is to a man what the gilt-leaf naughty boys sometimes adorn a sparrow with is to that unhappy bird. All the other sparrows get around him and peck at him.

Having, Doing and Being.

In every society there are those who derive their chief characteristic from what they have, who are always spoken of in terms of reverence; and of whom you would not be likely to think much, but for the large account that stands on the world's ledger in their name. The second and nobler class prove themselves to be here, not that they may have, but that they may do; to them life is a glorious labor; they are seen not to work that they may rest, but only to rest that they may work. No sooner do they look around them, with the open eye of reason and faith, upon the great field of the world, than they perceive that it must be for them a battle-field; and they break up the tents of ease, and advance to the dangers of lonely enterprise, and the conflict with splendid wrong. But there is a life higher than either of these. The saintly is beyond the heroic mind. To get good is animal; to do good is human; to be good is divine. The true use of a man's possession is to help his work; and the best end of all his work is to show what he is. The noblest workers of our world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves. Their task, be it ever so glorious, is historical and transient; the majesty of their spirit is essential and eternal. While to some God gives it to show themselves through their work, to others he assigns it to show themselves without even the opportunity of work. He sends them transparent into the world; and leaves us nothing to gather and inter.—Martineau.

"Is Not the Act Justifiable?"

[From the New York Sun.]

The people of Louisiana, defrauded, plundered, trampled on, stripped of their property by unrelieved villainy in power, having usurpers installed in office over them by judicial corruption backed by President Grant's bayonets, and having seen all hope of redress taken away by the refusal of Grant to interfere in their behalf, and by these usurping authorities through election ordinances and appointments that render a fair election absolutely impossible—being thus driven to desperation by public plunder, and by the closing of every channel of relief, have at last adopted the desperate resolution of rising in arms against their usurpers and tyrants.

Is not this act justifiable? No man can study the facts and recall the history of the last few years without admitting that if ever any people had good reason for this last dread resort, it is the people of Louisiana. If insurrection can be justified under any circumstances whatever, it is right and just in their case. No body of men ever had greater provocation or a more perfect cause for such action; and never, from the beginning of civilization to the present day, was any Commonwealth subjected to wrong and outrage by a more contemptible set of miscreants than those land-pirates of Louisiana. But for the brutal, law-defying assistance of Grant's soldiery, these wretches could never have got into power; and their victims, seeing themselves despoiled not only of their possessions—the best property in New Orleans will not rent for enough to pay the taxes—but of every political right and personal chance of good, and having nothing more to lose except life itself, may well choose to perish in a last sharp contest, rather than to struggle on in the misery and despair which their oppressors alone offer them.

It is certain that this rising would be speedily successful, and would result in the wholesale expulsion of the usurpers and robbed beyond the boundaries of Louisiana, but for the new intervention of Federal troops, which of course will not be delayed. Grant is under a fatal necessity. Having begun this business of putting down a rightfully-elected State government and installing in its place one that the people had repudiated, he has no alternative, but must go on and maintain the counterfeit, fraudulent authority which he has instituted.

The people of Louisiana will, therefore, be subjugated anew. Some of them will be killed; many homes will be ravaged, and the horrors of war will be felt again in that wretched and desolate region. But even in this they will gain something. Those who die will be better off in the grave; and those who live will at least be the captives of the Federal army, and will thus for a time be relieved from the malignity of their local banditti. Indeed, this is apparently what they most earnestly wish for. They pray to see the false State government utterly swept away, and Louisiana once more put under the dictatorship of some decent army officer. In their view, the iron hand of military rule is better than the lawless despotism and unrestricted confiscation of Casey, Kellogg, Durell, and their confederates; and no thoughtful observer can deny that this is a reasonable conclusion and desire.

And such is the result of nine years of reconstruction and six years of Grantism! This is the sort of peace which the country receives from a military President who annuls a popular election, and overthrows a State government in order to take the electoral votes of the State for himself, while he maintains his brother-in-law in power to plunder, and assures to an incomparable gang of robbers the prolonged opportunity of unlimited booty! And yet there are those who still prate about moral ideas in the Grant party, and who fondly imagine that the American people will suffer such a state of things to be indefinitely continued.

Defrauding Life Insurance Companies.

The Cincinnati Commercial has been hunting up frauds in life insurance business, and in the course of its investigation has unearthed a conspiracy for defrauding insurance companies widely extended and carefully organized. It is composed mainly of confidential agents of companies and their tools. The method employed is to procure a policy in the name of a third party, who is kept in ignorance of the fact, and collect the insurance at his death. Being in the ring, the agents have no trouble in obtaining certificates of death satisfactory to themselves, and are enabled to make money with great rapidity. One Cincinnatian returned to his native city from St. Louis a few months ago to learn that his death had been widely circulated, a report having been set afloat that he was frowned in the Mississippi. He afterward learned that his life was insured; that his wife had been influenced by one of the conspirators to procure a policy; and that this money had actually been collected, his wife getting a small share commensurate with her connection with the fraud. Other cases have come to light in which healthy persons were insured through agents, in the name of confirmed invalids, while a hint is thrown out of murder by the ring. It would be interesting to policy-holders to know precisely what allowance is made by the companies for loss by fraud in estimating rates of insurance.

OPPRESSIVE BRILLIANCY.—"Madame Podsnap," says the Saratoga correspondent of the Washington Capital, "descends to breakfast with the diamonds good society countenances in those who owned gems before the days of shoddy, sparkling as solitaires in her ears, and representing $5,000 on her fingers, and beneath her heavy silk, of a shade dark enough for winter wear, is concealed a small fortune, say $50,000 worth of diamonds in a muslin bag. She dare not leave them in her room, of course, and cannot put them in the hotel safe without giving up the pleasure of wearing them each evening, so she conceals them until evening, when she displays them every one; and she sleeps with them beneath the mattress. So she is doomed to diamonds for constant companions. It is well. It is the only brilliancy she understands."

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

A Heart-Sickening Horror in Fall River, Mass.—A Cotton Mill Burned, with a Large Number of Operatives—Particulars of the Disaster.

One of the most appalling catastrophes of recent occurrence took place at Fall River, Mass., on the 19th of September. Shortly after the operatives had gone to work in one of the cotton mills there the alarm of fire was given, and the mill was discovered to be on fire in one of the upper stories. So rapidly did the flames spread that several hundred operatives were hemmed in before they had time to escape. Some managed to escape by leaping from windows, and others by climbing on the roofs of adjoining buildings but notwithstanding that every effort was made about twenty, mostly girls, were burned to death or suffocated. The following account of the heartrending disaster is furnished by the Western Associated Press:

Mills Nos. 1 and 2, of the Granite Works, had been running about twenty minutes when the operatives in No. 1 were startled with a cry of fire and the escape of smoke from the fourth story. In this, next to the upper floor, was the mule-warp spinning department, and there were nearly 100 girls at work under a male overseer. On the upper floor, the fifth, about thirty girls were employed, spooling and warping cotton. These were the youngest of the operatives. With the alarm the flames seemed to leap to this attic, coming from the windows below and up the great tower in the center of the building, in which were all the stairs communicating with each story. The fire caught in the mule spinning-room, in the northwest end of the mill, from friction in a mule-head, and spreading, by means of oil on the floor and about the machinery, with great quickness, rushed toward the center tower, the only means of escape for those in the fourth and fifth stories, besides four fire-escapes, two on each gable-end. Once getting into the tower, the flames ran up to and through the single entrance to the fifth story, then springing to the roof timbers, filled the two great rooms, 450x90 feet, with dense black smoke and flame. While the flames were making such terrible headway, the operatives became fairly wild. The overseers saw there was no way possible to check the fire, and gave their sole attention to those whom they had at work. They called to them to save themselves, and pointed out ways of escape, principally fire-ladders. The overseer of the spooling-room, who remained till nearly suffocated, states that the scene in his room—and it must have been worse in the room below—cannot be depicted. Children ran about crying and begging piteously to be saved, yet wrenching themselves away when taken forcibly to the tower while yet there was some chance, or to the iron ladder that reached two of the scuttle windows of the south end, opening upon the roof of the balcony at the head of the Twelfth street fire-ladders. It was impossible to get the great majority to take this method to save their lives. Some wanted clothing, others something else. As the fire frightened them away from these ladders they rushed to the windows at the south gable end, nearly sixty feet from the ground, but dared not jump down. Cotton ropes were put out for them to slide down by, but no sooner would a rope be lowered than there was a rush for it from below. Too many would take hold, when it would break, and all clinging to it would come down in a bunch. Similar scenes were going on in the mule spinning-room. The flames had ascended rapidly to the entrance of the tower on the fourth floor, cutting off their means of escape, but the operatives had two ladders of the south gable directly before them, and were urged by the overseers and citizens below to take them. Some did, but others rushed headlong upon the balcony and dropped or threw themselves from the guards. There was ample time for every one to have been saved had the girls taken the course directed.

The Superintendent, as soon as the alarm was given, rushed to the upper story, and, with the overseers, did all possible to save life. When the means provided for escape in the mill were rendered unavailable by heat, flames, and smoke, the people procured beds and mattresses for the poor unfortunates to jump upon, any many did throw themselves from windows to, in almost every case, receive fatal or terrible injuries.

The firemen worked to keep the flames out of the south end, whither many operatives had fled. Ladders, long as at command, were used to rescue the girls, and it is said that four firemen lost their lives while thus engaged. One fireman was lowered from the roof by brother firemen into the building, and remained so long trying to drive girls forth that he had to be let go by those who held his rope, driven away by the smoke, and he was lost. Morgues and hospitals were speedily improvised, the Mission Chapel being taken for the latter, and as fast as the girls could be picked from under the windows of the mill, stretchers were ready to carry them to either Chapel or Central Station. At the latter place twenty-five bodies were lying, and other unfortunates had been taken to stations or to homes. In a number of instances bodies could not be recognized—they were so disfigured, begrimed and dirt-covered. In Mission Chapel were many of the wounded, whose sufferings were intense.

The Granite Mills were incorporated in 1863 with a capital of $4,000,000, and employed about 440 males and females in this—No. 1—mill. Insurance, $450,000; distributed among Boston, Providence and other Eastern companies. The insurance agents estimate the loss at 60 per cent. of the amount, and that the value of the portion of the mill not burnt is $150,000.

Latest dispatches place the total of killed at 20; wounded, 36, of which number 2 are fatally injured, and 21 will recover; missing, 3.

A Feat of Memory.

The Scotsman says: "On the occasion of Prof. Fawcett's speech at Brighton, the other day, the report of which occupied more than two columns of the Scotsman, a curious instance was afforded of memory such as is not often equaled. A gentleman who went down to Brighton in order to report the speech for fourteen newspapers called upon the Professor some time before its delivery, and, explaining the nature of his business, requested the favor of a statement of the principal points of his speech. Prof. Fawcett very courteously proposed not only to give him the substance of his speech, but to rehearse the whole of it for him. This he did, and the reporter took it down. Later on, while the speech proper was being delivered, the original copy made at the rehearsal was checked over word for word and from beginning to end. So perfectly had the speech been committed to memory, there was not one single mistake, except that in one place a word was substituted for its equivalent in the notes."

THE project to construct a tunnel between France and England is assuming a practical phase. The capitalists and engineers embarked in this gigantic enterprise demand a concession of thirty years instead of the ninety-nine usually accorded to railway companies, and ask for neither guarantee nor grant. Further, they are ready to advance a sum of $4,000,000 for preliminary investigations. The project in question consists in the immerging of a duct on the English and French coasts, and the boring of two long galleries from each side. Of the result of the enterprise, says the Journal de Calais, there can be no doubt.

IT is with little-souled people as it is with narrow-necked bottles—the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out.

New Outlet to the East.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is building a road through to Chicago, and will soon have it completed and trains running. It runs parallel with and alongside of the Michigan Southern road some thirty miles out of Chicago and around the heal of the lake, thence it strikes off and pursues a course as far east as Defiance Ohio, midway between the Michigan Southern and Pittsburg & Fort Wayne roads and thence southeasterly to the Ohio river, where it connects with the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio road, striking some of the wealthiest towns in I[illegible] curves and lightest grades known in this country. The line of the road traverses the system of north and south lines converging toward Lake Erie, and makes no less than thirteen connections with the most important of these lines. At Tiffin it connects with the Cincinnati Sandusky & Cleveland and Mansfield & Lake Michigan railroads; at Deshler with the Cincinnati Hamilton & Dayton; at Defience with the Ohio State Canal, and the Toledo Wabase & Western railroad, which drains all Southern Illinois and extends into Missouri and Kansas, operating in all over 1,200 miles of road.—In connection with it the road offers a line from Toledo to Chicago, 13 miles shorter than the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, or any line in operation. By means of the road named the company obtained the advantage of having no less than three competing lines to Toledo, thus securing at all times the lowest comparitive rates. It promises to be one of the most useful, as it will be one of the best conducted roads east from Chicago.—Dubuque Herald.

The events which has transpired in New Orleans during the past few days are only the sequel to the disgraceful scenes lately enacted in Arkanses that we could have expected. To one who can look upon the two scenes impassively, without any bias one way or the other, they offer much food for reflection. Between the two cases there is a wide difference. On one hand the party in power were opposed to the president, and when arms were restored to by the citizens of Little Rock, the State officers ousted and those favorable to the administration place in power, he as the executing head of this grand and glorious republic, accepted what had been done, virtually approved of mob rule.

On the other hand the Louisiana, the party in power was his own, the State officials has political children who had been placed in authority by fraud and corruption, against which the best citizens of the State have long and vainly lifted up their voices. The wonder is that they have borne their burden so long, not that they have at length risen up against their oppressers.

We do not mean to defend their action. Far from it. They were in the wrong, and should receive the condemnation of all good citizens, for they had a tribunal so which they could have appealed. Who can deny that in this country which is so truly great, there is no place where right must not triumph over wrong? But while we must ever condemn such an action as was witnessed in New Orleans a few days since, we must look with grave suspicion upon a man who would allow mob law to rule when it suited him politically; but when precisely the same thing is re-enacted, with the differepce that his political friends have been thwarted in their designs, he awakes from his long siesta at Long Branch, waxes indignant, and hurls anathemas at the "rebls," as he chooses to term them. It would be well for Mr. President if the precedent laid down by his action during the Arkansas riot could be forgotten, but just now it is fresh in our memory.—Fort Wayne News.

STATE FINANCES.

Democratic and Republican Administrations Compared.

The Slanders of the Journal and News Refuted.

Two Years of Economy and one Year of Extravagance--The Question Settled.

Editor of the Sentinel:—I find a lengthy criticism in last evening's News on a conversation had with me, and published by a correspondent in the Cincinnati Enquirer a short time ago. The News states that I forgot several things and intimates very strongly that I lied. It would take too much time and space to notice each item that the News charges me with forgetting, therefore I will simply answer by stating I forgot nothing, but had each and every item in my mind's eye when I gave the amount, and now only repeat them by sending to the Sentinel the figures for 1871 1872 and 1873, giving credit for all debts paid and school distribution for each year.

There is one thing which the News seems to forget, or perhaps does not know: that some little matters that were not put in legal shape by the legislature of 1871, were caused by its Republican friends in that body resigning their places, running away from their own sworn duty, and breaking a quorum, thereby stopping all legislation. Does the News recollect that transaction? I will state further that the legislature of 1871 left no part of of their expenses unpaid, save and except the specific appropriation bil., which was not a large amount, and which would have been paid had the republican members not broken the quorum. The expense of the legislature only embraces the pay and mileage of members and the salary of clerks, doorkeepers and firemakers.—No specific bill is ever added in the legislature account.

I would also inform the News that the $603,000 sinking fund money which was to come into the treasury in June and October, 1871, was arranged to be transferred to the general fund by the assembly. A bill was introduced by Mr. Neff, of Putnam county, for that purpose, which unanimously passed the House, but before the Senate had time to put it on its final passage the friends of the editor of the News ran away bolted, thus preventing legislation of all kinds. Still our republican friends will assert that the democrats in the assembly of 1871 were the cause of the failure in legislation that year.

I would ask the News further, why did not the republican legislatures of 1865, 1867 or 1869 provide for paying the canal bonds? Their legislatures were petitioned by the bondholders for payment; why did they not pay? Simply because the republican party had said they would not pay them; yet in 1873 they charged their minds—just after the election, though. Were the members sued?

In the following statement I placed all the improvements which take place yearly in any of the public institutions as a part of the expenses. There are various small accounts which run the same, one year with another, so I do not bring them into the credit on either side. I send you a correct table for the year 1871, 1872 and 1873. These figures, I know are not pleasant reading for the editor of the News, who has become so loyal in the past month or two. His paper does not read like the News of 1872, still I like it, but it must not hint that I lied when I only copy from the records.—Good-natured as I am I can't stand that, so I send the figures, and they don't lie in this case.

I will state I do not hold the present State officers responsible for any of this increase of expenses. they are honest men, but the News will excuse me if I do repeat that the legislature of 1873 was the most expensive we have had for years. Now for the figures:

Total disbursement for 1871	$2,043,600 85
Total credits including school distribution, debt interest and refunded revenue	$2,000,456 22
Net expences including legislature	$853,144 33

Total expenditures	$2,687,201 85
Total credit including school distribution, interest, etc	$2,040,395 47,
Net expenses for 1872 no legislature	$646,806 38

1873
Total expenditures	$4,123,789 05
Total debt, interest, school distribution etc	$2,696,454 33
Net expense including legislature	$1,427,334 72

RECAPITULATION.

1871 cost the State	$853 144 33
1872 cost the State	646,806 38
1873 cost the State	1,427,334 72

In other words, 1873 cost $574,190-39 more than in 1871—both legislative years—and $780,528 34 more than the preceding year of 1872.

I might deduct the college funds, swamp lands and other small accounts but it would show the same result. As I have said before, they are about the same thing all the time.

Compare the figures carefully, hunt the expense accounts of both parties, and I will abide the examination of all citizens.

Since my statement has been disputed by a respectable paper and to certain extent in a disrespectful manner, I must ask the Democratic, Liberal and Independent papers of the State to publish this statement and oblige their fellow citizen.

JAS B. RYAN.

Indianapolis, Sept. 8, 1874.

The Louisiana Muddle.

Senator Pinchback, the colored Republican United States Senator from Louisiana, in a Republican Caucus Convention held in New Orleans in August attacked Gov. Kellogg's administration in the following strong language;

I tell Gov. Kellogg, however, I am on the war-path, and be I admitted as Senator or not, I hold in my hands his gubernatorial crown, for if ever I open my mouth under oath, to Congress and the country and tell them how this Durell, Packard, and Norton conspiracy supported by such men as Carter, Billings, and others, who were present during all the arrangements for the conspiracy, this King William, the promister in the momentous issue of the coming presidental campaign will have to go under for the Republican party can't survive the moral indignation of this country if ever the true history of this Louisiana usurpation is made known.

Since Senator Pinchback has uttered these remarkable words the wretched people of New Orleans have broken out in riotous demonstration against the Kellogg usurpation. And, apropos to this Louisiana usurpation, in the language of Senator Pinchback, we reproduce the following from the New York World.

The pathetic appeal of the people of Louisiana, to the people of the Union,—a forlornly hopeless attempt to get Philip sober enough to redress the crimes done by Philip drunk—is only paralleled by the mute wretchedness of the attitude of South Carolina whose case is even worse than that of Louisiana. The Louisana Committee had described with the simplicity of despair the circle of fire cast about their State; and through which they have been trying to break for two years. What can they do? Whither must they turn from relief? The Supreme "Court found itself without power "to remedy the wrongs perpetrated "by the Federal District Jude of "Louisiana. The executive remitted "them to Congress, overwhelmingly "Republican in both branches while "recognizing the wrongs complained "of, signalized itself by a masterly "inactivity the real purpose of which "was to leave the Kellogg usurpation "in power. The only means left to "Louisiana to redeem herself from the usurpation is by participating in an election held under a very auspices of the usurper himself, armed with special enactments of his spurious Legislature to secure his retention in power and with other and appropriate acts to be signed and promulgated by himself according to circumstances.

In the late Democratic Convention at Syracuse, New York, among the delegates was De Witt C. Littlejohn, of Oswego County, who was seven times elected by the Republican party as Speaker of the House of Assembly and who was also chosen by it to the Congress of the United States Senate. He was there he said, to help break the power of the Republican party, which had been recreant to the trusts of the people. He wanted a movement sent on foot which would result in 1876 in hurling from power that tyrant, Ulysses S. Grant. The Liberal Republican of the Empire State, of whom Mr. Littlejohn is the representative, are now with the Democratic organization.

A pair of drawers—A brace of mosquitoes.

Birch-bark—The cry of a whipped school boy.

The cause of woman sufforge—Scarcity of husbands.

Keep it Before the People.

That the working class are burdened with taxes to fill the coffer of Radical thieves in high places.

Keep it before the people that the Republican party favors such legislation always as will aid the bond holder and oppress the laboring man.

Keep it before the people that the Radical party is working for a centralized government and an aristocracy to grind down the working class of the country.

Keep it before the people that Federal bayonets are kept in the South to perpetuate the Republican party.

Keep it before the people that carpet-bagging rascals are foisted upon the Southern States by United States soldiers and kept there by a drunken corrupt President,

Keep it before the people that while the industries of the country are prostrated and poor men starving a corrupt President draws his $10,000 for two months loafing at Long Branch.

Keep it before the people that Republicans re-nominated their salary grabbing Congressmen.

Keep it before the people that although the war was closed nine years ago the public debt is nearly as large as in 1865, and that the Republican leeches all over the country have stolen the money paid by the people to redeem the debt.

Keep the frauds of the republican party before the people, and turn out on the 13th of October and put the seal of condemnation upon the Radical party that protects Radical scoundrels.

Why Penn Ousted Kellogg.

Some of the reasons why Penn was able to oust Kellogg with the aid and consent of almost all the people of Louisiana, may thus be condensed:

In January, 1873, Grant said in a message to Congress, that—

Recent investigation into said election had developed so many frauds and forgeries as to make it doubtful what candidates had received a majortiy of the votes.

So Grant at that time did not look upon Kellogg as entitled to hold the office of Governor.

The Congressional Committee (Radical) soon after this report that—

Considering all the facts established there seems to be no escape from the alternative that the McEnery Government must be recognized, or that Congress must order a new election.

And the President besought Congress to do this thing—albeit Congress had no right to do any such thing. If Kellogg could not have counted on the help of Grant and his Radical Congress he would never have dared to contest the election.

Senator Carpenter, in his speech, and he knew what a bad man is if any man in this country knows, said that—

The Kellogg government was a fraud in its inception and a despotism in its operation—and that Kellogg has shown himself to be one of worst types of his species.

Even the New York Times says that—

The Durrell decision which aided in establishing the Kellogg government was an outrage. The taxation since 1872 has been arbitrary and oppressive. New Orleans is prostrated. Many streets are desolated.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

HENRY C. BOWEN publishes a letter in the New York Tribune, in answer to a communication from Miss Catharine E. Beecher, in which she charges that "the real originator of this (meaning the Brooklyn) scandal is the proprietor of the Independent." Bowen denies that he ever wrote to Tilton or any one a letter containing any accusations whatever against Mr. Beecher....The banking firm of Townsend & Co., of New Haven, has failed for nearly $3,000,000, and its affairs are in the hands of the Receiver. The causes of the failure is the depreciation of Southern State and railroad bonds in which the bank had invested heavily. The greatest sufferers are among the laboring classes. Rumor says the depositors will realize about 40 per cent.... Lake Weewanapee, New Jersey, has been bought by the Prussian government for $300,000. The lake will be divided into compartments, some for the raising of leeches and the remainder for trout and salmon...A dispatch from Portsmouth, N. H. says: "Sergt. James Davidson, who served over fifty years in the United States army, died at Fort Constitution on Saturday. He was the oldest enlisted man in the service, having served in the wars of Florida and Mexico with distinction. For several years he had charge of Fort Constitution."

THE boiler of a locomotive exploded at Port Jervis, N. Y., last week. The fireman, George Page, was instantly killed, and a boy, named Outwin, standing near the engine, was fatally injured. The engineer, Green, was on the ground oiling the engine, and escaped with a slight scald....The cigar-makers of New York have protested against the tenement-house system of manufacturing cigars. The workingmen are determined, if possible, to break up the system, which is endangering, they say, the health of the community.... The Grand Jury of Kings county, N. Y., has indicted Francis D. Moulton for malicious libel in connecting the name of Miss Proctor with the Beecher scandal....A Philadelphia dispatch says: "The reward of $20,000 in the Ross case is still in force, and Allan Pinkerton announces that the same will be relinquished by him and his force to the parties who shall give the information which shall lead to the recovery of the child and capture of the abductors."

THE failure of two prominent New York business houses is announced. The broken firms are Williamson, Griffith & Co., sugar refiners, and James Bishop & Co., importers and manufacturers of india-rubber....Mr. Thomas Kinsella, editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, has promised to contribute a statement to the literature of the Beecher scandal....A collision between a passenger and a gravel train on the Utica and Chenango Valley railroad, near Binghamton, N. Y., last week, resulted in the killing of three persons on the passenger train, and the serious wounding of several others.

BOOTH'S Theater, New York, will be sold under a foreclosure Nov. 5, and the friends of Edwin Booth are making efforts to have the theater remain in his hands. They state that the unsecured creditors will extend all the leniency that he may require, and if enough money can be raised to satisfy the mortgages, amounting to $300,000, the security for which is good, the affairs of Edwin Booth may be arranged....A collision on the Allegheny Valley railroad, near New Bethlehem, Pa., last week, resulted in the killing of James Esler, engineer; M. Killien, fireman, and Henry Doyle, passenger on a mail train. Several others were seriously injured.... The movement in New York for closing the stores at 3 p. m. on Saturdays, begun by the hardware dealers, is now strengthened by the accession of the manufacturers of jewelry and plated ware and the fancy goods dealers.

A NEW local insurance company, to be called the Anchor, is being organized in Chicago. The capital is to be $1,000,000.

ALL the insurance companies belonging to the National Board of Underwriters withdrew their business from Chicago on the 1st inst. This includes all the Hartford companies, with one exception. The city, however, is not left altogether without insurance. There are forty companies not in the National Board, which will continue to take risks there. The Chicago papers take a cheerful view of the situation, and express the belief that no disturbance of trade will follow the withdrawal of the board companies.... A considerable portion of the town of Chico, Cal., was destroyed by fire, recently, resulting in a loss of over $80,000. Forty-five valuable horses were burned in the stables of Shearer & Evans....A well-known frontiersman writes a letter to the Omaha Herald, in which he stoutly maintains that there is an abundance of gold in the Black Hills. He concludes by stating that it would be madness for parties to attempt to go to the new Eldorado this fall or winter, on account of the hostile Indians.

The South.

A COLLISION occurred last week on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, between Smithton and West Union, W. Va. Two passenger trains collided at that point, wrecking both engines, and the postal car attached to the west-bound train was burned. Fire being communicated from the lamps to the mail matter, the flames made such rapid progress that one of the postal clerks, named Bradford, was burned to death, and the bulk of the mail matter destroyed. The baggage car of the same train was also burned, with the greater portion of its contents. The platforms of a number of passenger cars were also demolished by the force of the collision. None of the passengers were injured.... On the morning of Sept. 24 a train of six cars on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad went through the bridge on the Waxatchina Creek, in Alabama, falling sixty feet. The engineer, fireman and several passengers were killed, and nearly all the remaining passengers were wounded, many dangerously. Among the killed is William Boyd, ex-Judge of the Supreme Court of Alabama....The Citizens' Bank of New Orleans has resumed business. ....It is reported that Judge Shackleford, a prominent lawyer of Nashville, Tenn., has received a letter from a law firm in Gainesville, Texas, stating that, about the close of the last century, one Liton Lanier killed a man at Nashville, and left the country, abandoning 820 acres of land, on which Nashville now stands. His heirs, living in Texas, propose to recover his property.

THE following is the agreement of the two parties in Louisiana by which it is hoped to secure a fair election in that State:

"The undersigned announce the following as the result of the conference between the committees of the two political parties of the State of Louisiana. The committee representing the Conservative People's party pledge themselves to cause all violence and intimidation, if any exist, to cease throughout the State, and to assist the constituted authorities in maintaining peace, and insuring a strictly fair and impartial registration and election; also to discountenance acts and threats of personal violence and all improper influences to control the will of the elector, and to render assistance and use every effort to subject to the penalty of the law all persons who may commit acts of violence, or intimidation, or conspire to do the same.

"In order to guarantee a fair registration and election there is hereby constituted and established an Advisory Committee composed of five members, namely: Messrs. Albert Voorhees and E. S. Burke, selected by the representatives of the Conservative People's party, and Messrs. S. B. Packard and B. J. Joubert, selected by the representatives of the Republican party, and an umpire, namely: Dr. M. F. Bonzano, who has been jointly selected. This Advisory Committee is to supervise and carry on the registration throughout the State on behalf of all parties, to the full extent of suggesting changes in the registration officers and the manner of conducting and carrying on the registration, Gov. Kellogg, in the interest of a fair and impartial registration, of his own accord, pledging himself to act upon the advice and suggestions of the Advisory Committee, so long as such advice and suggestions are in consonance with and permitted by the existing laws of the State.

"Third, It is agreed that two persons shall be named by the representatives of the Conservative People's party who shall be elected according to law, to fill two vacancies which shall be created by resignation in the returning board within twenty days.

(Signed) "D. F. KENNER,
"For the Conservative Committee of Conference.

MISS MINNIE SHERMAN, eldest daughter of the General, was married at Washington, on the 1st inst., to Lieut. Fitch, of the navy.... About half a million of national bank notes now reach the Comptroller of Currency daily for destruction...Reports received at the Agricultural Department show that the wheat crop will nearly average that of last year. None of the large corn-producing States reach an average. There will be a fair crop of oats, potatoes and hay, but less than half a crop of tobacco.

THE latest contribution to Beecher-Tilton literature is a letter from Catherine E. Beecher, a sister of Henry Ward, headed "An Appeal to the Public." The most important portion of her paper is an admission that Bowen originated the great scandal....At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Board of Underwriters in New York, a few days ago, a resolution was adopted recommending that all companies belonging to the National Board discontinue the business of fire insurance in Chicago. This action is taken in consequence of the Board's dissatisfaction with the action of the Chicago City Council in not complying with the demands of the former body made at a meeting in July last. Chicagoans are indifferent to the action of the Board, as they can get along wholly independent of what they regard as an odious monopoly. The insurance men of Chicago are particularly jubilant. They express the belief that this sudden and arbitrary action of the Board will result in its destruction.... Fuller and later accounts of the recent expedition to the Black Hills moderate very sensibly the roseate descriptions of the country furnished by Gen. Custer and Gen. Forsyth. Col. Fred Grant, who accompanied the expedition, and who, it appears, was specially instructed to observe the geological formation of the country and report upon its mineral resources, gives it as his opinion that the gold "discovered" by the expedition would bring about $3 at public sale, and he believes that the ore was imported from some assay office. He also speaks in disparaging terms of the vegetable products of the Black Hills region. The timber, he says, is for the most part spruce and yellow, and the area of tillable land very small.

THOMAS H. MONTGOMERY, General Agent of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, says that the recent action of the Board recommending the withdrawal of insurance business from Chicago was absolutely necessary as a protective measure. The authorities of Chicago had in some instances utterly ignored the requirements of the Board, and in others they had made spasmodic efforts at reform. The Fire Department was sadly lacking in discipline, and was controlled by politicians.

AT the international rifle-shooting match now in progress at Creedmoor, Long Island, the American marksmen achieved a very creditable victory over the Irish visitors on Saturday, Sept. 26. The following is the score made by the respective teams at different distances:

Political.

THE Nevada Republicans assembled in convention at Winnemucca on the 25th of September, and nominated Dr. J. C. Hazelett for Governor. The platform reaffirms the principles of the Republican party; disapproves of a third Presidential term; demands the restriction of Chinese immigration; opposes subsidies or grants to any corporations; asks Congress to pass laws regulating railroad fares and freights; and favors a return to specie payment.

THE adjourned Liberal Convention at Albany, N. Y., on the 29th ult., refused to make any nominations, being evidently inclined to support Tilden, the Democratic candidate.... The Democracy of Nevada have nominated L. K. Bradley for Governor and A. C. Ellis for Congress. Resolutions were adopted opposing massed capital, subsidies, and the third term; condemning the back salary-grab; opposing Chinese immigration; favoring laws for the regulating of fares and freights; indorsing the eight-hour law; arraigning the the administration for abuse of power; demanding the repeal of the bullion tax; and condemning the acts of violence recently perpetrated in the South.

Business Letters.

1. In letters of business use as few words as possible.

2. Business letters should be promptly answered.

3. Use a clear, distinct writing, avoiding all flourish of penmanship or language.

4. Come at once to your subject, and state it so clearly that it will not be necessary to guess your meaning.

5. Give town, county, State and date explicitly. It is frequently of great importance to know when a letter was written.

6. Read your letter carefully when finished, to see that you have made no omissions and no mistakes. Also carefully examine your envelope, to see that it is rightly directed, with postage stamp affixed.

7. Copy all business letters, of your own by hand, or with the copying press made for the purpose.

8. Send money by draft, post-office order or express, always stating in the letter the amount, and by what means sent. Thus you have something to show for money guaranteeing you against loss.

9. Write date and from whom received, across the end of each letter, and file for further reference, fastening the letters together with rubber bands, or binding in a letter-file adapted to the purpose. The possession of a letter sometimes prevents litigation and serious misunderstandings.

In ordering goods, state very explicitly the amount, kind, quality color, shape, size, etc., and on what terms wanted. Whether you wish the same sent by freight or express and what express. Much inconvenience is experienced among business men because of a neglect to designate explicitly what is wanted.

Should the writer wish to make suggestions, ask questions, or add other matter to the letter, which are foreign to the subject, such words should be placed entirely separate from the order. Of fifty or a hundred letters received to-day, by the merchant, that one which is mixed up with complaints, inquiries, etc., will probably be laid over till to-morrow or until such time can be gained as will enable the merchant to read it through. Had the order been explicitly stated, and the suggestions placed elsewhere, the goods would have been forwarded immediately.

Send your order, also, early enough to give yourself plenty of time to wait for the goods to arrive.—Hall's Manual.

Anæsthetics.

Anæsthesia means "without feeling." It is applied now to insensibility to pain, by breathing certain kinds of air or odors for the purpose of undergoing operations without feeling the pain of them. These are nitrous oxide, ether and chloroform. The first, or laughing gas, is entirely safe, and is breathed pure, wholly without any admixure of common air. Chloroform is the most dangerous; it should not be breathed unless there is ninety-seven per cent. of air mixed with it. In breathing ether the throat should be gradually accustomed to it by sniffing it for a few breaths, and then exclude the air altogether. General readers should acquaint themselves with a few facts about the nature, uses and effects of anæsthetics. No one should use them who has any form of heart or lung disease. It is better not to take them at all, in view of an operation, unless the system is fully under its power. There is danger if, while a person is breathing an anæsthetic, the inspiration is hard and short, or the expiration is feeble and long, or the chest ceases to move, or snorting in the throat. Only chloroform induces an arrest of the heart's action; then the danger of death is most imminent.

Immense Produce Exports.

A tabulated statement of the exports of produce from New York for the last eight months, of which some of the principal items are given below, shows that the shipments of wheat, corn, cheese, petroleum and some other items are in several instances beyond precedent:

POTATOES yet to be dug should be taken out only on dry days, allowing them to remain on the surface long enough to dry, and immediately transferred to bins in well ventilated, dry cellars. They should be handled as little as possible and kept from the light after storing.

The Clay-Randolph Duel.

Although Randolph yielded to the foolish and outrageous demands of the duello, it illustrated more than any other event of his career the true nobility of his character. He expected to loose his life as the result of his acceptance of the challenge. He made codicils to his will—"the bequests slight in value, but invaluable in tenderness of feeling and beauty of expression." His namesake was sent to Baltimore to save "the boy" from the sudden shock of seeing him brought from the field dead. Both Gen. James Hamilton and Thomas H. Benton have left assurances of the tender care and thoughtfulness exercised on the part of Randolph previous to their engagement.

"The night before," says Hamilton, "Mr. Randolph sent for me. I found him calm, but in a singularly kind and confiding mood. He told me that he had something on his mind to tell me. He then remarked: 'Hamilton, I have determined to receive, without returning, Clay's fire; nothing shall induce me to harm a hair of his head; I will not make his wife a widow nor his children orphans. Their tears would be shed over his grave; but when the sod of Virginia rests on my bosom, there is not one in the wide world, not one individual, to pay this tribute upon mine.' His eyes filled, and, resting his head upon his hand, we remained some minutes silent. * * * Col. Tatnall remarked: 'Mr. Randolph I am told you have determined not to return Mr. Clay's fire; I must say to you my dear sir, if I am only to go out to see you shot down, you must find some other friend.' After a pause Randolph, smilingly, said: 'Well, Tatnall, I promise you one thing: if I see the devil in Clay's eye, and that, with malice prepense, he means to take my life, I may change my mind;' a remark I knew he made merely to propitiate the anxiety of his friend." To try the depth of his sincerity he was told after some time had elapsed, of a visit to Mrs. Clay the night before—"of the late sitting, the child asleep, the unconscious tranquillity of Mrs. Clay;" and it was added that the visitor "could not help reflecting how different all might be the next night." The reply which it brought "seemed to rebuke an unworthy doubt;" he said: "I shall do nothing to disturb the sleep of the child or the repose of the mother."

Further accounts of the duel represent that it took place on the banks of the Potomac river, not far from Washington, and that the sun could be seen just setting behind the blue hills of Randolph's own Virginia. He could see no "devil in Clay's eye." He turned to Hamilton and said, "Clay is calm, but not vindictive; I hold my purpose, in any event; remember, this." Clay's bullet passed through his adversary's coat very near the hip. Randolph then, discharging his pistol in the air, remarked: "I do not fire at you." Mr. Clay was affected when he saw that Mr. Randolph had thrown away his fire, and, approaching him, said: "I trust in God, my dear sir, you are untouched; after what has occurred I would not have harmed you for a thousand worlds." But it was evident, from the course of his bullet, that Clay had intended to kill his man. Is it possible to conceive of a more happy termination to a most unhappy affair.—Sabine's Notes.

A Monkey Doctor.

All previous narratives of intelligent proceedings on the part of animals are thrown into the shade by the following account of a medical monkey described by the Oriental correspondent of a London journal: He one day saw a monkey holding a snake by the throat and rubbing its head in the dirt, but, as the ground was moist and damp, the snake was not readily killed by this mode of punishment. Every now and then the monkey would look most knowingly in the face of the reptile to see if it was dead, and in the course of these investigations the monkey received a severe bite. This angered him and he speedily dispatched the snake, but its coils had hardly relaxed before the monkey reeled and fell prostrate, apparently in all the agonies of death by poison. By this time an aged-looking monkey arrived on the scene, and after examining the body of the snake and its victim, he immediately started for some neighboring bushes, where he collected some leaves of the plant known as the red cherchita. These he rapidly and skillfully fashioned into a sort of pill, which he administered to his snake-bitten companion, who speedily revived and walked off with his physician. The story is declared to come from trustworthy sources.

Stop Coughing.

In one of his Boston lectures, Dr. Brown-Sequard gives the following simple means of checking coughing, sneezing, etc.: "Coughing can be stopped by pressing on the nerves of the lip in the neighborhood of the nose. A pressure there may prevent a cough when it is beginning. Sneezing may be stopped by the same mechanism. Pressing, also, in the neighborhood of the ear, may stop coughing. It is so, also, of hiccough, but much less so than for sneezing or coughing. Press very hard on the top of the mouth inside is also a means of stopping coughing. And I may say that the will has immense power there. There was a French surgeon who used to say, whenever he entered the wards of his hospital, 'The first patient who coughs here will be deprived of food to-day.' It was exceedingly rare that a patient coughed then."—Rural New Yorker.

AMONG the old books lately found in a shipment of foreign rags to the paper mill at Kalamazoo, Mich., is "a catalogue of the different specimens of cloth collected in the third voyage of Capt. Cook in the Southern Hemisphere, with a particular account of the manner of the manufacture of the same in the various islands of the South sea, etc., arranged and printed for Alexander Shaw, No. 379 Strand, London, MDCCLXXXVII." There are eight pages of reprint. The balance of the pages are blank and contain thirty-nine specimens in an excellent state of preservation. The "cloth," or rather paper, is made from the bark of trees, and is as soft as flannel.—Detroit Tribune.

AGRICULTURAL.

Seasonable Suggestions.

REPAIR all buildings and make thorough preparation for winter protection of crops and live stock.

BEETS and carrots must not be allowed to freeze. In gathering carrots we have practiced running the lifting subsoil plow deeply alongside the rows, just far enough away to avoid bruising the roots. This renders the pulling light labor.

CORN stalks from sowed corn for fodder require very great care in curing, in order to secure the best of food for winter use. We have found it almost impossible to teach any one how to cure this fodder as it should be. Experience during one or two years seems to be absolutely essential to success.

ANIMALS should be housed at night, care being taken to secure thorough ventilation. Employ a good variety of such succulent food as may be perishable, and while thus econom zing the wasting pumpkins, sweet apples, squashes, turnips, etc., the growth induced by juicy grass will continue.

SURFACE drainage cannot now be safely neglected. All natural water courses should be widely and cleanly opened—the necessary furrows leading to them should be cleaned down to the firm soil, and the proper stays placed to check the flow down steep banks, and turn the water into harmless channels.

Hogs are fattened very rapidly if fed on cooked sweet apples or pumpkins, through which is divided the amount of corn meal necessary for them. We have long practiced sowing peas broadcast on spare ground, and mowing them close to the ground, feeding the whole to hogs, and thus commenced the fattening process without any expenditure of corn.

DRAINS should be examined, the outlets properly secured, and fields that need drainage should be inspected. A good plan in practice is to dig holes here and there, say four feet deep, and, making observations of the rise of water in them, note the conduct of the land under different states of the weather up to the time of commencing drainage. With knowledge gained in this way, partial drainage may be made to answer a very good purpose.

Asparagus.—Cut off tops and cover the bed with coarse manure. Remove celery and bury in a trench, as deep as the plants are high, as closely as it can be packed, and cover with straw as the advancing cold requires—so says an old market gardener. Fresh plantings of rhubarb, asparagus, grapes, fruit trees, currants, gooseberries, raspberries, blackberries and strawberries may be made now with profit, if well done, and the ground mulched where necessary during winter.

CORN should be closely sorted as husked, and instead of throwing the poor ears in the mud to the hogs, let them be fed on hard ground, or, what is the better plan, soaked in water, and allowed to sour slightly before being fed. In no case should good corn be fed whole, if the object be to produce the largest amount of flesh from the least quantity of food. It should be ground and cooked, otherwise a considerable portion of it will pass through the animal undigested.

WINTER grain should have all been in the ground last month, but some farmers were belated in their work of preparation. Late sowing with rye can be more safely practiced than with wheat—though on good, dry, warm soils the latter grain has been known to do well as late as the end of the month. One farmer records the fact that he sowed late in November a five acre field, finishing the harrowing with snow falling, and already three inches deep. The crop was equal to that gathered from a field sown six weeks sooner. A greater amount of seed was sown on the late piece.

TREE setting should be attended to as early as possible; better if done just as the leaf is ready to drop, rather than later. Above all things don't seek "how not to do it" by placing them in badly made holes, poor ground, or with an over dose of manure. Particularly do not make it a point to kick the trees about in the cold wind some hours before setting. Pick and handle fruit carefully, especially the portion intended to be kept. Good cider can only be made from the most mature apples, and the better they are selected and handled, the better will be the cider. If you prize your trees, have all the fruit picked, that the buds prepared for next season may receive no injury.

DITCHES.—Everything on the farm, if let alone, becomes worse more easily than better. It is especially so with open ditches on reclaimed swamp lands. Tile drains, by the way, are greatly superior to open ditches, for the general purposes of drainage. Still there are situations where open drains are preferable. If you have any of these, now is the time to clean out the mud, and to deepen them, if necessary. The ditches should be cleaned out frequently. Such lands are made good by much labor. It is bad economy not to keep them good, by a little labor once in a year or two, as may appear necessary to keep the water running freely, in order that the sour, unnutritious grasses may give place to those that are sweet and nutritious.

PLASTER AND ASHES.—Once while riding in the cars we noticed on either side of the track for some distance a tract of almost barren sand, the only vegetation seen being now and then a sickly white birch and a little sorry-looking sorrel. Two gentleman, evidently farmers, were talking of manures, when one said: "Do you know what would clothe those lands with a good crop of clover?" The other gentleman looked incredulous and shook his head: "Well," continued the interrogator, "plaster and ashes will do it, for I have tried it on just such land and at the end of the third year there was a heavy sward on it."

We did not forget the conversation, but went home and sowed over a barren knoll with plaster and ashes, and to our astonishment a good crop of clover came in, though we did not put on a grain of seed. We then tried the experiment on our pasture lands, with marked success, so much so that we recommended it to our neighbors whose pastures were thin, and in three years the pasture land in that section would feed nearly double the stock that fed on them before.

Ashes in the neighboring village rose in price, and the farmers to-day buy all they can get at 60 and 75 cents per barrel, and find it pays well at that. We believe there is much land in Minnesota now almost worthless that will one day be made valuable by the use of plaster and ashes.—Farmer's Union.

Hints for the Housewife.

If you have been picking or handling acid fruit and have stained your hands, wash them in clear water, wipe them lightly, and while they are yet moist strike a match and shut your hands around it so as to catch smoke, and the stain will disappear.

JUMBLES.—One-half pound butter, one-half pound sugar, three-fourths pound flour, three eggs; flavor with rose-water and nutmeg. After the ingredients are mixed take out a little on a well-sugared board and cover with sugar. Cut in small strips, and cross on a well-buttered tin.

EGG CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one egg, piece of butter the size of a large egg, one cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, a little salt and nutmeg, one teaspoonful of lemon, three cups of flour; beat the white of an egg separately, the sugar and yelk and butter together; bake in a thoroughly heated oven.

CANNING SWEET CORN.—A lady gives through the Rural New Yorker a nice recipe for canning sweet corn. She adds to every two quarts of corn one teaspoonful of tartaric acid and boils it fifteen minutes. She puts it up the same as other fruit. On opening add the same quantity of bicarbonate of soda that you did of the acid.

COTTAGE CHEESE.—Place thick, loppered milk on the stove, and let it heat thoroughly, not to cook, or it will be hard. Pour into a hot cloth, and let it drain until dry; season with salt and butter. Should it be rather dry, moisten with milk or cream, and make into balls. Some prefer what is called "smear-kase." Prepare the milk as stated above, but instead of making into balls, thin with cream and add a little pepper.—Country Gentleman.

CORN PUDDING.—One quart of corn carefully cut off the cob; one quart of milk; one quart of meal; one teaspoonful of melted butter; salt and pepper according to taste. Stir well and put in two eggs well beaten, just before you put the pudding into the oven. If your fire is good the pudding will be done in half an hour. Let it brown slightly on the top, and send it to the table in the same dish in which you bake it. I prefer a dish of white earthenware. This can also be made of canned corn.—Country Gentleman.

HOW TO MOLD BOTTLED JELLIES.—Uncork the bottle; place it in a saucepan of hot water until the jelly is reduced to a liquid state; taste it, to ascertain whether it is sufficiently flavored, and if not, add a little wine. Pour the jelly into molds which have been soaked in water, let it set, and turn it out, by placing the mold in hot water for a minute; then wipe the outside, put a dish on the top, and turn it over quickly. The jelly should then slip easily away from the mold, and be quite firm. It may be garnished as taste dictates.

Moths in Carpets.

One can never be quite sure that their carpets are not being consumed by moths, except for a few weeks after having taken them up and thoroughly cleaned, unless something is used to prevent their growth or to destroy them. This often necessitates the taking up and cleaning of a carpet that otherwise would not need the renovation.

With an ingrain of Lowell this needless labor may be saved by laying down a damp cloth, and over it thoroughly rubbing the edges with a hot flat-iron; this will kill the moths, if any have accumulated. But with the tapestry, Brussell, or velvet, the ironing is not effectual; besides it injures the carpet. Much hard work can be saved, however, by removing the tacks, one side at a time, rolling back, and examining the edges. If there are any moths, they must be brushed off and burned; and to effectually destroy the life of all deposits, the edges of the carpets must be ironed, as before stated, but on the wrong side. The edge of the carpet lining should be thoroughly looked to, and the exposed edge of the floor washed, and while damp sprinkled with salt. If the carpet is to be folded under in any place, sprinkle salt between the folds and see that the floor is well covered with salt for an inch or two under the edge of the carpet all around. If salt was always put under the edges of carpets before tacking them down, moths would have but slight chance to trouble them.

THE THAMES GETTING DRY.—The Londoners are getting scared over reports that the Thames is drying up, and there appear to be grounds for apprehension. The river is exceedingly low, and the embankment seems to have drained the upper part of the stream. Unless a weir, or some other means of prevention is constructed, the days of boating on the upper part of the stream are near their close. The embankment, which has been regarded as so grand an achievement, is thus proving to be a more costly and more troublesome affair than was at first expected, but the resources of engineering art are almost boundless, and a way to cure the difficulty will ere long be found.

An Electric Man.

The New Orleans Times gives an account of a most extraordinary case of paralysis which recently occurred in that city, and the remarkable symptoms which attended the patient's illness. The sufferer is Major Edward Gotthiel, a prominent citizen of New Orleans. The Times says: "A short time after Major Gotthiel's afflictions commenced there were developed in him symptoms which, it is stated, have but one parallel in the history of medical science. One evening he was lying asleep, almost as profound and peaceful as when in health. The faithful watchers sat just within the adjoining room, ready to answer his slightest call. Suddenly he cried out in frightful screams of agony, and although paralyzed, and incapable, ordinarily, of moving without aid, he sprang up in his bed. The paroxysms of pain did not in the least affect the clear conception of his intellect; on the contrary, they were rather strengthened than otherwise. Aroused in this manner from sound slumber, his first conceit was that some one had applied to him a galvanic battery heavily charged. Becoming assured that such had not been the case, he then thought that some one had stolen into his room and done something—what, he knew not. This in turn gave way to the positive assurances of his wife and friends; but it was plain that something had happened of an extraordinary physical character, and the Major with his usual scientific turn of mind set about its investigation. Lifting up his paralyzed arm he discovered that it was covered with what appeared to be a phosphoric light. Holding the stricken limb still higher electric lights dripped from the fingers like drops of liquid fire, whilst the whole arm and the corresponding sides of the face and neck were illumined in like manner. The phenomenon was wonderful to behold. It was plain the patient was mysteriously and wonderfully overcharged with electricity. Feeling a mysterious influence in his left eye, he called upon his friends to examine it. They found it to be perfectly natural in appearance, except that it emitted a bright illumination, which cast a light on the wall sufficiently strong in a darkened room to enable him to see the figures on the wall paper. In a word the eye shone out like a lamp. It was at this stage, but after these wonderful physical indications had abated, that Dr. Nicholson was called in, and it will gratify the many old and cherished friends of Major Gottheil to be informed that the symptoms of his painful illness have taken a favorable turn. Already he has measurably recovered the use of his lower limb, and with steadily increasing strength the strongest hopes are entertained of his speedy recovery."

Ancient Trees in Nevada.

The Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise says: "In the bottom of the main shaft of the Virginia City Coal Company, El Dorado Canon, Lyon county, has been encountered the trunk of a tree four feet in diameter, a lone relic of an ancient and extinct forest. Where cut through by the shaft this old tree is found to be perfectly carbonized—turned into coal. Outside, the log is completely crusted over with iron pyrites, many of which are so bright that the crystals shine like diamonds. These pyrites also extend into the body of the log, filling what were apparently once cracks or wind-shakes, and even forming clusters about what was once the heart of the tree. This relic of an old-time forest lies far below the two veins of coal the company are about to open. The finding of this old trunk is evidence that the country was at one time, ages and ages ago, covered by a forest of great trees; though the native timber growth, when the country was first visited by the whites, and as far back as the traditions of the Indians extend, was but a scrubby species of nut-pine. A few miles from the shaft in which the carbonized tree was found are to be seen on the surface the petrified remains of many large trees. In the early days of Washoe, before the prospectors had broken them up for specimens, pieces of tree-trunks two or three feet in diameter were to be seen lying upon the surface of the ground. However, these trees, and even the one found in the bottom of the shaft of the coal-ruins, may have come from the foot hills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains—may have drifted out when seas of water everywhere covered our present valleys. The water lines visible on the hills show that the whole country was filled with lakes and petrified trees lying here and there on the surface of the ground probably floated out on the waters of the extinct lakes, and finally sunk to the bottom in the place where they are now found."

Cotton Crop of the Past Year.

The New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle publishes a statement of the cotton crop for the year ending Sept. 1, 1874; by which it is shown that the total crop this year reaches 4,185,534 bales, while the exports are 2,840,981 bales, and the spinners' taking 1,321, 029 bales, leaving a stock on hand at the close of the year of 108,152 bales. The total receipts at the Atlantic and Gulf shipping ports this year have been 3,819,436 bales, against 3,651,346 bales last year. If we now add the shipments from Tenne-see and elsewhere direct to manufacturers, we have the following as the crop statement for the two years:

	Year ending Sept. 1. 1873-74. Bales.	 1872-73. Bales.
Receipts at the shipping ports	3,819,436	3,651,346
Add shipments from Tennessee, etc, direct to manufacturers	237,572	141,500
Total	4,057,008	3,792,846
Manufactured South not includedi n above	128,526	137,662
Total cotton crop for the year	4,185,534	3,930,508

NIGHT WORK.—The standard authority in sanitary and medical matters, the London Lancet, declares that work by night need be no more injurious than work by day, if kept within hours not curtailing the requisite period of sleep, and pursued by a steady, white, and properly powerful light. Faint, flickering, or too diffused light produces irritation of the brain through the eye, and is one of the chief sources of injury to the health in night work.

The Story of Louisiana.

(From the Chicago Tribune.)

February 22, 1864, the first "Free-State" Governor of Louisiana, Michael Hahn, was elected by the half-dozen parishes then under Federal control. Gen. Banks supervised the election. In March a Constitutional Convention met and drew up a constitution which abolished slavery. In September the six parishes adopted this instrument. Congressmen were elected at the same time, but they were never admitted to the House. At the close of the war, all these arrangements collapsed. The prevalent theory was that Louisiana was a Territory. In the spring of 1865, an election for Territorial Delegate took place. Henry C. Warmoth, ex-Lieutenant-Colonel in Grant's Army of the Tennessee, and ex-Provost-Judge under Banks in New Orleans, got the negro vote, and was chosen. A purse of $15,000 was made up for him, and he went to Washington. Congress would have nothing to do with him, but President Johnson appointed him Treasury Agent and sent him to Galveston. In the fall of 1865 a general election was held under the Constitution of 1864. The Democrats carried every county but one. J. Madison Wells was elected Governor by 22,312 out of 27,808 votes. The Legislature chosen at this time met early in 1866. It passed some ill-advised laws, among them an act regulating negro labor in a harsh and unnecessary way. In July of that year, the surviving members of the Constitutional Convention of 1864 called a meeting of that body to revise the State Convention. They made the preposterous claim that the convention could assemble and submit changes in that instrument to the popular vote at any time! The convention met July 30. A riot ensued. Several persons were killed. Congress appointed a Committee of Investigation. The reconstruction acts were soon afterwards passed. The convention provided for by these acts met in November, 1867. The convention it framed was adopted by the people in May, 1868. At that time Warmoth was elected Governor by 64,901 votes to 38,046 for Tallaferro, the Democratic candidate. Warmoth was at once inaugurated. The Legislature was overwhelmingly Republican and dishonest. The Presidential campaign of 1868 was disgraced by a number of riots. On election-day, very few negroes voted. Intimidation was doubtless the great cause of this, although it is claimed that the party-managers, foreseeing certain defeat, kept their followers from the polls for the sake of pleading terrorism thereafter. In 1869 the mammoth jobbery which destroyed the credit of Louisiana and swelled her debt to its present enormous proportions fairly began. In 1871 the Republicans quarreled over the spoils. The Assembly elected, at different times, two Speakers, pro- and anti-Warmoth. Soon after its adjournment, a Republican State Convention was to meet at New Orleans. Aug. 9, 1871, this body assembled. U. S. Marshal Packard had the right, as Chairman of the State Central Committee, to appoint the place. He designated the Custom-House. The building was guarded by Federal troops, who kept out all delegates who had not received tickets of admission from Packard. Warmoth and all his friends were excluded. They held a convention of their own, which sent a committee, headed by Pinchback, to ask Grant to remove the Federal ring of Casey, Packard, et al. Grant did nothing. Thenceforth the party in Louisiana was split into Custom-House (or Grant) and Warmoth Republicans. Nov. 22, 1871, Lieut.-Gov. Oscar J. Dunn (colored) died. On Dec. 6 the Senate was convened without the House, and chose Pinchback, then one of Warmoth's warmest friends, as its President. He therefore became Lieutenant-Governor, although the legality of such a session by half of the Legislature was strenuously denied. Jan. 1, 1872, the Legislature met. The Senate had no quorum. Casey, the Collector, had taken the absentees on a cruise in the revenue-cutter Wilderness. The Senate could do nothing, for lack of a quorum, until the 15th, but the House made the interval lively by splitting into two factions, each of which formally expelled the other from membership. There was some rioting, and one Representative was killed. Jan. 20, the election of Pinchback was confirmed by the Senate and the Warmoth wing of the House. Carter, the Speaker of the other wing, issued a proclamation announcing his intention to seize the State-House. Business was suspended for some days. Both sides armed. Gen. Emory finally stopped the turmoil by the threat of Federal interference. The Carter Legislature dissolved, and the legal (Warmoth) body soon after adjourned.

Warmoth attended the Cincinnati Convention as a Liberal Republican. Pinchback preserved a neutral position. When Grant had been renominated at Philadelphia, Pinchback made a bargain with Packard, Casey, and Kellogg, and deserted Warmoth. After some trouble the opposition elements in the State were united in October. McEnery and Penn ran as the Opposition candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor against Kellogg and Antoine. Kellogg is an ex-Colonel from Fulton county, Ill., who was sent by Johnson to New Orleans in 1865 as Collector of Customs, and who was elected United States Senator in 1868.

Nov. 4, 1871, the election was held. The returns were sent to the legal Returning Board, which consisted of Warmoth and some of his subordinates. It was speedily known that McEnery was elected by about 10,000 majority. The Kellogg party, in despair, got affidavits by 4,000 negroes that colored voters had been kept away from the polls, and that it was probable that the Returning Board would not count the votes correctly. On the strength of these flimsy statements, United States Circuit Judge C. H. Durell enjoined Warmoth from counting the votes, and ordered him to turn over the returns to an utterly illegal Returning Board, organized in the interests of Kellogg. Warmoth kept the returns. On this same day Durell ordered Packard to occupy the State House with Federal troops. This was done, and the Legislature which Warmoth had convened was kept from assembling. Dec. 7, the fraudulent Returning Board declared Kellogg and Antoine and a Radical Legislature elected. Be it remembered that this illegal body had no returns of the election whatever. Two days thereafter two Legislatures met. The Kellogg crew of usurpers promptly impeached Warmoth, suspended him from office until trial, and declared Lieut.-Gov. Pinchback to be the rightful ruler of Louisiana. So this slippery trickster got his reward. Warmoth issued a proclamation denouncing the outrage Kellogg and McEnery were inaugurated on the same day by the rival Legislatures. Both appealed to Grant. He sustained Kellogg. The matter soon came before Congress. Two Senatorial claimants—McMillan (McEnery) and Ray (Kellogg)—made their appearance. The Senate Committee of Privileges and Elections reported that the election of 1872 was a fraud, and recommended that there should be another in May, under the supervision of United States Circuit-Judge Wood. Some members of the committee dissented. Morton thought Grant's recognition of Kellogg settled the question. Trumbull thought McEnery should be recognized. The Senate dodged. On the night of Feb. 28, 1873, it voted that the Kellogg Government should continue until the election provided for in the majority report should take place, and then it tabled the report and discharged the committee, so that the election could never take place. Since then Carpenter has brought the matter before the Senate twice. Grant once prepared a proclamation against Kellogg, but at the last moment Morton had it suppressed. Kellogg has remained in power, but his Senator-elect—Pinchback—has not been admitted to the Senate.

The people of Louisiana, denied all redress by Congress and plundered and tyranized over by Kellogg and his crew, have very generally refused to pay the taxes illegally imposed upon them, and have consequently had their property sold under the hammer. At last, when they saw that the infamous registration and election laws put it within Kellogg's power to count himself and his gang into office forever, they rose in despair and took the law into their own hands. Ill-advised this action may have been, but no impartial student of the tangled web of fraud, and treachery, and violence which has made up the history of Louisiana for the last decade can wonder that it finally came to pass.

Republican Opinions of the Kellogg Usurpation.

"OUGHT TO BE LEFT TO THE VENGEANCE OF THE PEOPLE."

[From the New York Evening Post, Rep.]

We believe, as we have so often said, that President Grant's interference in the domestic affairs of the Southern States has been wholly mischievous. Through his aid Kellogg has fortified his position on every side by legal barriers. Men do not seek redress with musket in hand when they have a fair chance to obtain redress at the ballot-box. Kellogg's hand now covers every ballot-box in Louisiana. Like the late Louis Napoleon, he can obtain for his most illegal acts the apparent sanction of the people. Even the ballot, the peaceful weapon of free men, has become under his management the instrument of political tyranny, social discord, and financial ruin. He ought to be left to the vengeance of the people whose necks are under his heel.

NEW ORLEANS PROSTRATE.

[From the New York Times.]

The government of William Pitt Kellogg in Louisiana is one which we have never been able to defend. The Durell decision which aided in establishing it was an outrage. The conduct of the Returning Board which declared it elected was dishonest. The taxation since 1872 has been arbitrary and oppressive. Legislation has in hundreds of cases been a shameful farce. Districts have been represented by men who never saw them. The small revenue gleaned from the impoverished people has been diverted to improper uses. New Orleans is prostrate. The city administration is penniless. Real estate in the metropolis is worth nothing in the present condition of affairs; no one will buy it. The prominent local banks have recently failed. Laborers and salaried employes alike are paid in scrip worth 30 cents on the dollar. Many streets are desolate. Whole pages of all the newspapers are filled with the names of delinquent taxpayers. Negroes and whites in some sections of the State are in danger of starvation.

"A HEAVY LOAD."

[From the St. Louis Democrat, Rep.]

The government of Louisiana has been heavy load for Republicanism to carry. Some of the ablest and best Republicans have believed and declared that it did not represent the majority of the people of that State. It has been accused of corruption and oppression, nor has it been possible to deny that under it the taxes have become so heavy as to amount almost to confiscation of property, and the debt and expenses of the State have swelled to alarming proportions. A Congressional Investigation Committee has, in fact, reported that gross frauds were perpetrated in the election, and it is fair to say that the conduct of Kellogg himself, and others who have obtained power under the name of Republicanism, have been such as to discredit the Republican party.

Infantile Thumb-Sucking.

The British Medical Journal publishes an article by Dr. Horace Dobells, in which that distinguished physician states that he has observed that a peculiar and rather common deformity of the chest is caused by the habit of sucking the thumb in infancy and early childhood. He says that the weight of the arm on the thorax of the child, during sleep, produces depression of the ribs in the line occupied by the arm when the thumb is placed in the mouth. The doctor thinks this is a very important effect of the habit of thumb-sucking—one which has never before been pointed out—and he regards it of sufficient consequence to be put on record for the benefit of other observers.

ONE of the best preserved men of his time is Commodore Vanderbilt. He attributes his condition to wearing woolen socks the whole year round, and says they prevent the escape of electricity.—Brooklyn Argus.

BEGINNING at the beginning. "And what's your favorite study, Missy?" "Chronology." "O, chronology, is it? Now, what is the date of the creation of the world?" "O, we haven't got so far as that, grandpa."

THE Detroit Tribune has just moved into a brand-new stone office, and prints a picture of it with a man going upstairs two steps at a time to whip the editor, and a woman coming down street with a piece of poetry for him to print.

THEY came pretty near hanging an Eastern man at Shellville, Fla., because they discovered a tooth-brush and a bottle of hair-oil in his satchel. They said no cussed Yank could come around there putting on the airs of a Napoleon Bonaparte.

IN a restaurant not long ago, a gentleman, while devouring a plate of hash, came across a pearl sleeve-button in it. He very justly complained to the big, brawny waiter, the latter replying in an astounding manner: "Well, what d'yer expect to get—a hull shirt?"

LINES—not by Tennyson, but by somebody else:

'Tis midnight, and the setting sun
Is rising in the far, far west.
The fog now leaves its downy nest;
The pensive ghost and sportive cow
Hilarious leap from bough to bough.

THE pride of mankind is great. A night or two ago, a family in New York was awakened by unusual noises in the house, and, on turning out, saw the eldest hopeful rushing about in his suspenders, brandishing a new Wesson, and shouting, "There's a man in the house!" A long search failed to show any foundation for the young man's warlike demonstration, when he mildly informed the breathless and exhausted tribe that it was his birthday. He was twenty-one.

DODDINGTON was very lethargic. Falling asleep one day after dinner, with Sir Richard Temple, Lord Cobham and several others, one of the party reproached him with his drowsiness. He denied having been asleep, and, to prove he had not, offered to repeat all Lord Cobham had been saying. Cobham challenged him to do so. Doddington repeated a story, and Cobham owned he had been telling it. "Well," said Doddington, "and yet I did not hear a word of it; but I went to sleep because that I knew about this time of the day you would tell that story."

By the side of a murmuring stream,
An elderly gentleman sat;
On the top of his head was a wig,
And a-top of his wig was his hat.

The wind it blew high and blew strong,
As the elderly gentleman sat;
And it tore from his head in a trice,
And plunged in the river his hat.

The gentleman then took his cane,
Which lay by his side as he sat;
And he dropped in the river his wig,
In attempting to get out his hat.

His breast it grew cold with despair,
And full in his eyes sadness sat;
So he flung in the river his cane,
To swim with his wig and his hat.

MRS. MARGARET MAGEE, of the vestal town of Cynthiana, Ky., is no theorist. You never catch Margaret acting as a delegate to women's conventions or petitioning for the right of suffrage, or howling over the wrongs of her sex. But when Mrs. Margaret wished to become a stock droveress she went and did it, entering, as the Pittsburgh Leader informs us, the East Liberty Stock Yards, riding on the top of a car with the other drovers. Two car-loads of that bucolic train were the personal property of Mrs. Margaret. As to real estate she holds in fee 400 highly cultivated acres in the blue-grass region. For the rest, she is desbribed as "rather good-looking, robust in figure, and 38 years of age." Mr. Magee was the original drover, but when he left this world to drive cattle no more his widow continued the business. She rides in the caboose with the masculine urgers of oxen, and is treated by them with chivalrous respects. All honor and profitable marketing to Mrs. Magee! Doing is so much better than talking—even in conventions.

This is not the year for apathy. There is an imperative duty for every Democrat to perform and we want Dekalb County to act well its part. Every Democrat should vote and work and see that his neighbor does the same.—We want no hanging back. Keep the ball rolling and make a good record.

LET EVERY DEMOCRAT WORK

At the polls on the 13th for the redemption of the country.

Work, that by your votes you may hurl despots from power.

Work, that your voices may arise for a free Repubiic.

Work, that good pure men may be placed in office.

Work, that the next Congress may be rid of the Radical thieves that infest Washington.

Work, that the army of supernumeraries created by Radicals to keep Radicalism in power shall be discharged and dispersed.

Work, that Radical bayonets shall no longer impose upon a free people in the south.

Work, that the rights of States shall no longer be interfered with.

Work, that peace may dawn on this great country.

Plundering the South.

The Hon. J. E. Stevenson, the Republican candidate for Congress in the First Congressional District in the State of Ohio, in a speech delivered in Cincinnati, September 24th, made the following truthful declaration: "But Republicans must not suppose that we can hold the people of the South by force while we allow dishonest officers to rob them. We would not submit to such treatment ourselves, and should not expect the country to stand by and see it done. If we attempt it the people of the North will vote us out of power, as they ought to do. "But we are holding the people of the South by force of arms, and we are allowing dishonest officeholders to plunder them. The colored United States Senator from Louisiana Senator Pinchback in a Republican Caucus, accused Gov. Kellogg whom Gen. Grant keeps in Louisiana at the point of the bayonet, with setting up a "usurpation" in that State. He distinctly told the Caucus Republicans that if he ever opened his mouth under oath, to Congress and the country and told them how the Kellogg Government was set up in Louisiana the Republican party could not survive the moral indignation of the country. Therefore in the language of Mr. Stevenson himself, the people of the North ought and will vote them out of power.

Beautiful Baker.

A CRAFTY COUNSELLOR!

Read, Reflect and Remember.

For the National Union.

Mr. Editor.—The Republican convention, held at Keudillville, on the 18th of August, last, put in nomination John H. Baker for Congress, and passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the selection of Hon. J. H. Baker, as the nominee of this convention, we present a man who combines purity of life, with especial fitness and qualification for a discharge of the high duties of this important office, and we pledge ourselves to the use of every exertion that comports with honor to insure election.

The convention affirmed that Mr. Baker combined both purity of life, with especial fitness, and that the office for which he was a candidate, was an important one. Now if all these affimations as disclosed by the convention are true then Mr. Baker is a proper candidate, the very man the people want in this emergency. But these are times the people desire to know the truth; they have not the utmost confidence in the resolutions of a convention made up of any man's friends met together for the express purpose of putting the very man in nomination they so laveshly endorse, and the convention that so boldly put forth the forgoing resolution must bear with one of the people in dissending in part at least, from its resolution.

John H. Baker is a lawyer, and it is claimed for him that he is a man of great ability; and the above resolution is very eulogistic of his ability, suffice it to say that in his capacity of a lawyer, he has had some very important cases submited to his care and management. I call your readers attention to one very noticeable case, notable for the person who were parties to it: notiable for the large amount involved it the controversy; not able for the allegations and charges made in the complaint, and notible for the manner of its termination.

The case is that of Louis Downing, Sample R. Downing, Theodor Downing, Mary Jane Weeks, Zelia L. Chase, Sydnia Chase Susanah Laffey and Barnard Laffey; agains John Weston and others.

The case was brought by Baker & Mitchell, attorneys for the plaintiffs, against the defendent in the Elkhart Circuit Court July 1st, 1868 and was afterward taken to the Kosciusko Circuit Court on charge of venue.

That your readers may fully understand the nature of the case and the large amount in controversy the secon d paragraph of the plaintiffs complaint is here copied, word for word as it was drawn by Mr. Baker's own hand and is his own production all of which is now in file in the office of the Clerk ot the Kosciusk o Circuit Court.

(For want of space we are compelled to give only a synopsis of it.)

The second paragraph of this complaint sets forth that one John Weston, obtained through fraud, section six in township thirty five, north of range five east, formerly reserved for a Pottawatonus Chief named Moran, which had passed through several generations to one Welson Dowing, where title was not held good. Baker and Michell was the attorneys for the petitioniers who were heirs of the Chief, and Baker as their attorney says for them. And these petitioners further aver that the said Weston craftily intending to cheat and defraud these petitioners farther represented affirmed that the said section six was at that time in the adverse occupancy and possession of the verious persons claiming under various titles, expense and litigation to get possession of said lands, even if it were possible to procure the President's approval to the Indian deed to their father and that he did not know that it could ever be done, that they have since learned that at the time said Weston did procure the fraudulent & pretended deeds aforesaid said section was in the adversed possession of various persons under claim and color of various titles, but that their titles were invalid as against the title confirmed to them and not difficult to be removed and that the said Weston instituted a suit in this court in these petitioners, named against, such occupants and procured the title to be confirmed to these petitioners as against such adverse possessors, and that they were the absolute owners the o f in fee simple and the March term 1866 of this court and that said pretended title and conveyances to Westor are void and illegal, as well for the frauds aforesaid as for the reasons that the said lands were then adverly occupied. Wherefore these paticioners ask that their title to said section be quieted, that said conveyances to said Weston be set a ide as fraudulent and that they have partition awarded them and for proper relief.

It is proper here to state that Mr. Weston fi'ed his answer to this complaint denying all fraud and all the allegations in the complaint, and setting forth that he was an innocent puchaser in good faith, &,. The parties appeared for trial at Warsaw at the November term 1869. Baker & Michell appeared for plaintiffs, and it is to be noticed also that Mr. 'Haymont name appeared to be endosed on some of the papers filed at this time, as associated with Baker & Mitchell, but it is understood that he took no part in the case as far as it went. Morris & Chadlid appeared for defendants. The reader must understand by this time if he has carefully read the paragraph of the complaint above set forth, that here was a case of more importance than any civil case ever before a court in this part of the State, and if the allegations are true as Mr. Baker penned them, with his own hand, then one of the greatest frauds was prepetrated in these corrupt times and the case ought to be carried through to final judgment, and Mr. Baker's poor and ignorant clients placed in the peaceful possession of the magnficent property by their crafty uncle. Where the allegations and charges true! Had Mr Baker the means of knowing the real truth he had his several clients who could state to him the fraudulent representations their uncle had made to them, and they could all testify to the representations it court; the law gave them the right to testify in their own behalf, and as they got a mere nothing for the magnificent property, if they could testify to the alleged fraudulent representation, it would be apparent that the plaintiffs has been deceived by Weston, and in such a case the conscience of the jury would be all on one side, and with the plaintiffs—and Weston could only oppose his own oath—which could weigh but little against the several plaintiffs; that Mr. Baker, had studied his case and knew the real facts is apparent from the masterly ability in which his statements and allegations in the complasnt are made out, and he knew the men that he had to contend with, for he charged in the complaint that Weston was a man much better than the plaintiffs, of great crastiness and address and knowledge of the world and that they were poor and ignornat.

On the other hand if he knew that the charge of fraud made agaitst Mr. Weston were not true, then there can be no excuse or justification in his making a false charge against any man The law and good moral does not allow any man to make knowingly any false charge, for the sake of obtaining any advantage in a court of justice.

Reader, do you know where this section of land is situated? The City of Elkhart is laid out on one section of the land reserved to the Indian Chief named in the treaty referred to in the compliant, and the Downing-West land is section six adjoining the city of Elkhart, and the city rapidly spreding over it. I need not stop to tell your readers that the city of Elkhart is and has been for years, one of the most enterprising in the State. Her vast water power, her rich farming country, her location at the junction of the Air Line, with the main line of the Lake Shore R, R; her vast machine shops where there employed twelve hundred men, and her enterprising citizens; make it one of the most desirable places to live in the west, and no place could be more desirable for the capitalist, in fact, her citizens have unbounded confidence in the future of their city, hence it is plain, that here was one of the most magnificent prizes ever contended for in a court of justice, and there is more honor to the noble man, who will stand up in a court of justice, and ring from the 'crafty' and fraudulent, their ill-gotten gains, and restore it to the poor and ignorant, who have been wrongfully deprived of it, than a seat in Congress—in fact the man who does that is on the road to Congress and he cannot be kept out! Did Mr Baker do that for his poor and ignorant clients? I cannot think he did. I must think he stopped far short of it.

If John Morris, James S. Frazer, or Andrew Ellison, had been employed by these plaintiffs, your readers would have expected that this case would have been carried through to the end, and a final judgment rendered in favor of these plaintiffs; they would have felt it the proudest act of their lives to have so done; and the consciousness that they had been the means of wrench ing the property of the ignorant and poor, from the crafty and villainous, would have well paid them for many a nights toil and study. What embarrassment arose in the case of Mr, Baker the reader may judge for himself. The parties met for trial, but the case did not go on, it was disposed of in a more satisfactory way to Mr. Weston, it was a compromise and a judgment rendered in favor of Weston without the swearing of witness and Weston's title forever quieted Mr. Weston assumed to give five thousand dollars to the poor and ignorant children of his sister Lola. Two thousand each and the ballance in village properoy at Union Mills, and swamp lands adjoining the town that the first National Bank at Kendallville, got of Mr. Dyk's when he failed, the property to be apprased by two men. Weston only paid $150 to each of the heirs in the first instance in all, after the settlement $6,500 the most of it paid in unsaleble property, and received property worth at the time over one hundred thousand dollars.

It must be born in mind that Mr. Zetia Chase never signed any deed with her husbands consent and he join ing the same, for this land and I am informed that lawyers hold that such a deed is not valid, and that the Supreme Court has so decided. This being the case, the amount paid by Weston, on the compromise was not the amount that Mr. Chase could have obtained alone without any reference to the claines of the others. The settlement was made through Baker while the case was pending at Warsaw and while the parties and their attorneys were there for trial Mr. Baker acting the chief part of his client the proposition first coming thro' Weston's agent; now how was it consummated Here is where the craftiness of Weston comes in against. At the time when settlement was made and before time Weston was intensely hostile to Baker he was charging that Baker had betrayed him, had been his attorney to manage all matters for him, and in settling this title to this section six, that he retained him as his attorney to settle his title, that he paid him a retainer fee of one hundred dollars and took his receipt for the money, the receipt stating for what the money was paid; that Weston exhibited the receipt to different pesrons, and made his threats that he would publish Mr. Baker for the course he had taken in the matter, that he never met so big a rascall in all his life. Your correspondent heard Mr. Weston make these charges against Baker, and Weston showed him the receipt. Although your correspondent cannot state all that was stated in the receipt word for word but this he does know, the receipt was for one hundred dollars were received from Weston as a retainer fee in relation to setleing his title to section six. Weston appeared angry when he made the statement, affected to deceive Mr. Baker had done him a great wrong, that after he had employed him through his employment he obtained a knowledge of all the facts concerning his title and after obtaining such knowledge he got up this suit to overthrow it. Now what does Weston make out of all this! How did he turn this matter to his own benefit simply this: When the case came up for trial at Wrasaw, Weston was on hand with his two distinguished friends George A. Mitchell and Hiram Iddings not as witnesses for they knew nothing that they could testify to, but simply to assist Weston to get a settlement out of Baker for mere nominal sum, and have title quieted by the judgment of the court. The program on Weston's was that his friends should alarm Baker about the awkward position that he was then occupying as counsel for the Downing heirs, when he had once been counsel for Weston to settle title to section six, and had received a retainer fee from him and given him a receipt that although he (Baker) was innocent of any wrong to Weston, and that all could be explained, yet his position was and would be a difficult one to explain to the people although it could readily be done to court, and as the people were looking to Mr. Baker as the probable candidate to Congress, and that to have Weston against him with all his weapons, with all the power he could bring against him (John Michell being the son-in-law of Weston, and the principal man and that if the suit go on and Weston should loose the land he would pursue him with intense hatred the result would be a great injury to Mr Baker on the other hand if the case would be compromised, and Weston reconciled such a course would be much better for Mr. Baker, and for Mr. Weston and no lasting sting would remain in the future.

The suit was settled! Mr. Editor what would have been the language of either of the eminent attorneys whose name has benn mentioned before, if they had had the management of this important case. If they had been approached for a settlement of the case by Weston's friend, you may well imagine they would have told Mr. Weston that the facts in the case had been examined as we think it our duty to do before we penned the complaint, we meant business or we never would have written the grave charges of fraud that we have against you, and no consideration personal to ourselves, can induce us for a moment to waver in our duty to the "poor and ignorant." We have but one proposition to make to you, that is: Restore to your sister's children their property; restore every cent we have charged you with defrauding them out of, and you may escape the castigation that you must necessarily expect to receive during a trial, for trying to defraud your sister's "poor and ignorant" children, but unfortunately these "poor and ignorant" children did not have either of these noble men to manage their affairs. John Weston became reconciled to Mr. Baker, no lasting sting remains between them—all is lovely. Weston immediately became the warm friend of Baker; espoused the championship of his political fortunes, and led his hosts at the Kendalville Convention two years ago, using all his "craftiness and great knowledge of the world" in behalf of the one who had preferred the grave charges of fraud and falsehood, stated in the complaint in this great case against him, and he is still fighting the battles of the great defender of the "poor and ignorant" with all his "craftiness." The chapter here ends, Weston is still rich and crafty, the children of his deceased sister Lola, are still "poor and ignorant" and John H. Baker is a candidate for Congress.

Some fellow writing to the Press from Corunna signs himself D. C. If it were D B. it would evidently be more appropriate which usually means "dead beat." He is advised by his brother-in-law, which puts us in mind of Artemus Ward's wife's relations. The authority is not good considering the writer.

Mr. Waterman has not brought up the matter of Mr. Taylor signing the call for the Gidding's Convention to dissolve the Union, but member of his own party.— We have heard it frequently, and the Press tries to explain it away, saying that he did not mean to do so, when he signed it.

Jas Clifford, of Waterloo, has fitted up his billiard room, at the old Wildasin stand in handsome style. An arch way now connects the billiard hall with the cigar stand, improving the appearance very much. Jim keeps everything neat and tidy, is pleasant and agreeable himself, and knows how to run things in good style. Those wishing to pass away time will find this a pleasant resort.

Do not fail to read the letter of a prominent Republican of this district on John Baker. This gives an insight of what kind of a man the Republican leaders want to send to Congress. Let the farmers and laborers prevent it by voting for Kelly next Tuesday.

The people want a change in the character of the men at Washington. Mr. Baker would be no change, for he is as crafty as any of them. By voting for Kelley you will send an honest man.

Mr. Curry, Republican, and Mr. Neff, Democratic, were to have a joint discussion at Indianapolis. Mr. Curry fail to appear. The Republican Press were very severe on Mr. Neff because he would not accept the challenge of Mr. Curry only for the two last weeks in the canvass. They said he was afraid to meet Mr. C. The facts now seem to indicate that it was the other way.

Let the farmer and Mechanic vote for an honest man, a farmer himself, for Congress and thus get a share of representations in Congress. There are now ten lawyers to one farmer in Congress.

By voting for Taylor for Representative you vote for a man that will vote for Mr. Pratt, for Senator, who is in favor of the Gagg Law, of the Civil Rights bill, that provides that white and negro children shall mingle together in our public schools, and you vote for the man who denounced naturalized citizens, last winwinter, in the Senate, as "Ignorant to the last degree, a pauper or a criminal, unacquainted with our laws, and not capable even speaking our language!"

Read the letter of ex-Treasurer Ryan on the first page. The Republicans have claimed that when they came into power two years ago the State was in debt and yet Mr. Ryan holds the receipt of the present Treasurer, for over $700,000.— That don't look much like being in debt. The fact is the extravagance of the last Legislature was most ruinious, and no possible amount of whitewashing can cover it up.

We hope our country friends will send in the names of their township candidates and be careful to spell all names correctly. Township tickets should be ordered early so that time can be taken to avoid error. We desire our friends to be careful because there is no doubt of the success of the entire Democratic ticket if the full vote is brought out and no inaccuracies occur to cause votes to be thrown out.

Mr. Baker, speaks at the Court House to night. In a sneaking way he put forth a challenge that he would divide the time with Mr. Kelly, ignoring the fact that he had been challenged by Mr. Kelly and had appointed a man to make the arrangements. That man never made any arrangements with Mr. Shutt, as was evidently the intention of Mr. Baker, and now Baker says if Mr. Kelly is present he will divide the time, well knowing that Mr. Kelly is in the other part of the district doing good work.

Prof Perkins closed his course of penmanship last Thursday evening to the entire satisfaction of all. He is a master hand at the business, and his system of teaching the art is a very superior one.— A committee consisting of D. D. Moody, Mary McNerny and A. R. Hoffman, made the following report of the progress made. Average per cent of whole school 862, Gents, 879, Ladies 842. Highest number by one scholar 2266. four scholars each 1700, one schlar 1500.

Bishop & Son of Spencerville are making a special effort to meet the demands made upon them in the dry goods trade. They have received a large and well selected stock just opened out and now ready for the inspection of the public, at the old Leighty stand. They are selling all the best prints at 8c a yard, and other goods away down low. They have increased their trade largely and seem to be the right men in the right place.

State Taxes—One farmer told us the other day that anybody could have his entire wheat crop, which was generally good, if they would pay his taxes. He says his land was assessed at more than he could sell it for for cash, and that his taxes had been largely increased in the last two years. Speaking of the State tax he said that it was simply an extortion upon the laboring class, and that an increase from 5 cents to 15 cents and the valuation at the same time about doubled, ought to be evidence enough to all thinking persons that there ought to be a change.

The Grangers are determined to buy goods as low as possible but they do not want a cheap, trashy article, because it don't cost much. The best is always the cheapest. Their object is to keep down extortion, to pay a reasonable price for everything, and this being the case they are respectfully referred to to the mammouth establishment in the Odd Fellows' building known as E. Vordermark & Sons where a large stock of Boots & Shoes are kept at the lowest prices. We ask our Granger friends to call and test the truth of this assertion.

Cigars best in town at Davenports.

The Press explains the accident to Mr. Kelly in this wise: "That Freeman was in the barn practicing upon a speech, and became so loud that the colt becoming frantic with fear, kicked him. This is certainly a very plausible theory. Certainly it is. The only chance Mr. Kelly has had to practice in speech making was in the barn or behind the plow, and now that a mule has kicked him we deem it unfair that the daddy of the animal should rise up and try to do the same.

The Lutheran Synod of Northern Indiana, held its last session in Constantine, Michigan, commencing on the 22nd of Sept. Rev. R. F. Dele was chosen President, Rev. L. Rice, Sec'y and Rev. E. W Erick, of this county, Treasurer. It was a most pleasant session, and the collections were quite liberal. The friends at Constantine gave a free excursion after adjournment, upon Corey Lake.

Rev E. W. Erick, S. P. Snyder and Levi Rice were selected as delegates to the general Synod, to be held at Williamsport next June. The next Synod is to be held at Spencerville in this county commencing on the 5th day of next Oct.

As Mr. Baker is to speak here tonight, will he please tell all about his splendid war record, how he fled, bought and died in journeying to the far west. We ask this because Mr. Kelly is so kindly spoken of as to his war record by the Republican Press, and we dont know what Mr. Baker claims in this direction. And while talking of the war will he state just how he tried to secure the seat of a soldier in the Legislature, while said soldier was in the army, between the two terms of the Legislature, for which said soldier was elected? Will he also tell us how he tried as a democrat to get office under Johnson, as Territorial Judge of Idaho, and was defeated. Perhaps he could tell us about being the attorney of railroad companies and labored in their defense against the people. Let us hear something on these subjects instead of prating of what he done when a boy. We want to know what he has done as a man if he ever was one.

We take the following communication from the Ligonier Banner, of last week, and from the tone, we should judge it was written by a republican. The News, at Butler tries hard to treat it contemptuously, but there is something in it that won't down at the bidding. It claims to be a chapter behind the scenes and contains more facts than people know generally. Give it a fair perusal and see how the game is being worked up.

Wilmington-tp, DeKalb Co. Ind.
September 25th, 1874.

Editor Banner—Being a reader of your excellent journal, I drop you a few lines as to political matters in this county, and will give you a chapter of things behind the scenes, which our local journals have failed for some reason, to bring before the public. I can endorse anything that may be considered fair in politics, but when schemes are placed on foot to further the ends of one or two individuals who are determined to get a controlling power in the party, and who have in the past proved recreant to every trust, I think it to the interest of all good men that they be exposed.

Among the candidates before the republican convention there were two citizens from Waterloo, Mr. Dickinson for Clerk, and Mr. Hague for Auditor. It was manifest that both could not be nominated, and the Clerk coming first it was fair to presume that Mr. D. had the inside track. But Mr. Hague, postmaster at Waterloo, was nominated for Auditor, and a few days thereafter resigned his position as postmaster, and strongly recommended Miss Ida Blair, a daughter of the General, as his successor. Had Mr. Dickinson been nominated for Clerk, Mr. Hague would have been compelled to stand aside, and the General would have failed in his designs. A litle item in the Waterloo Press signed by "Justice," exposed the whole affair, showing how Blair and Hague had been conniving together. To bolster up their side, Congressman Sayler is written to for a certificate that Mr. Hague did not make a recommendation. Mr. Sayler says that Hague's resignation was absolute and without reference to a successor. No one doubts that But then Mr. Sayler says: "Among the papers submitted was a letter from Hague stating that the character and capacity of Miss Blair was good.' What ought that to be called in common English? What more ought a recommendation to embody, than that which refers to capacity and character? Why was not the original letter submitted, instead of a synopsis of it? Because that letter explicitly and positively recommends Miss Blair of which fact proof can be furnished. There is no use denying the fact that Mr. Hague has joined fortunes with Gen. Blair, and is depending largely upon the General's influence for his election. What will be the result if Mr. Hague and Mr. Moss are elected? Is it not characteristic of the General that he will assume control of the Auditor's and Clerk's offices as he has in the matter of the post office? Do the citizens of DeKalb county desire this? We hope not. The past is indicative of what the future would develop.

Honesty,

John A. Provines, of Spencerville, is building a large two story brick building, the first of the kind in that town.

The Jones Truss sold by Davenport, no springs, no elastic. Parties in town using them speak highly of them.

The Laporte Argus says, "four laborers on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad took a handcar and went to Walkerton to attend a show last Monday night. On their way home they ran into a train of cars and the hand-car was smashed to pieces. At last accounts the men were all alive but it is hardly probable that any of them can recover. They were smashed up in a terrible manner. Dr. Higbey went down and took off one man's leg and made the other men as comfortable as possible

It may all be well enough to the editor of the Butler News to come into this county and after a few months residence make reckless charges without one iota of proof but the people who know the facts cannot be influenced by such. Mr. Waterman is slyly charged as not being in favor of voting another man or another dollar during the war in the Legislature. The charge is simply without foundation. At one time the general government did not pay her soldiers for eight months, and Mr Waterman being then in the Legislature, with others attempted to pass a bill requiring the State to advance this back pay to the Indiana soldiers, and had the Republican members not voted and broken up that body it might have been passed. During the war Mr. Waterman was active in clearing the quota of the township as his neighbors and Republican friends will remember. Although he did not consider himself as able-bodied as Mr Taylor, he did not deem it necessary when the draft commissioner informed all those who thought themselves unfit for military duty to report at Auburn for examination to comply with this request as did Mr. Taylor. Some people were very loyal, especially when there was any chance of escaping the draft. But when will this war business get over with, and when will the Republican party have done with it? In a hundred years from now shall we hear this and that Radical paper talking about the war? If so, Lord deliver us from that hundred years. Let us have a rest on this war business. We trust the News will be fair. Mr. Waterman has been in the county thirty seven years and has always been a good citizen, and has and will make as intelligent a representative as the county can produce. He never signed a call for a convention to see about dissolving the Union, as did Mr. Taylor, and as to war record he stands as fair as their own candidate.

BY [illegible].

Who's that a comin' up the path?
  Run, Betsy Jane, an' see!
I'll bet it's hateful old Miss Jones
  A comin' here to tea.
Miss Perkins, is it? Deary me!
  I'd ruther hear it thunder!
She's allers round a tattlin'!
  What brought her here, I wonder?

I hope she's only come to call,
  Don't ask her, dear, to stay;
For ef we urged her hard enough,
  She'd never go away.
Of all the tattlin' set I know,
  Miss Perkins beats 'em holler;
She's comin' hear to spy around,
  I'll bet a silver dollar!

She's got that old silk bunnit on
  It's older than the hills,
An' really looks ridiculous—
  All ruffles, tucks and frills!
Good gracious me! she's got her work;
  I'll hev to git my knittin'.
I s'pose you knew Bill Smith had give
  Her darter Ann the mitten?

[illegible] Miss Perkins, is that you?
  I'm desprit glad you've come,
For, as I sed to Betsy Jane,
  The house seems awful dumb.
Miss Perkins, take the rockin'-cheer,
  An', Betsy, take her bunnit,
Be sure you put it where the flies
  An' dust won't git upon it.

Sez I, not half an hour ago,
  Sez I to Betsy Jane,
I wonder where Miss Perkins is?—
  Here, Betsy, hand that skein—
Sez I, I hope she'll come to-day,
  If nothin's up to hinder.
She's comin' now, sez Betsy Jane,
  A lookin' out the winder.

Miss Perkins, take a pinch o' snuff;
  An' tell me all the news;
I haven't heerd 'em in so long
  I've almost had the blues.
Miss Johnson's got a new silk dress?
  Miss Perkins! wall, I never!
I wonder if she really thinks
  Her money'll last for ever?

Miss Perkins, yes! I was at church.
  Now, wa'n't you glad to hear
The preacher preach so plain on dress?
  It hit some folks so clear.
Miss Primrose colored like a beet—
  You know she wore a feather—
An' Sary Grimes was awful mad!
  It hit 'em both together!

I wonder if Squire Pettibone
  Hain't got a bran'-new wig?
I really do dislike that man—
  He feels so awful big!
You see him walkin' t'other night
  Along with Kath'rine Snyder?
Miss Perkins, that'll make a match,
  I'll bet a pint o' cider.

The deacon's son is waitin' on
  Miss Grimes' cousin Rose?
Why, no! I hadn't heard o' that.
  What for, do you suppose?
I hardly think he'll marry her;
  His father won't be willin'.
She's just as poor as poor can be—
  She isn't worth a shillin'.

The doctor's wife has got a boy?
  Wall, now, that's suthin' new.
I s'pose she'll name it arter him.
  I should, an' shouldn't you?
Of course you knew Mariar Smith
  Had named her darter Lily.
I'd name her Cabbage Hollyhock!
  That ain't one bit more silly!

Miss Perkins, what! Miss Blodgett lets
  Her girls play plays an' dance!
Well, I declare, that takes me down,
  An' beats the whole o' France!
I know one thing—my Betsy Jane
  Don't help 'em in their doin's,
I might as well jest pint her to
  The narrer road to ruin.

Miss Perkins, hev you heard about
  That fuss with Peleg Brown?
You hain't? Why, goodness gracious me!
  It's all about the town.
They think he cheats his customers
  A sellin' saleratus;
An' say they ketched his youngest son
  A stealin' green tomatoes.

Of course you've heerd the talk that's round
  About the Widow Hatch?
They say she's after Thomas Sweet,
  An' that 'twill be a match.
Her husban' h'ain't been dead six months,
  An' now she wants another.
She'd never be my darter-in-law
  If I was Thomas' mother!

Hev I heard of the weddin'? No!
  Who, underneath the sun?
John Wait and Huldy Robinson?
  Miss Perkins, you're in fun!
Why, he's as much as fifty-two,
  An' Huldy isn't twenty;
But then—we know the reason why—
  The old fool's cash is plenty!

Miss Perkins, lay your work aside
  An' hev a cup o' tea.
This cake of Betsey Jane's is nice;
  Jest try a piece an' see.
I used to like to cook an' bake,
  An' I knew how to du it.
An' Betsy Jane shall larn it tu;
  I'll eddicate her through it.

Miss Perkins, are you goin' now?
  One thing I'd like to know—
Go bring her bunnit, Betsy Jane—
  That's why you hurry so.
Your bunnit's jest as nice as new;
  I swan, it's right in fashion!
Them ruffles an' these gethers here,
  Are really very dashin'.

Oh, yes. Miss Perkins, I shall come.
  You must come down agin!
You haven't been here in a so long,
  It really is a sin.
Good arternoon—yes. Betsy Jane
  Shall come an' see your darter.
There! has she gone? I really hope
  She got what she was arter!

In all my life I never did
  See sich a tattlin' critter!
They'd ought to call her Scandalbones;
  I'm sure the name 'ud fit her.
I s'pose I must return her call;
But I wa'n't sociable at all.

DEATH OR MARRIAGE.

The ancient clock in Deacon Shermer's old-fashioned kitchen was slowly chiming the hour of nine. It was no smart toy, of the bronze or alabaster, but a tall, square, solid relic of the last century, looking not unlike a coffin case set on end in the corner—a clock that lasted through four generations, and, judging from appearances, was quite likely to last through several more. Deacon Shermer cherished the old heirloom with a sort of pride which he himself would scarcely have confessed to.

There was a great ruddy fire of chestnut in the red brick fireplace; and the candles in the brightly polished brass sticks were winking merrily from the high wooden mantel, where they shared the post of honor with a sea-shell and a couple of vases, each containing a fresh osage from the hedge that skirted the clover field behind the barn. At the window curtains of gaudy chintz shut out the tens of thousands of stars that were shining brightly on that autumnal night, and on the cozy rug of parti-colored rags a fat tortoise-shell cat was not the only inhabitant of the farm-house kitchen.

"Timothy," said Mary Shermer, decidedly, "if you don't behave yourself, I'll—"

What she would do Mary did not say; the sentence was terminated by a laugh that set the dimples around her mouth in motion, just as a beam of June sunshine plays across a cluster of ripe cherries.

Mary Shermer was just seventeen—a plump, rosy girl, with jet black hair, brushed back from a low forehead, and perfectly-arched eyebrows, that gave a bewitching expression of surprise to a pair of melting hazel eyes. She was rather dark; but the severest critic would not have found fault with the peach-like bloom upon her cheeks, and the dewy red of her full, daintily-curved lips. Evidently Mr. Timothy Marshall was quite satisfied with Mary's peculiar style of beauty.

"Come, Mary," said Tim, moving his chair where he could best watch the flush of the fire-light upon her face, and picking up the thread of the conversation where he had dropped it when it became necessary for Mary to bid him behave himself, "you might promise. It's 9 o'clock, and your father will soon be home."

"Promise what, Tim?" said Mary, demurely, fitting a square of red in her patchwork, and intently observing the effect.

"Nonsense, Mary! You know what very well. Promise to marry me before Christmas. I tell you what, Mary, it's all very well for you to keep putting a fellow off, but I can't stand it. What with your forbidding me the house, and that romantic Tom Stanley's coming here every Sunday night—"

Mary gave her pretty head a toss. "As if Mr. Stanley's coming here made any difference with my feelings!"

"No; but, Mary, it isn't pleasant, you know. I'm as good a man as Tom Stanley, if I don't own railroad shares and keep an account in the Hamiltonville Bank; and I love you, Mary, from the bottom of my heart. Now this matter lies between you and me only; no other person in the world has a right to interfere between us. Come—promise me." He held her both hands in his and looked earnestly in the liquid hazel eyes. "Do you love me, Mary?"

"You know I love you, Tim."

"Then we may just as well— Hush! what's that?"

There was a portentous sound of drawing bolts and rattling latches in the porch-room beyond, a scraping of heavy boots along the floor.

"O, Tim, it's father!"

"Suppose it is?"

"But he mustn't find you here, Tim. Hide yourself somewhere, do!"

"What nonsense, Mary!" said the young man, resolutely standing his ground. "I haven't come to steal his spoons. Why should I creep away like a detected burglar?"

"For my sake, Tim. If you ever loved me, do as I say. Not in that closet; it is close to his bedroom. Not through that window; it is nailed tight. He is coming. Here, Tim, quick!"

And, in the drawing of a breath, she had pushed Timothy Marshall into the square pendulum case of the tall clock, and turned the key upon him. It was not a pleasant place of refuge, inasmuch as his shoulders were squeezed on either side, and his head flattened against springs and wheels above, and the air was unpleasantly close; but Tim made the best of matters, and shook with suppressed laughter in his solitary prison cell.

"Well, a jolly scrape to be in!" were Tim's thoughts. "And no knowing when I'll be out of it. Mary's a shrewd little puss, however, and I can't do better than to leave the matter in her hands."

"So you haven't gone to bed yet, Mary!" said Deacon Shermer slowly unwinding the two yards of woolen scarf with which he generally encased his throat of an evening.

"Not yet, father," said Mary, picking up the scattered bits of patchwork, with a glowing cheek. "Did you have a pleasant meeting?"

"Well, yes," quoth the deacon, reflectively, sitting down before the fire, greatly to Mary's consternation; she had hoped he would have gone to bed at once, according to his usual custom. "It was tol'bly pleasant. Elder Huskler was there, and Elder Hodgkins, and—well, all the church folks pretty much. Why, how red your cheeks are, Mary. Tired, ain't you? Well, you needn't sit up for me, my dear; it must be getting late."

The deacon glanced mechanically round at the clock. Mary felt the blood grow cold in her veins. "Twenty minutes past nine! why, it must be later than that! Why, land o' Canaan! the old clock's stopped." The old clock had stopped; nor was it wonderful under the circumstances. "I wound it up this mornin', I'm sartin," said the deacon, very much disturbed. "It never served me such a trick afore in all the years it stood there. Your Aunt Jane used to say it was the sign of a death or a marriage in the family before the year was out."

There was a suppressed sound like a chuckle behind the clock case as Deacon Shermer fumbled on the shelf for the clock key.

"These springs must be out of order somehow," said the deacon, decisively. "How scared you look, child! There ain't no cause of being scared. I don't put no faith in your Aunt Jane's superstition. Where in the name of all possessed is that key? I could ha' declared I left it in the case."

"Isn't it on the shelf, father?" asked Mary, guiltily, conscious that it was snugly reposing in the pocket of her gingham dress.

"No, nor tain't in my pocket, either."

And down went the deacon, stiffly enough, on his knees, to examine the floor, lest, perchance, the missing key might have fallen there.

"Well, I never knowed anything so strange in all my life," said the deacon.

"It is strange," faltered hypocritical Mary.

"I'll have a regular search to-morrow," said Shermer. "It must be somewhere around."

"Yes, it must," said Mary tremulously.

"Only," the deacon went on, slowly, resuming his place before the fire, "I kind o' don't like to have the clock stand still a single night. When I wake up, you know, it seems like a sort o' talking to me in the stillness." The deacon looked thoughtfully at the fiery back-log. Mary fidgeted uneasily about the room, straightening table-covers, setting back chairs, and thinking, "O, if he would only go to bed!"

As he sat there his eyelids began to grow heavy, and his head to nod solemnly. Mary's eyes lightened up with a sparkle of hope.

"Child," he said, suddenly, straightening himself up in the stiff-backed chair, "you'd better go to bed. I'll sit up a while longer, till the logs burn out."

"But, father, I am not sleepy."

"Go to bed, my child," reiterated the deacon, with good-humored authority that brooked no opposition; and Mary crept out of the room, ready to cry with anxiety and mortification.

"If Tim will only keep quiet a little while longer," she thought, sitting on the stairs where the newly-risen moon streamed in chilly splendor. "Father sleeps so soundly, and he is sure to sleep in his chair. I could steal in and release him as quietly as possible."

She sat there, her plump fingers interlaced, and her eyes fixed dreamily on the floor, while all the time her ears were strained to their utmost capacity to catch every sound in the kitchen beyond. Hark! was it the wail of the wind? or was it something to her literally nearer and dearer? Yes; she could not be mistaken; it was actually a snore.

Mary rose softly to her feet with renewed hope. Surely now was the accepted time. Noiselessly as the fleeting shadow she crossed the hall, opened the kitchen door, and stole across the creaking boards of the floor. The candles were burning out, but the shifting luster of the fire-light revealed her father nodding before the fire, with closed eyes and hands hanging by his sides.

With a heart that beat quick and fast like the strokes of a miniature hammer, she drew the key from her pocket, and proceeded, in spite of the nervous trembling of her fingers, to fit it into the lock. So absorbed was she in her task that she never noticed the sudden cessation of heavy breathing—never saw the deacon start suddenly into wakefulness around him. Love is blind, and, equally true, it is deaf. The deacon rose up quietly with a shrewd twinkle in his eyes, and Mary gave a little frightened shriek as a hand fell softly on her arm, possessing itself quietly of the key.

"Let me help," said Deacon Shermer.

"Father, I—I found the key," faltered Mary.

"Found the key, eh?" returned the deacon. "Well, that's lucky; and now we can find out what's the matter with the clock."

Mary's heart throbbing so wildly a moment or two ago, seemed to absolutely stand still, as Deacon Shermer turned the key and opened the tall door of the clock case.

"Hal—lo!" ejaculated Deacon Shermer, as Mr. Timothy Marshall tumbled laughingly into the room. "So you was the matter with the clock, eh?"

"Yes, sir," said Tim, composedly; "I hope I have not seriously interfered with the working of it."

"You have seriously interfered with me!" said the deacon, waxing indignant. "What do you mean, sir, by hiding in my house like a thief?"

"Indeed! indeed! father!" cried Mary, bursting into tears, "it was not his fault. He did not want to hide, but I put him there."

"You did, eh? And may I ask what for?"

"Father," faltered Mary, irreverently, "I love him and he loves me."

"Is that any reason why he should hide in the clock case, miss?"

"No—but—father! I can never marry Mr. Stanley. He is so soft, and I—" Mary's tears finished the sentence for her. The deacon looked down (not unkindly) on her bowed head and the tender arm that supported it. Apparently the course of true love, roughly though it ran, was overwhelming all his worldwise arrangements in its tide.

"And so you two young folks really think you love each other?" said the deacon, meditatively.

"I love her with all my heart and soul," said Tim Marshall, earnestly. "I am not rich, I know, but I can work for her."

"And I can work for myself, too, father," interposed Mary, with tears in her eyes that shone like softened stars.

"And you said yourself, sir," went on Tim, "that the stopping of the clock meant either a marriage or death. Of course we do not want any deaths, so don't you think the most sensible thing we can do is to help on a marriage as soon as possible?"

The deacon laughed, in spite of himself.

"It's late," he said, "come around to-morrow morning, and we'll talk about it. No, Mary, I am not angry with you child. I suppose young folks will be young folks, and there's no use trying stop them!"

"And the deacon re-hung the pendulum and set the iron tongue of the old clock ticking again.

"Tim Marshall paused on the front step to whisper to Mary:

"What shall it be, Mary?—a death or a marriage?"

And she in return whispered, "A marriage, I hope."

"My darling!" said Tim, "it's worth passing a lifetime behind the clock case to feel as I do now!"

Transfusion of Lamb's Blood.

There are some interesting experiments in progress now in this city in the transfusion of lamb's blood into human blood, particularly in cases of chronic anemia. Dr. Settle, under direction of Dr. Dawson, has made several trials at the Good Samaritan Hospital. He has also made use of the expedient outside. In one instance he transferred eight ounces of blood from a living lamb to a man. The connection is made between the lamb's neck and the patient's arm, and the blood of the lamb passed through short tubes—glass in the lamb and silver in the patient—connected by a rubber tube. Shortly after the blood reaches the patient—say thirty minutes—it manifests its presence in the circulation by causing a severe chill. Then, as the new blood acts upon the nerve centers in the brain and spine, there comes a fever. It is nearly three centuries since this was first practiced in Europe. In this country it was never practiced until this year, and quite recently this year.—Cincinnati Commercial.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS was invited to the literary dinner recently given by the Lord Mayor of London, and replied as follows: "My Lord, I thank you for having thought of me; but you should understand that I cannot go to dine in a country which authorizes the literature of M. Vermersch and forbids mine." Vermersch was one of the worst of the literary Bohemians who wrote up the Commune, and is now a fugitive in London.

Something About the Hotel Business of New York.

The Fifth Avenue, including stores, rents for $200,000. The lessees pay taxes, assessments and repairs—a total of about $250,000. The average annual profits of this house since its opening have been about $250,000. Twenty-five years ago the ground was offered on a ninety-nine years lease at $500 per annum. The lots on which this building stands could have been bought in 1858 for $3,000 per lot. It accommodates 650.

The Windsor is leased for ten years at $125,000 per annum, including the whole building, which cost over $1,000,000. The land it occupies is valued at $800,000. This is the last great hotel opened to the public. It is superb and complete in all its appointments, and already enjoys a world-wide reputation. It is to-day the finest hotel in New York, and Mme. Christine Nilsson, who makes it her home, and whose experience in both hemispheres is very extensive, says, "It's the finest hotel in the world." It accommodates 525.

The Gilsey rents for $85,000, including stores. It is an admirably conducted house on the European plan. It accommodates 200.

The St. Nicholas rental is $95,000, without stores. One year this house netted $400,000 profits. It accommodates 600.

The Metropolitan rental is $105,000, which includes several stores. It accommodates 325.

The Hoffman rental is $74,000. It accommodates 225.

The Brunswick is kept upon the European plan. The rental is $85,000. It accommodates 225.

The St. James has recently passed into the hands of Senator Jones, of Nevada, who is fitting it up, regardless of cost, for one of his kinsmen, Mr. Jones, of the Hoffman House. It accommodates 225.

The Brevoort, Clarendon, Everett and Albemarle are all very successful. The proprietors, commencing in some cases with little or no means, are now all wealthy.

The Grand Central comes under the head of second-class hotels; its rental is about $80,000, without stores.

The Astor rental is $75,000, without stores. It accommodates 325. Its restaurant and bar's gross receipts average $800 daily.

There are a large number of smaller hotels in New York, well managed and generally doing well, such as the St. Cloud, Sturtevant, Coleman, etc.

Brooklyn, with its 400,000 inhabitants, does not boast of a single hotel, depending upon New York to supply this demand.

Jersey City has one hotel, Taylor's. The bar receipts of this house are larger than those of any other in the country.

The entire hotel accommodation for guests in New York is about 6,000.—New York World.

How a Woman Was Deceived by Her Husband.

The Marysville (Cal.) Appeal is responsible for the following: "We hear of a case of cool-headed and systematic deception which is reported to have been perpetrated in this city a short time ago, and which is too good to be lost. A saving and prudent wife, after much urging, induced her husband to save part of his wages by depositing $20 a month with her. The arrangement promised to become a grand financial success. Every month the faithful husband handed over $20 to his good wife, who carefully laid it away in a safe place. Month after month rolled on until the $20 pieces aggregating $2,000 had accumulated, when the wife thought it would be wise to deposit the same in the savings bank. Accordingly one morning the lady unearthed her pile of golden twenties and walked down to the Marysville Savings Bank. On entering the institution she laid them upon the counter with much satisfaction, congratulating herself upon the fact that the interest on the deposit would in a few years amount to quite a sum, and one worth having in case of misfortune and bad luck in life. But then came the denounment. The cashier readily discovered the pecularity of the coin. The $20 pieces were worthless imitations of the genuine coin. The true fact in the case at once flashed across the mind of the good woman. Her husband had spent his wages, and in order to fullfill his promise and keep up his monthly deposits had purchased a lot of imitation $20 pieces known as "spiel markes." How the matter was settled in the family, being of a domestic and private nature, we have not been inquisitive enough to ascertain, and leave for all to imagine."

His "Small-Pox."

The New York correspondent of the Boston Journal writes: "One of our railroads runs by the county buildings. Prisoners, paupers, and the diseased are transported often on the street cars to save expense. This practice creates great indignation. So far all protests have been in vain. The other day the conductor was collecting fares from a crowded load. A foreign person, poorly dressed, and with an eruptive face, handed up his money. In answer to the question, 'Do you go through?' which means do you go beyond the city line, he said: 'I have got de small pox do.' 'Have you got the small-pox?' said the astonished conductor. 'Yes, I have got de small pox do.' The passengers came to their feet; women screamed, and the excitement was intense. 'Come, get out of this car; you can't ride here,' said the official. The unfortunate made for the front platform. He was hustled out of the car and nearly pitched headlong into the street. He recovered himself, and started for the front of the car. The driver took the car-hook and threatened to brain him if he got on. The poor fellow kept up with the horses, shouting, 'I'll go; give me my small pox, give me my pox, give me my pox,' pointing to a small 2-foot square chest standing on end behind the driver. The mystery was explained. The honest German wanted to pay for his small box on the car as well as his own fare. The conductor apologized and a seat was offered to the man. But he had had enough of that company. He refused all invitations to ride, shouldered his 'small pox,' and trudged on foot to the Almshouse."

The Country Hoss Jockey.

For a red hot [illegible] to hunt kreashun clues to find an equal to the country hoss jockey.

He is most allwuss a man ov pleasant temperament and urbane manners, vain ov his opinyuns, often ov more fancy than judgment, and quick to decide.

He has but little real affeckshun for a hoss, and only luvs him for the cheat that is in him.

He is alwuss reddy to trade for ennything, from a yerling colt to the cavelry hoss that Gen. Washington rode at the battle ov Brandywine.

He never knows when he gits cheated, and invariably beleaves the last nag he got is the best one he ever owned.

He is not bothered with enny conshence when it cums to a trade, and would lay out a traveling preacher in a swop just as quick as he would his own brother, and do it without enny malice, but just for the honor ov the profession.

He allwuss fully beleaves he kan look rite thru a hoss from top to toe, but thare iz no one gits cheated oftener, or wuss, than he dux.

His cunning disarms him, and often when he thinks he iz fairly trading hiz opponent klean out ov a hoss, the other fellow iz not only trading him out ov a hoss, but a harness into the bargain.

There ain't a village in America ov 200 voters but what has its perennial hoss jockey, who kan be found at enny time at the village inn, reddy to "odd or even" for a whisky toddy, or swop a spavined pelter for a wind-broken, cribbiting rantee.

I never knu one ov this fraternity to git ritch, and i never knu one yet but what fully beleaved there was more munny in it than in enny legitimate bizzness.

I dont kno whi it iz that a man kan swop cows and be pious, or kan trade oxen and be a good deakon, or even negoshiate dogs and be looked upon az virtenous, but when he takes up the hoss swop enterprize, if he kant cheat he aint happy.

I never hav seen a hoss jockey yet who waz honest from principle; i hav known them, once in a while, to be honest from policy.

The man who is simply honest from policy needs more watching than a hive ov bees who are gitting reddy to swarm.

A Classical Revival.

Curious to relate, from the conclusion of several surgeons in the German army, that detriment to health and even death itself have resulted from the practice of wearing leather shoes in wet weather, some of the scientific societies of the Continent have recommended the manufacture of wooden shoes for soldiers, outdoor laborers, and others who are obliged to be abroad without regard to the elements. An experienced workman from France was a short time since called to Germany to superintend the manufacture of wooden shoes on an extensive scale in the latter country. These are represented as being light and easy to wear, and are provided with a small cushion within the upper side, to obviate any pressure on that part of the foot; they are also said to be of neat and pleasing appearance, blackened or varnished; are made large enough to accommodate comfortable stockings, and are furnished with leather straps.

The Strength of Metals.

The experiments of scientists have demonstrated the following facts respecting the strength of certain materials: Gold may be hammered so that it is only one three hundred-and-sixty thousandth of an inch thick. An iron bar would support its own weight if stretched out to a length of 3½ miles. A bar of steel was once made which would support its own weight if extended to a length of 13½ miles. Bunker Hill Monument might be built more than a mile in height without crushing the stones at its base. When bars of iron are stretched until they break, those which are the strongest increase in length less than the weaker ones. A piece of wood having the breadth and thickness of three inches, and the length of four feet, if supported at its ends, would be bent one millionth of an inch by a weight of three pounds placed in the center, and a weight of one-tenth of an ounce would bend it one seven-millionth of an inch.

THE annual report of the Chief of Police of London shows some interesting statistics of that immense city. It requires 9,883 policemen to protect property, life and morals. There were 73,857 arrests made last year. For assaults, etc., 9,639; burglary, 328; larceny (serious offenses), 498; petty larceny by servants, 1,199; beggars, 2,753; receivers of stolen goods, 219; prostitutes, 5,656. Dogs apprehended, 10,150. There were 2,513 persons injured in the streets, 125 were killed. Five hundred and seventy-three fires occurred within the year. Eleven thousand and seventy-seven public vehicles were licensed, 14,136 articles were taken to the lost property office by honest cab-drivers. There are 800 temperance cab-drivers in London. Eight new police stations have been opened. One hundred and fifty-four new streets and squares were built, covering 26 miles and 800 yards. Seven thousand six hundred and eighty-nine houses were erected, and 593 houses of ill-fame suppressed. There has been a great decrease in crime and immorality, which the report attributes to the Intoxicating Liquors Licensing act.

SOME days ago a desperate young man aged five years, in Worcester, Mass., darkly solicited a temporary loan of six cents from his pa, and soon afterwards disappeared from home. At about the same hour an imprudent young girl, aged also five years, of the same city, took advantage of her ma's temporary absence to don her best dress, pack the remainder of her attainable wardrobe in a carpet-bag, and likewise leave the domestic hearth. The desperate young man and the imprudent young girl met at the cars and got upon the train, for it was an elopement; but when the heartless conductor came around for the tickets the lover's six cents exasperated him to unmanly fury, and the two agonized elopers were put off the cars to make their way ignominiously back to home and parental chastisement.

Opportunity to Try an Organ Before [illegible]

Many a person is half persuaded that a Cabinet Organ [illegible] be a capital thing for his family; worth much more than its cost. Yet they are not sure that it would be permanently valued, but fear that after a few months' use the family would tire of it, and so it would prove a poor investment. The Mason & Hamlin Organ Co. now offer their famous Cabinet Organs on terms which will satisfy all such. They will rent an organ with privilege of purchase. The party hiring may try it as long as he pleases, paying only the rent for it while so doing. If he concludes to purchase within a year, all the rent he has paid is allowed and deducted from the price of the organ.

WHEN people go out turkey shooting, they should make themselves moderately certain of the kind of game at which they aim. Inconvenient consequences are likely to follow mistakes, as in the case of two men of Michigan, Stoddart and Carver by name. After separating, they made use of a call to attract the attention of the game. In a short time each hunter heard an answer to his call, and each approached the spot where the sound came from. Carver was the better hunter, for he kep himself concealed, while at the same time he observed a dark object moving in the bushes. He took deliberate aim and fired. When he ran forward to secure the turkey, he found that his bullet had perforated the head of his friend Stoddart, who died in a few minutes. People who cannot distinguish human beings from turkeys ought not to be trusted with a gun.

THE Marquis of Ripon, whose accession to Roman Catholicism is the present sensation of Europe, was born in 1827, and has been successively Under Secretary of State for War, Secretary of State for War, Secretary of State for India, and President of the Queen's Council. His rank as a statesman is very high, and he has many titles of nobility besides that of the marquisate, to which he was raised in 1871.

Scrofula.
SCROFULOUS HUMORS.

IF VEGETINE will relieve pain, cleanse, purify and cure such diseases, restoring the patient to perfect health after trying different physicians, many remedies, suffering for years, is it not conclusive proof, if you are a sufferer, you can be cured? Why is this medicine performing such great cures? It works in the blood, in the circulating fluid. It can truly be called the Great Blood-Purifier. The great source of disease originates in the blood; and no medicine that does not act directly upon it, to purify and renovate, has any just claim upon public attention. When the blood becomes lifeless and stagnant, either from change of weather or climate, want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause, the VEGETINE will renew the blood, carry off the putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body. The conviction is, in the public mind as well as in the medical profession, that the remedies supplied by the Vegetable Kingdom are more safe, more successful, in the cure of disease, than mineral medicines. VEGETINE is composed of roots, barks and herbs. It is pleasant to take, and perfectly safe to give an infant. In Scrofula the VEGETINE has performed wonderful cures where many other remedies have failed, as will be seen by the following unsolicited testimonial:

A Walking Miracle.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—Though a stranger, I want to inform you what VEGETINE has done for me.

Last Christmas, Scrofula made its appearance in my system—large running ulcers appearing on me as follows: One on each of my arms, one on my thigh, which extended to the seat, one on my head, which eat into the skull bone, one on my left leg, which became so bad that two physicians came to amputate the limb, though, upon consultation, concluded not to do so, as my whole body was so full of Scrofula they deemed it advisable to cut the sore, which was painful beyond description, and there was a quart of matter run from this one sore. The physicians all gave me up to die, and said they could do no more for me. Both of my legs were drawn up to my seat, and it was thought if I did get up again I would be a cripple for life.

When in this condition I saw VEGETINE advertised, and commenced taking it in March, and followed on with it until I had used 18 bottles, and this morning I am going to plow corn, a well man. All my townsmen say it is a miracle to see me round walking and working.

In conclusion I will add, when I was enduring such great suffering from that dreadful disease, Scrofula, I prayed to the Lord above to take me out of this world, but as VEGETINE has restored to me the blessings of health, I desire more than ever to live, that I may be of some service to my fellow man, and I know of no better way to aid suffering humanity than to inclose you this statement of my case, with an earnest hope that you will publish it, and it will afford me pleasure to reply to any communication which I may receive therefrom. I am, sir, very respectfully, WILLIAM PAYN.

Execution of an Extraordinary Murderer.

[London Cor. New York Graphic.]

An extraordinary murderer was executed a few days ago within the walls of York Castle. His name was William Jackson. He was a soldier, and he was hung for the murder of his sister, whom he killed, although he loved her, and for no other reason than that she insisted on going with him to keep him out of bad company. He made the following confession a few hours before his death:

I left Carthorpe for Kirklington at ten minutes past five o'clock with my sister. We went to Kirklington together, and when we got to Kirklington we went to Mrs. Husthwaite's and stayed there for half an hour, and then left for Ripon, my sister saying she would set me on the way. When we got to Kirklington Church I told her she had better go back again, as it was getting rather late. She said, "No; I'll go a little further yet." She went with me till we got to the other side of the barn field. She then wanted to go with me altogether. I said, "No; it's no use you talking, Lizzie; you shan't go with me at present." But I said she could come to me when I got work. She said, "No; I will go with you now; for when you get away you'll never write any more." So I told her, "Yes, I will, you needn't fear;" but she said, "No, I will go with thee; for I know what thou is when thou gets away." So I said "good night" to her. She commenced crying when I shook hands to part with her. So when I shook hands with her and turned my back to go away from her, walking as quick as ever I could, she ran after me. Two men passed us while this was taking place. When she got up to me I turned around and said, "Now, Lizzie, you had better go back." She says to me, "I will not go back; wherever thou goest I'll go with thee." So I made no more to do. I opened my black bag and took out my razor, and cut my sister Lizzie's throat. She dropped on the footpath, and I lifted her off. She muttered, "O, Will," I think, and then I ran away. My hand was bloody when I opened the gate close by. I put the razor in the hedge on the left hand side of the road, about a mile from Well, on the Masham road. I am very sorry for what I have done, and cannot express my remorse as I should like. I loved her dearer than myself, and I hope that God will forgive me; and I am very sorry for not confessing this great sin before this.

The Evidences of Spiritualism.

Mr. Alfred Wallace's "Defense of Modern Spiritualism," which has now been published in book form, ends with a summary of the mental and physical manifestations which he regards as proof of the reality of spiritual interference in the affairs of this world. This summary may be condensed into the following:

PHYSICAL:

1. Simple phenomena, such as the production of sound, the movements of bodies, the alteration of their weight, and the release of mediums from bonds, "even from welded iron rings, as has happened in America."

2. Chemical. Iron at a white heat has been held, and live coals have been swallowed, without injury.

3. Writing and drawing by non-human agencies.

4. Musical phenomena. Locked pianos have been played upon. Original music of very high character has been produced.

5. Spiritual forms. These have been sparks, luminous globes, hands, faces, and whole figures, clad in drapery. The human figures are visible and tangible.

6. Photographs of spirits. These have been taken under all possible precautions against fraud.

MENTAL:

1. Automatic writing. This often conveys accurate records of the past or prophesies of the future. It is sometimes in a language unknown to the medium.

2. Clairvoyance.

3. Trance-speaking. This sometimes surpasses the efforts of the ablest living man. This has happened when the mediums were illiterate and stupid.

4. Impersonation. This corresponds to the Biblical stories of possession by evil spirts.

5. Healing. Sometimes the touch of a medium cures. Sometimes the medium locates the disease and prescribes the right medicine.

The original summary is much longer and comparatively stronger. The evidence for it is given in the body of the book. Mr. Wallace's position, as the peer of Darwin, would entitle him to candid and courteous audience, even if wrote merely on hearsay. But he has himself investigated these facts. So has Prof. Crookes. So has Mr. S. C. Hall. So have many other scientific men. It is foolish to pooh-pooh such statements, so supported. They merit intelligent discussion. The famous Committee of the London Dialectical Society searched into the phenomena of Spiritualism, found that some were undeniable, but could come to no conclusion. Certainly this puzzling problem is well worthy of the earnest attention of the leaders of thought. Sneering at its facts will not change them into lies. They are to many people the most convincing proofs of immortality.—Chicago Tribune.

Horrible Murder in Calcutta.

A most atrocious murder has been committed in Calcutta. In April last, a goldsmith, both by caste and trade, living in Amherst street, gave his daughter, a girl about 9 years old, in marriage. She remained at her father-in-law's till a short time ago, when she returned to her own father's house. The wife of an opposite neighbor, who is also a goldsmith by trade, asked the girl to come over and show her wedding jewels. The two families were on friendly terms, and the girl, with her mother's permission, decked herself with the jewels, said to be worth many hundred, or, as some assert, a thousand rupees, and went over, with female pride, to exhibit to her friends her nuptial presents. She had not been there long, however, when she was seized, her throat cut, and her body, being stripped of all valuables, was buried, in a standing position, in a workshop of the house, the inmates of which consist of the owner, his wife, and two workmen. When the police, on getting information of the murder, went to the house and questioned these persons, they one and all declared that the murdered child had never come to the house, and in this statement they resolutely persisted till the body was exhumed.

POPULAR FALLACY AND DECEPTIONS.—It is an infirmity of man to cling to the teachings of a past generation, and to stubbornly resist the light of reform and progress. Health reform and temperance growth are jealously watched over by the poison bitters compounders. One great prevailing deception of the present age is the impression that every human biped of either sex must be stimulated, and the poisoned chalice is labeled "Medicated Bitters," the better to palliate their use and prolong the epidemic. One of the most zealous workers to cure this malady, DR. JOSEPH WALKER, inventor and proprietor of the famed CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, believes in making bitters that are "true medicine," and advises the sick man to swallow a draught that will wash out the leprosy of his disease. In this faith he is steadfast, and his VINEGAR BITTERS, though a contradiction to the general character of all other bitters, are, as a great success and Life Vitaliser, evidence of one popular fallacy and corrected. 8

A Famous Medical Institution.

[From the Chicago Times.]

"The name of Dr. R. V. Pierce has become as familiar to the people all over the country as household words. His wonderful remedies, his pamphlets and books, and his large medical experience have brought him into prominence and given him a solid reputation. The Times, in the present issue, presents a whole-page communication from Dr. Pierce, and our readers may gain from it some idea of the vast proportions of his business and the merits of his medicines. He has at Buffalo a mammoth establishment, appropriately named "The World's Dispensary," where patients are treated, and the remedies compounded. Here nearly a hundred persons are employed in the several departments, and a corps of able and skilled physicians stand ready to alleviate the sufferings of humanity by the most approved methods. These physicians are in frequent consultation with Dr. Pierce, and their combined experience is brought to bear on the successful treatment of obstinate cases. The doctor is a man of a large medical experience, and his extensive knowledge of materia medica has been acknowledged by presentations of degrees from two of the first Medical Colleges in the land. How meritorious his works are may be inferred from the fact that his pamphlets and books have been translated into German, Spanish, and other foreign languages, and have been in heavy demand. As an evidence of the business of the dispensary, it is only necessary to state that for the quarter ending March 31, 1874, the sum expended for postage alone, not to speak of that paid on newspapers received, was $2,080.70. A perusal of the communication will be found interesting reading, and will show to what proportions a medical institution can grow under able management and well-directed effort."

If you would patronize Medicines, scientifically prepared by a skilled Physician and Chemist—use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Golden Medical Discovery is nutritious tonic, alterative, or blood cleansing, and an unequaled cough remedy; Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seed, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic; Favorite Prescription—a remedy for debilitated females; Extract of Smart-Weed, a magical remedy for Pain, Bowel Complaints, and an unequaled Liniment for both human and horse-flesh; while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in Head," ever given to the public.

HOW THE MONEY GOES!—After Nov. 30, it will be easy to see how the money goes, for then the drawing will take place of the Public Library of Kentucky, and at that Grand Gift Concert $2,500,000 in cash will be given away to ticket-holders. The fortunate holder of the ticket drawing the first prize will walk off with $250,000; of the second prize, $100,000; of the third prize, $75,000; of the fourth prize, $50,000; of the fifth prize, $25,000, etc., until 20,000 grand cash prizes shall all have been distributed.

THE HEADQUARTERS IN THE WEST, for the trade in Cloaks, Cloakings, Trimmings and Underwear, is J. W. Griswold & Co.'s, 54 and 56 Madison street, Chicago. Twenty-five years' experience in their specialty has taught them the wants of Western dealers as to quality, styles and prices. There is no house equal to this in the West.

TO HAVE good health the liver must be kept in order. Sanford's Liver Invigorator has become a staple family medicine. Purely vegetable—Cathartic and Tonic—for all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels; clears the complexion, cures sick-headache. Shun imitations. Try Sanford's Liver Invigorator.

ELMWOOD Collars are now all the rage in society. Elmwood Collars make the homeliest man look stylish. Elmwood Collars fit the neck beautifully. It beats all how closely the Elmwood Collar imitates linen.—Philadelphia Evening Star.

CHILL CURE!—SAFE AND SURE.—DR. Wilhoft's Tonic is curative and protective. It will cure Chills and protect from further attacks. Its reputation is established. Its composition is simple and scientific. It contains no poison. It acts promptly, and its effects are permanent. It is cheap, because it saves doctors' bills. It is harmless, speedy in action and delightful in its effects. Try it and prove all that's said. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

THE SALE of Rathbone, Sard & Co.'s stoves is immense. Their cook and heating stoves are universally popular in the West.

The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly chin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxurious tresses, they become irresistible.

Fell from a Railroad Car, and nearly broke his neck. Pat picked him up, rubbed him with Mexican Mustang Liniment, and sent him on by the next train. Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions, lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel-plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

On Everybody's Tongue.—Eulogiums of the great National Regenerator of Health, PLANTATION BITTERS, are on everybody's tongue. This gratuitous viva voce advertising is better than all paid-for puffing to which the owners of bogus bitters are obliged to resort. It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

AMERICAN MEAT AND VEGETABLE CHOPPER

"SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD."

An Improved Meat and Vegetable Chopper to take the place of the old Knife and Tray in preparing the various articles of food which require chopping, such as Sausage, Mince Meat, Salads, Hash, Fish, Fruit and Vegetables of various kinds, has come to be considered as much of a necessity in every well conducted household as a Clothes Wringer or Cooking Stove, while for Hotels, Bakeries, Restaurants and Public Institutions where large quantities of food are required such a machine is absolutely indispensable.

Of the many inventions designed for the purpose, the only one which has stood the test of time and proved a perfect success is the "American," of which more than 60,000 have been sold, and five years' constant use has proved their superiority over all other Choppers. They save their cost in labor every year, and so great has the demand for them become that the annual sales now amount to more than three times that of all other Family Choppers combined—a fact which is sufficient evidence of their superior merit.

These Choppers are made in seven different sizes—four sizes for Family use and three sizes for Butchers—and are sold by the principal dealers in Hardware, House Furnishing Goods and Agricultural Implements throughout the country.

I regard it as the best Ague remedy I know of and have since sold it to my customers with great success. It always attends strictly to business, and is harmless so far as I have observed." Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Viscera Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Full Days Work.

Mr. N——, of Oxford, don't object to having a hired man do full d y's work at least we should judge so from the following:

A short time ago a man went to his place for work. Mr. M——set him to plowing around a forty acre field. After he plowed faithfully all day, until the sun was about half an hour high, he expressed his opinion that it was about time to quit.

'Oh, no,' said Mr. M——"you plow around six or eight times more just as well as not.

So the hired man plowed around six or eight times, then went to the house, took care of his team, milked nine cows, ate his supper and found two o'clock staring him in the face from the old time piece.

Said the hired man to Mrs. M.——Where is Mr. M——?

The good woman answered. He has retired; do you wish to see him?

He replied he did. After being conducted to the bed room, he said Mr M.——where is the ax.

Why, said Mr M——what do you want with the ax?

Why, said the the hired man. I thought you would like me to split wood till breakfast is ready.

The New York Platform.

The following platform was unanimously adopted by the New York State Democratic Convention on the 16th of September. It certainly is the most concise and in many respects the most admirable platform we have ever seen. It was reported by Horatio Seymour:

"First gold and silver, the only legal tender, and no currency inconvertible into coin.

Second—Steady step toward specie payments; no step backward.

Third—Honest payments of the public debt in coin and sacred preservation of the public faith.

Fourth—Revenue reform, Federal taxation for revenue only; no government partnership with protected monopolies.

Fifth—Home rule, to limit and localized most zealously the few powers intrusted to public servants, municipal State and Federal; no centralization.

Sixth—Equal and exact justice to all men; no partial legislation no partial taxation.

Seventh—A free press; no gag laws!

Ninth—Official accountability, enforced by better civil and criminal remedies; no private use of public funds by public officers.

Tenth—Corporation chartered by the State always supervisable by the State in the interests of the people.

Eleventh—The party in power to be responcib'e for all legislation while in power.

Twelfth—The Presidency a public rust, not a private perquisite. No 3rd term.

Thirteenth—Economy in public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened.

The Democrats of New York, in convention assembled, recognizing the independence and patriotism of the Liberal Republicans, who, preferring principals to party, shall unite with them in opposing the present State and National administrations, commend to their support and to the approval of all honest and independent persons the foregoing platform and nominees of this convention"

General Andrew Jackson, ex-President of the United States, when prostrated with sickness in 1845, received a letter from the corresponding Secretary of the National Institute, refering to gift of a Roman sarcophagus, intended as a mark of honor to the General and to this he replied in a letter containing such noble and pious sentiments that it cannot be too wildely read:

I cannot," write the General, "consent that my moral body shall be laid in a repository prepared for an Emperor or a King—my Republican feelings and principles forbid it—the simplicity of our system of government forbids it. Every monument erected to prepetuate the memory of our heroes and statesmen ought to bear evidence of the economy and simplicity of our Republican institutions and the plainness of our Republican citizens, who are the sovereigns of this glorous Union, and whose virtue is to propetuate it. True virtue cannot exist where pomp and parade are the governing passions. It can only dwell with the people, the great laboring and producting classes that for mthe bone and sinew of our confederacy. For these reasons I cannot accept the honor you and the President and Directors of the National Institute intended to bestow. I have prepared a humble repository for my mortal body beside that wherein lies my beloved wife where, without any pomp or parade, I have requested, when my God calls me to sleep with my fathers, to be laid, for both of us there to remain until the last trumpet sounds that calls to the dead to judgment, when we, I hope, shall rise together, clothed with the heavenly body promised to all who believe in our glorious Redeemer, who died for us that we might live, and by whose atonement I hope for a blessed immortality."

It has recently been proposed to remove the remains of President Jackson to the State Capital in Nashville, Tennessee, but it would seem almost sacrilege to do so in the face of the above letter.

Cows and Bells.

A cow is a useful animal."

Cows give milk—and the milk of human kindness is a mighty good thing to have in well regulated families

Cows eat lots of grass and hay, and these things cost lots of money.

Cows also get into potato patches and cornfields and provoke the wrath of quiet and orderly christians.

Cows are generally considered domestic animals, and they are often so thoroughly domestic and quiet that they won't leave your best flower bed even though you gently heave stones after them.

This kind of domesticity is not appreciable.

Cows are of various colors though their good qualities are highly colored.

Cows are good—when sliced up and boiled.

The fruit of cows is all right when the cream is thick and there is lots of it.

Cows sing [illegible], and make a very nice noise.

So do bells.

Bells are also of use, though some are useless.

There are big bells and little bells. Church bells and fire bell.

Bells that ring the wedding peal and bells that solemnly toll the earthly death knell.

Then there are bells for toes and rings for fingers.

Bells that make little children get up and get for school.

And bells that calls us all to dinner.

Bells for engines and bells that ring of more beer.

And then there is the scissor grinders noisy clattering bell.

Big [illegible] bells, hoarse sounding iron bells, [illegible] bells, neatly shaped tiny silver bells.

And ugly shaped internally sounding cow bells.

A cow bell is an ugly looking thing when placed on sale.

It is a fearful thing to carry home.

And how the bashful bride hates to have the naughty boys bell her with a big cow bell.

It is not a melodious instrument [illegible] fails to enchant the [illegible] ed listener.

But the cow bell is a malicious thing when maliciously used; and [illegible] rung by a high-toned cow.

A cow can swing the clapper of a cow bell faster and make more discord than ten boys with forty tin pans.

It is the special forte of cows to wear bells, and a cow bell is specially adapted for the purpose.

All towns have cows and all places have cow bell, but Auburn has the champion cow and she wears the meanest bell that was ever rung by a bad boy or a musical cow.

This cow takes pride in loafing around.

She gently meanders up and down town after night when good cows should be in bed.

She takes special delight in waking the denizens of those street and while she rings she displays wonderful agility in dodging stones and clubs.

This cow has has rung her bell more than any other cow that ever lived in town.

She has been chased more times and come out unscratched oftener than any other cow of her age.

She can make more noise and provoke more profanity than ordinary cows.

She is a wonderful cow in her way, but its a poor way.

She wears her bell with great honors, but the disturbed citizens would feel honored if she would occasionally muffle her unmusical bell.

It is a solemn fact that cows are sometimes disorderly.

Bells can be noisy.

This cow and her bell are inclined to be both

If this cow would only walk into some quiet butcher shop and gently submit to a good clean killing there would be more happiness in town.

If that bell was sunk in some deep dark well there would be more christianity here,

The peace of community demands that something be done.

But don't let that cow do it with her little bell.

A youth asked permission of his his mother to go to a ball. She told him it was a bad place for little boys. "Why mother didn't you and father go to balls when you were young? Yes, but we have seen the folly of it, said the mother. Well mother exclaimed the son, I wan't to see the folly of it to.

Judging by Appearance.

In the other years, when Maine was a district of Massachusetts, Ezekiel Whitman was among the chosen to represent the district in the Massachusetts Legislature. He was an eccentric man and one of the best lawyers of his time. In those days Whitman owned a farm, and did much work upon his land and it so happened that when the time came for him to set out for Boston his best clothes were a suit of home-spun. His wife objected to his going in that garb, but he did not care. "I will get a nice fashionable suit made as soon as I reach Boston."

Reaching his destination, Whitman found a rest at Doolittle's City Tavern Let it be understood that he was a graduate of Harvard, and at this tavern he was at home.

As he entered the parlor of the house he found that several ladies and three gentleman were there assembled and he heard a remark from one of them. "Ah, here comes a countryman of the real home spun. Here's fun." Whitman stared at the company, and sat down.

"Say, my friend, you are from the country," remarked one of the gentlemen.

"Ya-as," answered Ezekiel, with ludicrous twist of the face.

The ladies tittered.

"And what do you thing of our city?"

"It's a pooty thick settled place any how. It's got a swappin' sight o' houses in it."

"And a good many people, too."

"Ya-as I should reckon so"

"Many people where you came from?"

"Wal, some"

"Plenty of ladies, I suppose?"

"Y-as, a fair sprinklin.

"And I don't doubt that you are quite a beau among them."

"Ya-as I beaus'em home tew meetin' an'singin sckewl."

"Perhaps the gentleman from the country will take a glass of wine?"

"Tank-ee. Don't keer if I do."

The wine was brought.

"You must drink a toast."

"Oh, git eout! I eats toast—never heard o' sich a thing as drinkin' it, But I can give ye a sentiment."

The ladies clapped their hands; but what was their surprise when the stranger, [illegible], spoke calmly and clearly, in sonorous and dignified, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to wish you health and happiness, with every other blessing earth can afford; and may you grow better and wiser with advancing years, bearing ever in mind that outward appearances are often deceitful. You mistook me, by my dress, for a country booby, while I from the same superficial cause thought you were ladies and gentlemen. The mistake has been mutual."

He had just spoken when Caleb Strong, the Governor of the State, entered and inquired for Mr. Whiteman,

"Ah—here I am, Governor. Glad to see you." Then turning to the dum-founded company—

"I wish you a good evening."

And he left them feeling as small and cheap as it is possible for fullgrown people to feel.—Christian Era.

A True Story of Bezaine's Escape

[Special Dispatch to the London Fun]

At the moment of telegraphing, the flag of Germany waves over Bazaine the free! You may remember that when we remove the flag of Germany from our first floor window after the last loyal welcome, I told you it would soon be wanted again. That flag, carefully concealed in my portmanteau accompanies me some three weeks ago to the Isle de Sainte Marguerite. That flag played an important part in the escape which, when these lines reach you will be a matter of history. The escape of Bazaine commissioner, alone unaided. Facts speak for themselves. Let them.

Achille—a ce soir! A ce soir, James!

We call each other by our christian names. I was attached to his staff before circumstances compelled me to join [illegible]. I had interviewed him and arranged every detail of his escape, but he obstinately refused to leave his prison. I was under contract with several important journals, including your own, to make the hero of the dull season. Leaders, special dispatches, full and authentic accounts were written and waiting a signal from me. I swore he should leave his prison that night." He did.

* * *

Two hours after sunset I was again in his cell. Every effort to persuade him to escape had been fruitless. I mesmerized him.

He was dead to the present—but not to the past.

"Achille," I whispered, "you are in Metz. You must get out."

"I can't."

"You must; the eye of Europe are upon you.

"Your rope! Where is it?"

"Here; and I handid him the new [illegible] cord.

He tied it carefully to the bar of the cell window and tried his strength.

"What is your weight? I asked anxiously.

"Twenty-eight stone by the Patent Weighing Chair.

"Good! the cord will just bear you.

"Your sure I am getting out of Metz, James?

"Quite." The next instance he was out and swinging in the night air.

At this moment a jailer entered cautiously. "I fancied I heard something escaping," he exclaimed.

"You did. It was the gas; turn it off at the meter."

He turned contemptuously on his heel and retired. I ran to the door and locked it. Then I looked through the window. The Marshal was still swinging in the cold night air.

"I want to get into Metz again—it's warmer there" he wailed.

"Nonsense. Dont!

He dropped himself and a French oath [illegible] afterward.

"This is very hard. He referred to the rock upon which he had just alighted.

"If the rock hurt you try a piece of (Tj)ant."

The moon rose grandly over the waters, and by its pearly light he saw the the joke. He invited me down. The [illegible] of a life devoted to sensational literature had made me an adept in the art of lowering myself, and in a moment I was by his side. No boat was to be seen, and the sea was fearfuly rough.

Suddenly a brilliant idea struck me. Drawing the account of the man and dog fight from my pocket, I laid it upon the beach—land and water refused to swallow it; therefore it would float upon the ocean. I made it into a paper boat, and we seated ourselves in it.

I borrowed half a crown of the Marshal and raised the wind.

I hoisted "Full Confession of Our Own Commissioner," and we had a rapid sail.

At the [illegible] of the first ship we met I parted with the Marshal.

His nether garments had sustained sundry damages in transit. I handed him the flag of Germany, and with portions of that he repaired them.

"Thus," he exclaimed, as he stood proudly on the deck of an Italian yacht "Thus," will I invade the territory of our enemy. When next you hear from me the despised Marshal of France will have entered Cologne. Farewell!"

This is the true story of the Marshal's escape. To my editor first and then to posterity I look for due appreciation of my efforts. What form will it take, I wonder?

The State election has gone Democratic by a large majority, and many rejoice.

There are many who can't read who knows A Bee see.

GOODY GRUNSELL'S HOUSE.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

A weary old face, beneath a black mutch;
Like a flame in a cavern her eye,
Betwixt craggy forehead and cheek-bone high;
Her long, lean fingers hurried to clutch
A something concealed in her rusty cloak,
As a step on the turf the stillness broke;
While a sound—was it curse or sigh?—
Smote the ear of the passer-by.

A dreary old house on a headland slope,
Against the gray of the sea,
Where garden and orchard used to be,
Witch-grass and nettle and rag-weed grope—
Paupers that eat the earth's riches out—
Nightshade and henbane are lurking about,
Like demons that enter in
When a soul has run waste to sin.

The house looked wretched and woe-begone;
Its desolate windows wept
With a dew that forever dripped and crept
From the moss-grown eaves; and ever anon
Some idle wind with a passing slap,
Made rickety shutter of shingle flap
As who with a jeer should say,
"Why does the old crone stay?"

Goody Grunsell's house—it was all her own;
There was no one living to chide,
Though she tore every rib from its skeleton side
To kindle a fire when she sat alone
With the ghosts that had leave to go out and in,
Through crevice and rent, to the endless din
Of waves that wild ditties droned—
Of winds that muttered and moaned.

And this was the only booty she hid
Under her threadbare cloak—
A strip of worn and weather-stained oak;
Then into her lonesome hearth she slid;
And, inch by inch, as the cold years sped,
She was burning the house over her head;
Why not—when each separate room
Held more than a lifetime's gloom?

Goody Grunsell's house—not a memory glad
Illumined bare ceiling or wall;
But cruel shadows would sometimes fall
On the floor; and faces eerie and sad
At dusk would peer in at the broken pane,
While ghostly steps pattered through the rain,
Sending the blood with a start
To her empty, shriveled heart.

For she had not been a forbearing wife,
Nor a loyal husband's mate;
The twain had been one but in fear and hate,
And the horror of that inverted life
Had not spent itself on their souls alone;
From the bitter root evil buds had blown;
There were births that blighted grew,
And died—and no gladness knew.

The house unto nobody home had been,
But a lair of pain and shame;
Could any its withered mistress blame,
Who sought from its embers a spark to win,
A warmth for the body, to soul refused?
Such questioning ran through her thoughts confused,
As she slipped with her spoil from sight,
Could the dead assert their right?

The splintered board, like a dagger's blade,
Goody Grunsell cowering hid,
As if the house had a voice that chid,
When wound after wound in its side she made;
As if the wraiths of her children cried
From their graves, to denounce her a homicide;
While the sea, up the weedy path,
Groaned, spuming in wordless wrath.

The house, with its pitiful, haunted look—
Old Goody, more piteous still,
Angry and sad, as the night fell chill—
They are pictures of a long-lost book.
But the windows of many a human face
Show tenants that burn their own dwelling-place;
And specter and fiend will roam
Through the heart which is not love's home.

THE BLACK DOLL.

Dot was a little girl five years old, the only child left to her parents, whose other children all lay sleeping a still sounder sleep under four tiny mounds of green turf. The parents were poor, and lived in one poor room "over the water," that is on the Surrey side of the Thames. The mother did what she could with her needle and her scissors and her iron to increase the means of subsistence earned by her husband, who plied some mysterious vocation on the river-side, and when he was not engaged in that vocation, performed "odd jobs" in all parts of London. And some of them were very fine odd jobs. He was one of those men who are so very useful when you have something to get rid of, and are at your wits' end to know what to do; when, for instance, your little dog has died, and you don't know what to do with the body; or when there is a contagious disease abroad, and it seems advisable to have certain things disinfected or destroyed. On all such occasions Potten was your man. He would do anything for next to nothing, or at any rate for a mere trifle; anything, at least, that was not dishonest, for a more honest man than Potten did not exist. Nor had the repulsive nature of the work on which he was frequently employed resulted in any corresponding repulsiveness in the man himself. He had a sallow, gaunt face, it is true, for the lines had not fallen unto him in pleasant places; but he smiled when he did smile, very brightly, and his manner, especially toward children, was very winning. No doubt his heart was under the softening influence of a double memory—of Dot and of the tiny graves. But Potten had certainly one unpleasant peculiarity; there were times when he looked the very incarnation of skepticism; disbelief stood confessed in the twinkle of his eye, in the wrinkle around his nose, in the lines about his mouth, in the sound of his snigger. Sternly admonish him, tearfully beg of him, solemnly abjure him to be very careful, and so take the greatest precautions on his own account, and his wife's, and his children's, if he had any; and he would answer impatiently: "All right, sir; to be sure I will, ma'am; don't you go for to be afraid;" but all the while his manner and his laugh were as much as to say: "Tut, tut! It's all a pack of rubbish; no harm shall happen unto me." Thus does familiarity breed contempt. Who is it that lights his pipe over the powder magazine? Who is it that burns a naked candle in the deadly atmosphere of the mine? And yet Potten was most scrupulously careful in all that concerned his employers; he may have laughed at them in his sleeve, but, whether it were from a conscientious sense of duty, or from fear of consequences in case of detected neglect, he performed their order, as regarded themselves, to the very letter.

Such was the man who sat contentedly smoking his pipe in the room where Dot lay sleeping, and hugging in her arms a large black doll, with merry black eyes, laughing mouth and grinning teeth, but without arms—not a doll that most girls would fancy, but Dot loved it and fondled it as if it had been a paragon of beauty. In Mr. Potten's section of society no special smoking-room is provided, and infants sleep peaceably amidst the fumes of tobacco. Perhaps that may be a reason why fever, though rampant enough, is not more rampant in certain districts.

Well, Mr. Potten sat smoking, Mrs. Potten sat sewing, and Dot lay sleeping. Mr. and Mrs. Potten had a deal table between them; and on the table stood a common sort of lamp, which gave a very good light by means, if smell can be depended on, of paraffine oil. Dot lay sleeping; but anybody who supposes that she occupied her own little cot with its snow-white coverlet, and other accessories which make such pretty pictures of slumbering childhood, would be very much mistaken. Mr. Potten's humble establishment did not admit of so much luxury and independence. Mr. and Mrs. Potten and Dot all shared the same bed, which, though by no means large, took up a considerable portion of the apartment. The bed had a coverlet of patchwork, old and faded. And yet it was anything but an ugly spectacle that presented itself to the husband and wife whenever they looked in Dot's direction. The bed linen was clean, though coarse; and there, with her head between two pillows, lay Dot. Her fair hair, very long for her age, streamed out in all directions; the long lashes of her closed eyes drooped on her cheeks; her smiling mouth, half open, showed a few white teeth; her chubby little arms were folded around the neck and body, and her little chin rested, as has been said, upon the woolly head of the black doll. And the black doll, with a ring through its nose, a necklace of beads round its throat, and a flaring yellow frock upon its body, was gorgeous to behold.

Mr. Potten arose from his seat, and went softly up to the bed; and there was a moisture in his eyes when he returned. He resumed his seat, and said chuckling: "Lord love her! How happy she does look!"

"She never had a doll afore, you know, Potten," rejoined his wife, a care-worn but cheerful, nice-looking woman, "bar them little halfpenny ones."

"But she's bin a-cryin'," remarked Potten, with a look of inquiry. "I see two little stains on her little nose."

"Yes," assented Mrs. Potten with a light laugh. "We had a few words about the doll: she'd had it playing with all the blessed day, and I thought she'd do better without it abed. But she would have dear Blackie, as she calls it; and wouldn't even have it undressed. So I let her have her own way, and that stopped her cryin' and made her happy again."

"What's the harm?" growled Potten. "Bless her little heart."

"It must have cost a lot o' money, that doll," said Mrs. Potten, "what with the size on it, and the ornaments, and what not."

"Ah! I dare say," observed Potten with indifference.

"You'd never have bin able to buy one like it," continued Mrs. Potten with much emphasis.

"Not I," assented Potten with a short laugh. "Ah! it's an ill wind as blows nobody any good."

"But you never told me where you got it from," remarked Mrs. Potten. "You only said it was given to you."

"What's the odds?" said Potten, yawning. "Here, I'm tired; I'm a goin' to bed. Come, make haste."

And Mr. and Mrs. Potten were soon asleep, with Dot and the black doll between them.

Let us change the time and scene. It shall be the same day, but earlier in the evening; and the place shall be a comfortable house on the Middlesex side of the River Thames, and on the borders of Tyburnia. It is early spring, about an hour after sunset, and a little girl some seven years of age is being put to bed. She is evidently an invalid. Her pretty little face is thin and pale; her hands are almost transparent; she totters if she attempts to walk alone. A lady and maid-servant are present in the room, and render the necessary assistance. The little girl has just had a bath, to judge from plain indications; and she is now being arrayed in the most dainty little night dress, and gently laid in the most dainty little cot, with the most dainty appliances. Otherwise the room and indeed the whole house, presents an unfurnished appearance; all the furniture seems to be huddled together in out-of-way places, and there is a notable absence of carpets from the floors. Wherever you turn you see basins or other utensils filled with a red liquid, as if there had been a general nose-bleeding throughout the house. Moreover, there is a pervading smell as of soot, from which the experienced would infer disinfectants. In the little girl's own room stands a table on which are arranged, to please the eye and smell and taste, wall-flowers, violets, primroses, daffodils, jonquils, grapes and blood-oranges. Cheap photographs and cheap picture-books, which may serve to amuse for the moment, and may be afterwards destroyed without compunction on the score of extravagance, are scattered in all directions. When the little girl has been made quite comfortable, the lady sits down by the side of the cot, and prepares to coax the invalid to sleep.

"Am I well now, dear mum?" asks the invalid.

"Nearly well, dear," replies mamma. "We are going to the sea-side to-morrow, and then you will get quite strong and well again."

"But if I'm not well, why can't I go on having Candace to sleep with me?" asked the invalid.

"Candace has gone away, darling."

"Where to, mum?"

"I don't know, darling. She was taken away by the man when he took the other things."

"What will he do to her, mum? Cure her?"

"I hope so, dear."

"Then why can't I have her back when she's cured, dear mum?"

"Because, though she might not do you any harm, dear, it's safer, on account of other people, that we should get rid of her altogether."

"Poor Candace! I hope she'll soon get well," murmured the invalid sleepily. "And I hope," she added, "that she'll not make any other little girls as ill as I have been."

Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, was the name which the little invalid had given to her plaything, a black doll. It had been included amongst a number of articles which "the man" had carried off to be destroyed, or "cured," as the little invalid would have said. The lady knew nothing of "the man," but that he had been authoritatively recommended as a regular practitioner in such matters. She had paid him well, and had strongly advised him to destroy everything, or, at any rate, to bake, smoke, steam, boil, and disinfect everything thoroughly. Unless he faithfully promised to do at least the latter, she would see if she could not find some other means of riddance. And "the man" had replied: "All right, ma'am; don't you go for to be afraid; I know all about it." But somehow his manner was a little contemptuous; his eye twinkled, and his mouth sniggered in a by no means reassuring fashion. And so he had gone his way; and she did not even know his name, which was Potten.

And so the lady and the little invalid went to the sea-side; and the latter grew strong and plump and rosy again.

And Candace and "the man" were clean forgotten.

Meanwhile, Dot had been getting on famously with "dear Blackie." No doubt Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, had fallen considerably in the social scale; but it is a question whether she had ever before been treated with so much deference. Dot never did anything without consulting "dear Blackie." She obtained that sable personage's permission before she even dared to put into her mouth a single piece of bread and butter or a sip of milk and water. Nay, the maternal authority itself had to be backed up by the influence of the late Queen Candace. On the third evening of Dot's possession of her treasure—"Now, Dot, it's time to go to bed; that's a good gal," Mrs. Potten said.

"S'all we do to bed, dear B'ackie?" Dot asked; and then she cried exultantly: "No, mother; dear B'ackie says we mustn't do to bed yet, but wait for da."

"You'd better ask dear Blackie again," Mrs. Potten replied, for she was a kind, patient, and judicious, but firm mother.

There was a short pause; and then Dot said, with a knowing laugh: "Dear B'ackie says we'd better do to bed to-night, and sit up for da some other night."

"Ah! dear Blackie's a good sort," Mrs. Potten admitted, as she proceeded to undress her obedient little Dot.

And Dot, ere she closed her eyes in sleep, kissed her black doll, and said, "Dood night, dear B'ackie. Dod b'ess 'ou."

That same evening Mr. Potten, whose avocations nearly always took him away from home all day, and who, consequently, seldom had an opportunity of observing Dot and her ways, was treated by her to a little comedy, which he, as a father, found more laughter-moving than anything ever performed by Liston, Wright or Toole. Dot was restless, and woke up while her father was taking his pipe and drop of beer.

And Dot insisted upon sharing his pipe and beer with "dear B'ackie," who, she asserted, had always been accustomed to tobacco in "B'ackie's land," and liked beer "froffed up," or, as Mr. Potten himself expressed it, "with a head on." So "dear Blackie" was placed in a sitting posture upon the table, was propped up against a candle-stick, and in a silent language, interpreted by Dot, contributed greatly to the hilarity of the evening.

"Lord love her little heart!" exclaimed Potten, as he wiped tears of amusement from his eyes when Dot had sunk exhausted to sleep; "she's as good as any play; that 'ere doll's a fortun' to us."

But the next evening Potten was not so well entertained. Dot, it appeared, had been seized with a shivering fit, and was now sleeping heavily, breathing stertorously, and tossing uneasily, with a skin as hot and dry as a burning coal. But poor people shrink from the expense of a doctor; and the Pottens resolved to see what a night would bring forth. The night brought forth a sore throat, so sore that it seemed as if Dot would be choked. There was no help for it; a doctor must be called, and Potten, on his way to work, engaged one to "look in." The doctor looked in, and looked serious. He sent medicine, and word that he would look in again in the evening. In the evening he came, and Potten was there.

Dot was one bright red flush, to the very whites of her eyes.

"What is it, sir, please?" asked Potten, with white and trembling lips.

"Well," said the doctor, "it is best to tell you, in order that you may take precautions. It is a very bad case of scarlet fever."

Potten groaned heavily, dropped down by the bedside, and hid his face in the clothes.

"Come, be a man," said the doctor, touching him on the shoulder; "don't give way like that. I've known worse cases recover.

Potten got up and stared about him like one distraught.

The doctor gave his directions to Mrs. Potten; and with a kind "good night," departed.

The eighth day was approaching, and Dot was in a high state of delirium. There were no sweet flowers, no violets, no primroses, no daffodils for poor little Dot, to catch her eye and soothe her senses; no grapes and no blood oranges to moisten her parched lips. And whenever her father drew near her pillow, she, when the delirious fit was upon her, would turn away her face and mutter: "Do away, b'ack man; do away, b'ack man!"

The eighth day came and passed; and Dot passed away in the twilight.

Potten had scarcely spoken a word as long as the fever lasted; but now, as he stood looking with a ghastly face, and dry, fierce eyes at the tiny corpse before him, he said, in slow, distinct, deliberate tones: "Susan I've killed my child."

Mrs. Potten, for a moment, hushed her sobs, and stared at him in blank amazement.

"Look here," continued Potten, in low, husky tones: "I knowed there'd bin fever in the house where this come from; the lady that gave it to me begged and prayed o' me to burn it, or, leastways, to burn the clo'es and the hair, and bake and scour and reg'lar disinfect the rest on it; but I was afraid o' sp'ilin' it, and—and—as they was always disinfectin' everything in that house, I never give it a second thought, and—and—I—give it—her;" and, with a sob that shook his whole body, he threw down upon the patchwork counterpane the black doll.

Mrs. Potten had listened to him with a face that grew paler and graver, and more horror-stricken at every word he uttered; but all she said was, in a voice full of awe and agony: "Oh, John!"

It was the only reproach she made him; but it may be that there is more in a tone than in words.

Potten walked slowly to the door, and left the room. He looked like a man in a dream. He did not return that night, and Mrs. Potten was alarmed. He did not return the next day or night, and the neighbors were alarmed. They thought, too truly, that the poor man had gone distracted, was mad with grief and the sense of having been the cause of the death of his child. In this belief, they naturally expected to find him on the river side. And there, on the third day, they found him—at low water—drowned.

A FREE THINKER'S FANCY.

Strange Inscriptions on a Gravestone at Buchanan, Mich.

Never has anything created such universal excitement and aroused the indignation of the citizens in the usually quiet village of Buchanan, Berrien county, as has the erection in our cemetery of a monument on which are several inscriptions, indicative of a great want of reverence for sacred things. The monument was erected by Joseph Coveny, a returned Californian, and wealthy farmer of this vicinity, who though of sound mind in other matters, seems to entertain peculiar views in regard to religion. It is from the marble works of Sewersten & Schulte, of Niles, and is the most beautiful one in the cemetery—when viewed at a distance—and also the most expensive, having cost Coveny nearly $3,000.

On the front side is engraved in large letters the following:

"Joseph Coveny—The More Peace—The More Plenty—A Free Thinker's Monument."

Below this, in smaller letters, can be seen the following:

"The world is my country, to do good my religion. A word to the wise. God in the Constitution is the end of liberty. Beware how you unite Church and State. Catholics will burn heretics and Protestants hang Quakers and witches. The Bible God is not all-powerful. He drove out the inhabitants of the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley because they had chariots of iron—Judges i. 19."

On the second side under the heading of "Free Press" is inserted this: "The More Saints—The More Hypocrites," and below this under "Sunday Reading" is a verse credited to Numbers, 31. It reads:

"Thirty-two thousand virgins given by command of God to an army of twelve thousand to debauch." "A poor consolation to mothers." "The 7th chapter of Isaiah has no reference to futurity. It was a sign given to Ahaz of victory over his enemy, but the prediction was false. See 28th chapter of Second Chronicles. Don't forget Cotton Mather and his reverend associates. All Christian denominations preach damnation to the other."

The third side begins:

"Free Speech The More Religion—The More Lying." "Remember Mary Dyer hanging on the big elm tree on the Boston Common, a victim to Christian superstition. Priestcraft and exemption is a source of danger to republican governments." The heathen's prayer is "O, Lord, forgive my enemies and then me," but the Christian cries amen to their damnation. "The Christian religion begins with a dream and ends with a murder."

The fourth and last side is headed:

"Free Religion—The more Priest—The More Poverty. Nature is the true God, Science the True Religion. John Wesley said unless you deny God and honor the King George, you will be damned. I say let the arts and sciences supersede kingcraft, priestcraft, superstition and bigotry. The holy prophets said the tree that does not bear good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. (Science tells you graft it.) And well did the holy inquisitor obey the order. But the time is not far distant when the old book of debauchery will be burned in place of men and women."

To persons who have not visited the cemetery since the erection of this monument, the foregoing may seem utterly improbable, but the inscriptions were copied verbatim by the correspondent of the Free Press. Last Sunday evening a sermon was preached in the Presbyterian church by Rev. Mr. Wells, in which the vile lot of blasphemy just mentioned was denounced in the strongest terms. Popular indignation runs high, and should the monument be blown to pieces some night, the public here would not be surprised. —Detroit Free Press.

How to Make an Æolian Harp.

An instrument of the kind about to be described seems to be of very ancient origin, but was introduced during the last century. The Æolian harp produces a very pleasing melodious sound, especially in the open air and is not difficult to construct. A long, narrow box, the length of a window, or the position in which it is to be placed, is the first requisite; it must be made of thin deal, four inches deep and five in width. At the extremities of the top glue two pieces of oak about half an inch high and a quarter of an inch thick, for bridges to which the strings are to be fixed; within the box, at each end glue two pieces of beechwood, about an inch square and the width of the box. Into one of the bridges fix seven pegs, such as are used for piano strings; into the other bridge fasten the same number of small brass pins; and to these pins fasten one end of the strings, made of small catgut, and twist the other end of the strings around the pegs; then tune them in unison. Place over the top of the strings a thin board, supported by four pegs, and about three inches from the sounding-board, to procure a free passage for the wind. The harp should be exposed to the wind at a partly opened window; to increase the draught of air, the door or an opposite window in the room should be open. The strings in a current of air, sound in unison; and with the increasing or decreasing force of the current, the melody changes into pleasing, soft, low sounds and diatonic scales, which unite and occasionally form very delightful musical tones. If the harp can be placed in a suitable position, so as to receive a sufficient draught of air, in a grotto, or romantically situated arbor, or hidden in some shady nook near a waterfall, the effect of its sweet sounds is very charming.—Cassell's Household Guide.

AN OREGON WOMAN.—There is a smart young widow in Lane county, Oregon, who last winter plowed between seventy and eighty acres of ground for her father, and harrowed the most of it in. She then turned out her team and went and got a certificate as a teacher, took up a school and taught until haying and harvest commenced, when she dropped the "birch" and again took up the reins and cut her father's and uncle's grain, and is now cutting for the neighbors.

Driven to Death by a Curse.

Miss Cross, a school teacher in Stark, New Hampshire, lately committed suicide by drowning, under the following circumstances, as related by a local paper: She had had charge of the school for several weeks. The scholars thought much of her, and till within a short time before her death she kept an orderly and excellent school. But during the last week all seemed to be disorder and confusion in the school. The committee, Dr. A. Thompson and M. T. Pike, Esq., having heard of the fact, visited the school on Friday, and found it much as above described, on which after the school was dismissed, they kindly talked with her privately relatively to the school, told her how it seemed to them, and advised her, as she appeared pale and sick, quietly to go to the agent and resign her position; or if she felt strong enough to go on with the school, and thought she could improve in the particulars they mentioned, she could do so. She said she would determine what was best between that time and the hour of school the next morning. They left for their homes. She did not return to her boarding-house that night, and her friends became alarmed. The school house was locked. On looking in at the window the key was seen on the floor. On entering, they discovered on her desk some little articles of value she had taken from her person, and the following note, addressed to her sister:

DEAR MARY—All I have to say is that the curse is fulfilled. The daughters shall die in sorrow if not in shame before they are twenty. Ask Albert Thompson and Thomas Pike why. Good-bye all. LAURIANA

Search was made for her body. The school house was situated on the bank of the river, where the water was deep and still, and the body was found near by. Before the coroner's jury her sister explained the note, by relating that they were the children of Amos K. Cross, of Waterford, Maine, and that in consequence of some difficulty between them, her father separated from his first wife, and was again married, on which his mother, taking sides against him, pronounced with dreadful emphasis this curse upon her son's children: "His daughters shall die in sorrow if not in shame, before they are twenty, and the sons shall be cut off in infancy." She said that for some time Lauriana had constantly dwelt upon the subject of the curse, and the more so, recently, as she was nearing the age of twenty, and she had done and said things which had caused her to think her sister meditated suicide. And her room-mate testified that only a week before she had spoken of it to her, and alluded to the fact that she was over nineteen years of age, and if the curse was fulfilled she had but a short time longer to live. The fact that some of her brothers died in infancy tended to strengthen the superstition, so that insanity and death were the consequence.

The Drama in Japan.

In Japan they say the theaters are very much patronized; the play commences at 6 in the morning and terminates at 8 or 9 in the evening; often the same piece occupies two and three days in the representation. Gentlemen are not particular about the question of full dress, but the ladies are; the latter, to cover their swarthy looks, have the face and shoulders white-washed with almond milk; a black lead-pencil marks the eye-brows, and the lips are coated thinly with gold, which, after a while, takes a red hue; the head-dress is a veritable piece of engineering; it is a scaffolding that has to be commenced the evening previously; but the beauty reclines dressed till the theater opens, and once there, she forgets all fatigue. The robe appears to be swathed in ribbon-sashes, forming an immense knot at the back. The scene-changing on the stage is simply on the plan of the turn-table for locomotives. At a given signal the table whirls for the space of a half-circle, taking away actors in the midst of their dialogue, and bringing others on the scene in the act of continuing the conversation, or representing something new. Every actor has his "shadow," —an individual dressed in black, who never quits him, handing everything he may stand in need of. And when the shades of evening fall, he holds a candle on the end of a stick under the actor's nose to allow the spectators to judge of the actor's gestures and expression of passions.

A Remarkable Parallel.

A remarkable parallelism has been shown to exist between Melbourne, Australia, and San Francisco, California. They are nearly in corresponding latitudes, San Francisco being in thirty-seven degrees and forty-eight minutes north, while Melbourne is in thirty-seven degrees and forty-seven minutes south, thus making one only one mile nearer the equator than the other. Both had their beginnings as towns in 1835; both remained insignificant places until the discovery of gold in the countries surrounding them; both suddenly arose to great wealth; both suffered from a decline of the gold yield, five years after mining began; and both have risen to new and abiding prosperity, as the agricultural resources of the tributary country were developed. Here this remarkable parallelism ceases. The British colonies in Australia, of which Melbourne is the metropolis, contain a population nearly three times as great as the Pacific slope, but Melbourne itself does not greatly exceed San Francisco in size. A California paper contrasts the two cities, claims greater natural advantages, such as climate, geographical position, etc., for San Francisco, but reluctantly admits that in public buildings, parks, etc., Melbourne is to be envied, even by the most loyal Californians.

"TIME IS MONEY."—Many people take no care of money; spendthrifts we have always with us—prodigal sons who are generally bitterly punished for their prodigality, since "poetical justice" still rules the earth. And what with the spendthrifts of time? Their best days they throw away—let them run like sand through the fingers as long as they think they still have an almost countless number of them to spend; but, unluckily, they have by that time no notion how to do it.

The Empress Josephine's Handkerchief.

A correspondent of the Paris American Register writes: "I have so often heard French persons criticise the unwillingness of English and American ladies to name certain articles of the the feminine toilet that I was quite delighted a few days ago, in perusing some old chronicles, to find out that it was possible for the French to be quite as prudish as we. Until the reign of the Empress Josephine a handkerchief was thought in France so shocking an object that a lady would never have dared to use it before any one. The word even was carefully avoided in refined conversation. An actor who would have used a handkerchief on the stage, even in the most tearful moments of the play, would have been unmercifully hissed; and it was only in the beginning of the present century that a celebrated actress, Mlle. Duchesnois, dared to appear with a handkerchief in her hand. Having to speak of this handkerchief in the course of the piece she never could summon enough courage to call it by its true name, but referred to it as a light tissue. A few years latter a translation of one of Shakspeare's plays by Alfred de Vigny having been acted, the word handkerchief was used for the first time on the stage amid cries of indignation from a great part of the house. I doubt if even to-day the French elegantes would carry handkerchiefs if the wife of Napoleon I. had not given the signal to adopt them. The Empress Josephine, although really lovely, had very ugly teeth. To conceal them she was in the habit of carry small handkerchiefs adorned with costly laces, which she continually raised gracefully to her lips. Of course all the ladies of the court followed her example, and handkerchiefs have rapidly become an important and costly part of the feminine toilet; so much so that the price of a single handkerchief of the trousseau of the Duchess of Edinburgh would make the fortune of a necessitous family."

What I Know About Vegetine.

SOUTH BOSTON, May 9, 1870.

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have had considerable experience with the VEGETINE. For Dyspepsia, General Debility, and Impure Blood, the VEGETINE is superior to anything which I have ever used. I commenced taking VEGETINE about the middle of last winter, and after using a few bottles it entirely cured me of dyspepsia and my blood never was in so good condition as at the present time. It will afford me pleasure to give any further particulars relative to what I know about this good medicine to any one who will call or address me at my residence, 386 Athens street. Very respectfully,

Two Rich Men.

A New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes: "The chief holder of personal estate in this city is Commodore Vanderbilt, who is estimated at $40,000,000, the largest part of which is in railway property. He owns enough in the Connecticut river and New Haven roads to be a director in each, and he also owns the controlling interest in the Central, Hudson and Lake Shore, besides his stock in Ohio and Mississippi and other important roads. It was said of George Peabody that he made almost the entire bulk of his enormous wealth after his fiftieth year. I think a stronger statement can be made of the Commodore, for he has made the largest part of his money since he was sixty—that is, within the last score of years. I suppose that when the war broke out he was not worth five millions. The incessant and enormous increase of railroad values, and the colossal extent of his operations, have brought an increase so stupendous as to remind us of the old stories of Oriental magic. The only instance in which real and personal estate is combined almost equally in the vast possessions of one individual is found in A. T. Stewart. He owns enough in each of these shapes of wealth to make a dozen men rich. In point of real estate he has two great dry goods establishments on Broadway, also the Metropolitan Hotel, and the former Unitarian Church. Add to these the Baptist Church in Amity street, now used as the stables of his business teams, the Depeau row, in Bleecker street, and above all his Fifth avenue palace, which cost $1,000,000. In personal estate is his stock in trade, capital and bills receivable, which must be $10,000,000, and a large quantity of bank stock. In this manner Stewart wields both classes of property. He has differed entirely from Vanderbilt in this point. The latter has invested almost solely in railway stocks, while the former has eschewed this form of property in a very peculiar manner. He has a strong affinity for those things which pertain to trade and to this alone. It is said that his estates cannot be less than $30,000,000."

An Industrious People.

Every Swiss city and large town has its special industry. Some excel in one branch of manufactures and some in another; but, taken in their entirety, they aggregate a very respectable production for so small a nation. While the Swiss raise more than enough meat, butter and cheese for their own consumption, they are obliged to import about 1,500,000 barrels of flour per annum from France and Germany. Nor do they grow nearly enough wool to clothe themselves; but, from the proceeds of their sales of silk and cotton fabrics, of embroidery, watches, jewelry, chemicals and wood carvings, they are abundantly enabled to supply all their wants in the shape of imported goods and food. The Swiss are certainly the most industrious people in the world, as well as the most frugal. Everybody works—men, women and children. There is no leisure, idle, or loafer class, and few drones, in this busy hive.—Joseph Medill's Letter to Chicago Tribune.

The Pacific Roads.

Late agreements entered into between the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railways are of deep interest to all branches of business in the country. All the former rivalries and jealousies existing between the roads have been done away with, and henceforth they will run in harmony, avoiding former delays in transportation, and adopting a more reasonable system of freightage. The transmission of California fruits, especially, will be affected for good. The Central Pacific officers have also united in the general harmony, thus placing these great thoroughfares upon a more perfect and sensible footing than has existed since their construction.

A MAN FOR A LITTLE WHILE.—A married woman in Mohawk, N. Y., was a prospective mother-in-law, and she wanted to find out exactly what kind of a chap he was who was courting her daughter. So she dressed herself up in male attire and went to a ball where she was certain to meet him. During the evening, disguised as a fashionable young fop, she managed to get into a quarrel with the young man himself. Lacking masculine muscle, she was worsted in a ball-room scrimmage. Her new plug hat was smashed down over her face, her nose stopped a well-meant blow, and her mustache was accidentally pulled off. Then the young man suddenly recognized his prospective mother-in-law, and found too late that he had been fighting with the wrong man. The woman was sent home in a carriage, and the young man has not been round courting her daughter since. —Little Falls News.

VENERABLE VERMONTERS.—People live to a good old age in Vermont. Green Mountain air is invigorating. It is said that Hannah Bowen, of Bethel, wife of S. Bowen, is 92 years old, and is holding her own with other young folks at picking hops, having worked several days this season in the field. Brandon has a Mrs. Justus Hyatt, aged 82, who walked from her residence, a few days ago, to Leicester, a distance of six miles, and then wanted to walk back the same day. Vershire boasts of Mrs. Lucy Hinckley, who is 92 years of age, and has been spinning at several different places. In one place she spun twenty knots a day and knit one large mitten each day, for eight days in succession. Royalston has a man whose name is Wild, and they call him "Square," who, although upward of 80, carries on his farm, works hard, eats and sleeps well, and feels just as well as ever he did.

A WRITER in the American Educational Monthly advocates sturdily the reading of newspapers in school classes, with examination of the pupils as to their understanding of the text. He notes that in his school the reading of editorials sometimes required an inquiry into the nature of governmental administration and phases of party history foreign to the usual order of thought in school life, and he concludes that pupils should be taught to read understandingly leading editorials of the best newspapers.

Hazing.

"Hazing" has been practically suppressed at Harvard College during the last two years by the voluntary action of the present senior and junior classes. In order to continue this wholesome abstinence from a foolish and sometimes cruel practice, the dean of the faculty has sent a circular letter to the parents of the present sophomores and freshmen, requesting them to use their influence to prevent its renewal. The letter urges that it be abandoned entirely and forever by the voluntary action of the students. If the desired end can be reached in this way, the result will certainly best strengthen Harvard's hold upon the respect of the friends of liberal education everywhere.

OLD HUMBUGS DISCARDED.—Thank heaven, the old-school practice is passing away. Ipecac, aloes, calomel, blistering, the lancet, and (worse than all), medicated rum, have given place to a new remedy, which bids fair to become the universal medicine of mankind. VINEGAR BITTERS is that remedy. It is destined to take precedence of all other curatives now before the world. The pharmacopœia and conspectus of the regular faculty contain nothing that will compare with it. Every day hundreds of the sick are emancipating themselves from systems of treatment which entail great expense and do no good, and are flying to this cheap and absolutely certain means of relief. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, liver complaint, periodic fevers, sick headache, kidney diseases, constipation, nervous affections, and in short all maladies, acute or chronic, which do not involve the irreparable injury of some vital organ, are cured by this pure inalcoholic vegetable restorative. 5

A SPRINGFIELD gentleman concluded to have a bath the other evening, and in the dark got hold of a chunk of stove-blacking by mistake for the soap. A more polished man than he was has never been seen in the whole State of Massachusetts.

Let the People Speak.

MANHATTAN, KAN., April, 8, 1873.

R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: Your Favorite Prescription has done my wife a world of good. She has taken nearly two bottles, and has felt better the past two weeks than at any time in the past two years. No more periodical pains; none of that aching back or dragging sensation in her stomach she has been accustomed to for several years. I have so much confidence in it that I would be perfectly willing to warrant to certain customers of ours who would be glad to get hold of relief at any expense. I have tried many Patent Medicines, but never had any occasion to extol one before. Very truly yours, GEO. B. WHITING.

MRS. E. R. DALY, Metropolis, Ill., writes, Jan. 9th, 1873:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE—My sister is using the Favorite Prescription with great benefit."

MARY ANN FRISBIE, Lehman, Pa., writes, May 19, 1872:

"DR. R. V. PIERCE—What I have taken of your medicine has been of more benefit to me than all others and hundreds of doctors' bills."

CHILL CURE!—SAFE AND SURE.—Dr. Wilhoft's Tonic is curative and protective. It will cure Chills and protect from further attacks. Its reputation is established. Its composition is simple and scientific. It contains no poison. It acts promptly, and its effects are permanent. It is cheap, because it saves doctors' bills. It is harmless, speedy in action and delightful in its effects. Try it and prove all that's said. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

TO HAVE good health the liver must be kept in order. Sanford's Liver Invigorator has become a staple family medicine. Purely vegetable—Cathartic and Tonic—for all derangements of Liver, Stomach and owels; clears the complexion, cures sick-headache. Shun imitations. Try Sanford's Liver Invigorator.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—In answer to scores of letters we state: The Fifth Gift Concert of the Kentucky Public Library will positively take place November 30. 1874, and there will be no postponement. The capital prize will be $250,000. For information concerning this matter drop a line to Gov. Tho. E. Bramlette, Louisville, Ky.

THE Elmwood Collar is a novelty. It has all the edges folded, a fine cloth surface, and is the best fitting collar ever made. —N. Y. Sun.

RATHBONE, SARD & Co.'s unrivaled cook and heating stoves are the fruit of thirty years' experiments, with the best material and most skillful workmen.

The Rice Divorce Suit for fraud in age, is causing great excitement in Boston. It should warn young men not to marry in haste. Rice is but 22; his bride 37. He swears that she made him believe she was but his own age, by using Magnolia Balm upon her face, neck and hands. Poor youth! He probably found her elbows weren't quite so soft and pretty. Ought Hagan to be indicted? We know of many similar cases. This Balm gives a most wonderful pearly and natural complexion, to which we don't object. We like pretty women. To finish the picture, they should use Lyon's Kathairon upon the hair. With pearly skin, rosy cheeks, and soft, luxurious tresses, they become irresistible.

Fell from a Railroad Car, and nearly broke his neck. Pat picked him up, rubbed him with Mexican Mustang Liniment, and sent him on by the next train. Falls, bruises, cuts, contusions lameness and such accidents are constantly occurring. There is nothing so sure, safe, cheap and convenient as the celebrated Mustang Liniment. It costs but 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle, and no Family or owner of Horses should be without it. There is no flesh, bone or muscle ailment upon man or animal, like Rheumatism, Bruises, Spavin and Lameness, which it will not alleviate or cure. Why will you suffer? Beware of counterfeits. It is wrapped in a steel plate engraving, signed "G. W. Westbrook, Chemist."

On Everybody's Tongue.—Eulogiums of the great National Regenerator of Health, PLANTATION BITTERS, are on everybody's tongue. This gratuitous viva voce advertising is better than all paid-for puffing to which the owners of bogus bitters are obliged to resort. It has a spontaneous heartiness about it which carries conviction to the mind of the auditor.

DRENA'S DICTIONARY BLOTTER is a convenient blotter portfolio, with the addition and novelty of a very full list of words likely to be used by writers, who, to get the correct spelling of them, may often gladly avail themselves of this handy and ingenious assistant. A dictionary of synonyms, common Christian names, a brief list of geographical names and a perpetual calendar are added.

The Patent Adjustable Elbow.

Sargent, Greenleaf & Brooks, of that live little village, Chicago, advertise an Adjustable Elbow for stove-pipe and other purposes, that, for novelty and utility, is unapproachable. It is very compact, strong and symmetrical, and suitable for kitchen or parlor. Its great distinguishing feature is, that it is not only one of the best and cheapest of elbows, but can be instantly adjusted by any one to odd angles, or corners, and thus, in the language of Fares & Fischer, of Cincinnati—who used over 100 dozen of them in 1873—"Its use often saves more than five dollars in time and money in setting up a single stove."

Sargent, Greenleaf & Brooks also sell the celebrated Sargent & Greenleaf Lock, universally acknowledged the best in the world for store, dwelling, club-room, office or money-drawer, or elsewhere, where safety and convenience are desired. In the language of the Chicago Times, "sneak thieves are disgusted with them."

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada Mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

Auburn Courier.

Thursday, October - 22, 1874

An Elkhart man was kicked by a horse a few days since. One of the "dailies" concluded a statement of the event, by furiously asking where's the police?"

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe say that one great element of the social weakness of woman is "that they have no money." They generally know enough, however to merry somebody who has lots of it.

The Beecher-Tilton libel suit has been placed on the November calender, which means that the trial will take place some time after the centennial of the scandal. In the meantime both parties can have the full benifit of the ragged edge.

In the States of Ohio, Indiana, Iowa and North Carolina the Democrats have already gained fifteen Congressmen. This is a splendid start for the next house. New York and Pennsylvania will charge us many more.—mark the prediction.

Speaking about the late elections, it may not be amiss to say that later returns gives the entire Congresional delegations of West Virginia to the Democrats—a gain of two. The Democratic majority in Indiana will reach 18,000. The figures in Ohio will certainly reach 20,000.

What would Gen. Thomas J. Brady consul to St. Thomas and chairman of the State Republican Central Committee have us do with Ku-Klux business now? It is an industry of great possibilities, and it should not be abandoned. If it did not accomplish what was expected of it in Indiana, it saved Dakota, and that's something.

The South Carolina Republicans have declared openly for a third term. New York Republicans and those of several other States have refused to pronounce against it. Now comes Alex H. Stephens, of Georgia, saying to the citizens of his state that he has no objections to a third term, and sees no reason why the people should not elect a President a third term consecutively to that office. The ball has not stopped rolling.

Of the Connecticut town elections, Oct. 5th, the Hartford Evening Post (Republican) of the 8th had returned from 165 towns, viz.: 70 Republicans 76 Democrats, 19 mixed or divided.—It says: Last year the towns stood: Republican, 93; Democratic, 62; divided, 9; Independent, 1. So it would appear that the Republicans have lost 23 and the Democrats gained 14. The returns may be relied upon as substantially correct in every particular: We have summed them up with no effort to make a good or bad showing for either party, but simply to present the facts. It is not our fault if the figures are not what we could wish.

General Sherman's Religion.

Gen. Sherman is a bluff soldier with a heart overflowing with good will to all living creatures. So far from the General using the grand ceremonial of the Catholic Church at his daughter's wedding to propitiate the Catholic or Irish vote, he would not during the celebration of high mass compromise himself by either bowing or kneeling, although Protestants, out of respect, did. Last winter, when General Sherman made his famous speech, regretting that they had never had dancing at this house, and said, that he liked to see young people "scout around," he told me that after his death there need be no dispute about his religious faith, for it coud be given in few words Said he: I believe that if people only act half as well as they knew how, God will forgive the balance. General Sherman has another short creed. He says this is not a bad world unless we choose to make it so. If we are kind to others in return we will be kindly dealt with.

The average salary of certified masters of elementary schools in England and Wales is $517 per annum More than one-half, also are provided with a house or live rent free. In Scotland the average income is $551, and two thirds live rent free. In Ireland the average is $232, and only a little over one-fifth have their house rent free.

It is said that when Grant heard of the election in Indiana and Ohio, he bit his cigar stub clean in two, and even wished that he was dead.

THE ELECTIONS.

Ohio and Indiana Democratic with from 18,000 to 20,000 majority

Good Enough for Two Years.

Shout, Boys, Shout!

The returns from the election are still very incomplete but enough is known to set the Democratic majority in Indiana down at not less than 15,000 and it may go up to 20,000 majority. Nine and perhaps ten of the thirteen Congressional Districts have been carried by the Democrats. By the outrageous apportionment of the State into Legislative Districts the Democrats may be prevented from having a clear majority in the Legislature but the general opinion is that there will be a working majority in opposition to the Republican paaty. This will insure the defeat of Pratt for the United States Senate and the probable election of some good conservative Democrat.

Ohio has gone Democratic by about 15,000 majority and elected twelve out of twenty Congressmen. There was no Legislature elected in Ohio this fall.

The west Virginia Democrats made a clear sweep of everything and gained one Congressman.

The nett gain of the Democrats Congressmen has been about 15 in all the States, with several districts still in doubt.

The "Rads" Frightened.

[Chicago Times.]

The Republicans at Washington are said to be very much frightened at the result of the election in Indiana and Ohio. They concede that if New York should follow suit in November, the result would be fatal to the Republican majority in Congress, and to avert such a calamity all the available oratorical force trated in that State. Edmonds, Robeson, Jewell, Scott, and other States, who are canvassing in others, are to be forwarded to the Empire State. there to use their utmost endeavors to save the party. It is claimed by some that Grant's candidacy for a third term is injuring the party, but their are other causes quite as potent. The people generally have become sick of relying upon promises of retrenchment that are never fulfilled they are tired of hearing about the dishonesty, profligacy and neglect of the public officials; they do not care for any further abortive reconstruction measures in the South; they are in fact, heartily ashamed that they have for so long been imposed upon by the confience men in the Republican party and are disposed to give some other party a trial. The future administration cannot be worse that the present one, it may be better. If nothing more than a choice between two evils, the people will choose the least, and that is to kick out Republicans from the offices they have so long disgraced.

A Singular Revenge.

The Lawrence (Mass.) Sentinel says that a number of months since a Haverhill man desired some accomodation of the Boston & Maine Road. But was refused. This action so provoked him that he determined to get square by some means, and at length, noticing that there was no draw in the railroad bridge near the city, he determind to put the comanpy to the expense of building one. So he commenced building a schooner of about 200 tons at a point above the bridge, and now as it is nearely ready to launch, he will soon load in with legitimate freight sail down to the bridge, and demand passage, which the railroad people must grant him, whether or no.

Second Term—The Conservatory of Music is meeting with such success that the managers feel justified in announcing a second term, commencing Nov. 19th.—the present term closing Nov. 10th. An additional teacher has been engaged and let everyone prepare then to commence promptly with the term. The term will continue ten weeks.

We have been so crowded that we have but little space in which to detail the ceremonies on last Sabbath in the dedication of the new Catholic Church at this place. Nearly 400 persons came up from Fort Wayne in the morning on a special train among them Bishop Dwenger, Father Brenmer and the splendid choir of the Cathedral. The Bishop made an excellent address after the ceremonies to which the vast audience listened attentively. The choir sang excellently, and their fine music pleased everybody. The receipts of the occasion amounted to about $300. Many of our citizens were present to witness the impresive ceremonies.

Forney interview Emil de Girardin on the Centennial. He found him an elderly, keen-eyed, delicate-looking Frenchman, dramatist, editor, politician, a power in the Parisian world, whether of letters or of politics. He welcomed his visitor warmly, but shook his head when invited to be present at America's Centennial. "I am too old," he said, and besides, I can no speak English.

Franklin Tp. Oct 20, 1874.

Mr. Editor—As there appear to be a number of persons who it seems are not aware of the fact that the election is over and are lying right on as before. The following bit of history, may have a two-fold effect, viz; to correct many false impressions, and to inform certain blatant libellers that the election is over.

Board of canverers met pursuant to law at the Court House in Auburn on Thursday Oct, 15, 1874, present 14 members.

Votes canvassed and poll books and tally papers passed to clerk as the law required and clerk proceeded to foot up columns of number of votes. While the clerk was thus employed Mr. Cornelius, return judge of Troy Tp, stated that there was an error in the statement of votes in said township received for Mr Taylor for Representative, and he Mr. Cornelius, wished the board to correct it, and a viva voce vote was taken on the proposition, but as it was uncertain as to the number of votes on each side I demanded a rising vote which was ordered by the chair, and I believe the chair declared the vote in the affirmative. Supposing this to be the final determination of the matter so far as the board was concerned, I first verbally protested, and then presented written protest against the acting of the Board, whereupon Mr. Murphy, of Newville, moved a reconsideration of the vote on the adoption of the proposition, which motion prevailed and the vote was reconsidered. It was then moved by Mr. Thomas of Union I think, that Mr. Cornelius be permitted to make the change proposed by him, which motion did not prevail. Mr. Thomas then moved that Mr. Cornelius be permitted to withdraw the paper for five minutes, which motion was voted down. On the last two propositions three or four voted in favor, and eight or nine against. I did not vote on any of the questions voted on by the Board. A number of the members stated, while the main question was under consideration that we must take the papers as they were presented to us, and could not allow of any tampering with them. I am charged with arbitrarily clearing the room of spectators, all there was of this, the chairman suggested that the board retire for consultation, and I remarked to him that probably the bystanders would retire and leave the Board in the room prepared for it, and I believe the chairman made the request and the bystanders complied with it but no determination was arrived at before they reentered the room. I am threatened with a contest which I think I shall resist, as I believe I can show that I am legally elected to the office of Representative.

The despicable course pursued by some of Mr. Taylor's friends has made me more determined than I otherwise should have been.

To show how desperate they have become I will state that before the election it was reported I thought rather timidly—that I had been induced to withdraw from the contest for Auditor by the payment to me by Mr. McIntyre of one hundred dollars since the election, it has increased at the rate of over $100.00 a day, and now amounts to the pretty fair sum of $1,000.00, when they get it up to $1.000.000.00 I would like to take it. However I pronounce the whole charge a base cowardly lie, with not the shaddow of truth for the foundation, and I pronounce those who are circulating it base, cowardly unmitigated liars.

I will add in conclusion to the hold the office if I have received a legal majority of the votes cast, if I have not received such majority I do not want to hold it. I intend to thoroughly investigate the matter, and all the howling of the hounds on my track will not deter me. So all concerned may as well take it cool.

Pioneer Sketches

OF

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER 30.

Mr. [illegible] here gives a detailed account of a trip through the wilderness, to Highland county Ohio, in the summer of 1834 when the streams were all foaming high, exposing him to death by drowning and of a few narrow escapes from being murdered for money he was supposed to have, and from which untimely death a supposed pistol, (which existed only in supposition,) saved him &c. Much as we would be gratified to be able to give his entire narrative, yet its length, and the bounds we must neccessarily give to our "sketches." forbid.

Mr. H. goes on to say, in 1834 John Fee entered the large and excellent farm, of 5 or 6 hundred acres, on which he lives between Steuben and DeKalb counties. Indulge me in telling an anecdote of him. He had been out to the prairies for grain, and froze his feet badly, so that for a long time, he could not wear boots or shoes. So he got the Indians to make him a large pair of moccasins, which he wore. One day, after his feet got better, he went out hunting, and, after sauntering through the woods awhile, he crossed the largest moccasin track he ever saw. He looked with astonishment at the monster track, and said to himself what an Almighty big Indian has been along here! Itst d———est big Indian has ever been in these woods. About the time his astonishment and curiosity got to its hight he chanced to look behind him, and lo! it was his own track.

Fee's settling there led in others.—Luther Keep Charley Grain, Peter Boyer and Charles Boyer were the earliest.

When the country was organized sheriff Park came here, put up notices for an election for county officers and appointed me inspector. I chose Luther Keep and A. F. Beacher Judge. In organizing the township. Mr. Keep, being the oldest man, told me that as I was the first settler, I should name the Towhship; —and we agreed together on the name of Franklin. This is a good Township; though not so propitiously blest as Butler flowing with milk and honey. True, honey was very plenty yet milk was tolerably scarce, till we got some cows in the Township.—It is tolerably well provided for in school houses. There is one church near the center. It belonging to the Lutheans.—Preaching is mostly done in school houses

As Mr. F. Beecher was one of the earliest settlers, and of the first board of county commissioners, I feel it due to his memory, as he has gone from earth, to relate an adventure of his and of another of our citizens in company. Dr. Park was living in Hamilton, and tne blacklegs of Noble county stole his horse. Beecher and Willard Eddy started on horsepack for the tamarack house, to look for the horse. Although they did not find the horse yet they did find about a dozen black legs in a barn describing their countrfeit money to their runners. They had quite a pile of it. Beecher made a lunge among them, and grabbed a lot of their money, and started to run away; but Latta their president knocked him dowm, and they got all the paper back. It was certainly lucky that the two did not get hurt. They went to a justice to take law, but the justice was either one of the gang, or was afraid of his life or property. It was about the time that several barns were burned in Noble county by the blacklegs Pity Beacher's strength had not been equal to his courage. Park went out to look for his horse, but got nothing but a severe raw hiding from Latta for his trouble and his horse. I myself have lost about two hundred dollars by the same gang of Villians. This Bellfountain road was one of the principal routes leading to their nest. About a week after moving on my place in 1838 a stranger road up to my house. He was an awful looking man but carried the prettiest rifle I ever saw. Said I stranger you have the nices kind of a gun. Will you let me look at it, yes said he and I took hold of it, but he jerked it back, saying that he would not trust his gun in the hands of a stranger. He went on, and passed the road several times afterwards. About twelve years ago the peopld of the North western Illinois took the same man out in the prairie —formed a half circle on one side of him and told him to run for his life, and they would all shoot at him as he ran. He started and fell dead pierced by twenty bullets! Such was the end of John Driscal.

And now fellow citizens, when I first moved into Franklin my nearest neighbor was at Denmark, 10 miles off. My next neighbor, on the west, was Jackson prairie, 22 miles away. I had to buy my grain on the prairie to get grinding and with the many mire holes I had to struggle through, and with the vast number of times I had to unload.

Every man in DeKalb County should take his county paper, and as the Courier is acknowledged to be the largest and best paper, that is the one you should take. Only two dollars per annum. Try it six months.

One of our handsome young ladies, on being ask if she attended church Sunday evening, said: "I did not attend. I 'took in' love feast that night." Now, that fellow, whoever he was, ought to be extremely happy to know that he had her "foul."

The News says Ensly beat a Congressman two years ago and this year a hog drover. An honest man, a farmer, a hard working man is thus contemptously called a hog drover, by one who could not hold a candle to him so far as character and solid worth are concerned.

Gordon & Roth are having splendid success in their new gallery. They are receiving orders from all parts of Northern Indiana. Their superior work is giving them a splendid reputation far and near. They defy the State to beat them quality or work and low prices.

Though Mr. Kelly received a handsome majority in the county, every thing considered yet it ought to have been increased still more. We had promised ourself to go down and hear his maiden speech in Congress, and we only regret that this is postponed.

J. A. BARNS, Co Supt.

Last Sunday evening Rev. Mr. Meek, of Kendallville, officiated at the M. E. Church in this place. His sermon was a good one with one exception, and that is it was too short—only two hours giving it. He made some illustrations regarding christains which was characteristic of several, perhaps, in hearing. The audience was large and very attentive.

Fort Wayne tried the people's dodge, but it did not pan out well. If sore-heads had not burdened the ticket, it might have had better success, but you get a few men who have sold out their party to endorse anything, and its a goner. There has been some corruption in Allen County, but we hope it is at an end, as good officers have generally been elected.

New hats and neatly trimed for little money, at Stamets'.

Free Kelly was not elected, Baker received a majority of 51 votes. We heard a number remark that if they had known Kelly would have come so near it, they could have got him enough to elect him. Poor argument. Every body should go on the supposition that their man is going to be elected, and work all they can for them. A few votes too many never hurts any one. But it was a gallant fight, and the crafty Baker ought to be humbled.

We Mean Business.

We must have every dollar due to us by the end of the year. There are quite a number delinquent among our subscribers and we request them to come in without delay and pay us. We are poor and hard up, and the few dollars owing us here and there will help us along. Do not delay, therefore but be prompt in the payment of all arrearges.

The Butler News announces that it will remove to this place next week. We doubt whether this will be a judicious step, as Auburn is hardly able to support two papers. Perhaps Weamer expects the county printing, however, and he may rub along with this. But that would leave the Press out, the oldest established Republican paper in the county, and it has claims the party cannot ignore.

The offering of a choice building lot by Sam, Pet & Max, to some one of their customers who shall purchase goods to the amount of $10, in a single bill, between now and the 1st of January, is one of those popular advertising schemes that has given Max Nirdlinger such a reputation as a scientific advertiser. He has made advertising a study. He never invests a dollar in this way that does not bring back two; but he succeeds only because he gives the people the most for their money.

W. B. McConnell of Angola recieved an over whelming unprecedented majority in this judicial circuit for Prosecutor.—Owing to his great personal popularity, for Mr. Morlan his competitor is a genial clever fellow himself. Mack's own county done a handsome thing for him in giving a majority of 48. The county is usually from 800 to 1,000 Republican. Noble county also done well for him. Wm. makes an efficient prosecutor and stands high with the bar. He has a bright future before him for a young man, and we trust that such will be his relaization.

A Chance for Somedody to win a $500 City Lot in Rockhill's Addition.

It is simply a new method advertising their establishment.

The lucky ticket will be determined by the Mayor of the city, before a number of prominent citizens. All the numbers from 1 to 1000 will be placed in a wheel, which will be shaken up, and the committee can decide whether the first or any succeeding number shall win the $500 prize, lot No. 69, corner Mechanic and Walnut streets, Rockhill's 2d addition.—Every purchaser of clothing to the amn't of ten dollars (10) will receive a ticket, the purchaser selecting any number he desires.

DEFEAT OF OUR COUNTY TICKET

How it was Brought About !

J. R Lanning in the role of a "Bolter."

Not Susceptible of "Electioneering."

"THE ISSUE MADE UP!"

POLITICAL TREACHERY!

Was it Cleopatra or some one else who nursed the asp in her bosom until it became warm, when in return for her kindness it stung her to death. We remember of having heard the story, and it comes to us now with telling force in view of the events in and around the late election There is a peculiar likeness to this in the course J. R. Lanning took in the campaign. Three months ago we had unbounded confidence in this man's Democracy and honesty, but a few days has sufficed to sweep it away like a dream, and we propose now to tell just how it was done. We shall treat of facts, for we have no reason to misrepresent him. We will confine ourself strictly to the truth. The pronoun I will have special reference to the editor of this paper.

About a week before the election, I met Mr. Lanning on the Court House steps with Mr. McIntyre. Something was said about the printing of the tickets, when Mr Lanning said that they ought to be so printed that the names would be far enough apart to write in a name. I told him my idea was just the reverse. He then confessed his opposition to Mr. Murray, said he intended to do all he could to defeat him. That other prominent men in the county were determined to punish that faction in the east part of the county for their course of two years ago, that it had to be rebuked and now was the time to do it. He said he had taken no part in the convention and was not bound by its action, that Mr. Murray's nomination was brought about by trading and other means He distinctly said that he wanted two hundred tickets printed for himself in the manner he had suggested, and the last words he said to us when we parted was that he wanted me to let him know if I would print them, if not he would get them some where else. This is the substance of that conversation. We give his own words ver batim as to the convention.

Mr. McIntyre left us shortly after the commencement and I do not remember of any one being present during the conversation. He said something in regard to the two candidates decidedly in favor of Mr. Ensley, but I was so indignant at the stand he took that I cannot remember the remark distinctly. I told him that if this was his position it ought to be made public, that the party should know it. He said he did not care, that he was not susceptible of electioneering, that the issue was made up and he was going to stand by it.

We repeated the substance of this conversation to Mr. C. G. Ralston, Mr. McIntyre and one or two others, and suggested that those who had any influence with him should see him at once.

Mr. Lanning now claims that this was a private matter and that we should have said nothing about it. He also says that we reported that he wanted Murray's name left off the ticket. We can prove this last to be false. Last Saturday I went to the Clerk's Office to ascertain why he was sending his patronage to the Republican papers. He said it was to offset what I had said about his opposition to the ticket. He claimed to have done nothing against Mr. Murray but that he could do nothing for him. That if I had not said anything it would have been all right. He now threatens to charge me with working only for the best officers, as that was my bread and butter. If I had nothing more to say against him than that, this article would never have been written. I worked for all as can be easily proved, as far as was in my power, and if we had succeeded in electing only Auditor, or Clerk, or Sheriff, or Treasurer, I would have felt that any effort I had made in their individual behalf was not against any of the others.

But how was it with this man that was not susceptible of being electioneered?—Was he found doing work for the ticket, as he ought to have done. He went to Waterloo the day before the election, and from there to Butler, but it is said that he took with him tickets with Murray's name scratched and Ensley's name written thereon. We don't know how correct this rumor is, but it is current here. How was it with him on the day of election—Was he in the midst of the battle fighting for the party that had placed him in office for eight years, doing good work for the cause? No, sir, he stood around with his hands in his pocket and done simply nothing to what he should have done, and thus by his example, encouraging the opposition, and in fact lending his influence to defeat the ticket. For proof of this we refer to the Democratic voters of this precinct. Then in face of all this opposition of all this pretended objection to Murray, after repeating and protesting time and again that he could not support him, like a coward he votes an open ticket for no other purpose than to cover up the trickery he employ against him. What do you think of the honesty of a man who will assert and re-assert that he is opposed to a certain nominee, and even go so far as to say that he will work against him, and come up on the day of election, after throwing all the dirt he could, and openly vote for the man, he so decidedly opposed? Don't you think the Clerk done it to hoodwink the people, so that he could boast and say he voted the straight ticket. It was the basest act of the whole next to his baser ingratitude of trying to stab the party that had taken him from obscurity and poverty and given him a position from which he has made a handsome fortune. And now to have revenge on us for exposing his treachery, he gives his patronage to the Republican papers in the county. If he thought this would deter us from exposing his villainies, he has made a great mistake. We have endeavored to be honest and faithful, and if these qualities debar us from any patronage of the party, we will cheerfully submit, rather than pander to political treachery, or for a moment encourage the viper that stung the bosom that warmed it.

DISSOLUTION NOTICE—The partnership heretofore existing between Ed. Eldridge and Joseph Rainier has been disolved by mutual consent. Mr. Eldrige will settle all accounts of the firm.

ED. ELDRIDE,
JOSEPH RAINIER

We call attention to the advertisement of Henry W. Bond which appears in another part of our paper. Nearly all of our readers will remember Mr. Bond as one of the firm of Townly DeWald & Bond, Ft. Wayne, where he made himself very popular as a merchant. In this new store he is better prepared than ever before to sell goods cheap. We called to see him when in the city yesterday and were suprised at the low prices he marked goods. We think he is selling cheaper than any other house in Ft. Wayne. Do not fail to visit his house when you get to Ft. Wayne.

Special Term.

The Commissioners met last Tuesday morning, and went into the consideration of the question of a new jail. They have finaly decided to build one on the plan submitted by T. J. Tolan, Esq., of Delphos, Ohio. The residence part of the building will be 38x47 feet, two stories high, mansard roof, to be built of brick. The cell house will be two stories high 42x33, containing two tier of cells, 14 in all, and will have four distinct departments. The whole building is to be heated by steam. The estimated cost is $30,000 and the building will be finished by the first of October 1875.

The plans of Mr. Tolan display an architectural beauty not surpassed and the internal appointments are the best we ever saw. We cannot but admire the good taste and judgement of the Board in the adoption of these plans. Mr. Tolan has acted the gentleman throughout and has not sought to use any undue influence to have his plans adopted. They possess a merit in themselves that cannot be ignored. The cells are so arranged that they can be opened or closed without the necessity of going into the jail at all. The plan for ventilation is good, and there is a simplicity in every arrangement. Work will not commence before spring, though much of the material will be placed on the ground during the winter. We think the Board will decide to locate it just east of the court yard on the ground where the old saw mill stood.

It is rich in soil and of surpassing beauty. THE military arrest of Count Von Arnim by Bismarck is exciting a good deal of interest in Europe. A Berlin telegram states that the Emperor William has ordered that no stone be left unturned in the efforts to recover the missing documents.

A VIENNA telegram says that the idea of referring the Schleswig-Holstein question to the arbitration of the Queen of England is gaining hold of the diplomatic mind. It is stated that the Danish Government is favorable to such a course, which, it is thought, offers a feasible method of solution.

THE Bismarck-Von Arnim case is being gradually unraveled to the German public and the world. Von Arnim still remains in prison, the reason for his confinement being that he refuses to give up letters which he received, while Ambassador at Paris, from Bismarck. It seems that after Von Arnim's removal from the position of Ambassador to Paris, an office which he lost on account of a pro-Catholic correspondence with Dr. Dollinger, he retired to his estate at Nassenheid as determined to prepare his statement as an American would be under similar circumstances. Bismarck, suspecting that his confidential correspondence to Von Arnim might figure unpleasantly for him in the retired Ambassador's statement, immediately seized upon the person of the offending subject in order to secure the tell-tale letters. They were not yielded then, neither have they been since. Bismarck still holds his victim by virtue of his superior power only, and as Von Arnim is doubtless a strong-willed man, the result of the contest cannot be easily determined....Full returns of the elections in France for Councils-General have been published, and foot up as follows: The Republicans elected 672, Monarchists 604, Bonapartists 155. THE INDIANS.

Gallant Fight of Six Soldiers with 125 Kiowas and Comanches.

In the report of his recent operations against the Indians, Gen. Miles gives the following thrilling account of a fight between six soldiers and 125 savages:

I deem it but a duty to brave men and faithful soldiers to bring to the notice of the highest military authority an instance of indomitable courage, skill, and true heroism on the part of a detachment from this command, with the request that the actors be rewarded, and their faithfulness and bravery recognized.

On the night of the 10th inst. a party consisting of Sergt. Woodhall, Company I; Privates Peter Rath, Company A; John Harrington, Company H, and George W. Smith, Company M, 6th cavalry; Scouts Amos Chapman and William Dixon, were sent as bearers of dispatches from the camp of this command on McClellan creek, Texas, to Camp Supply, I. T. At 6 a. m. on the 12th, when approaching the Washita river, they were met and surrounded by a band of 125 Indians, Kiowas and Comanches, who had recently left their agency, and at the first attack all were struck, Private Smith mortally and three others severely wounded. Although inclosed on all sides, and by overwhelming numbers, one of them succeeded, while they were under a severe fire at short range, and while the others with their rifles were keeping the Indians at bay, in digging with his knife and hands a slight cover. After this had been secured they placed themselves within it, the wounded walking with brave and painful efforts, and Private Smith, though he had received a mortal wound, sitting upright within the trench to conceal the crippled condition of their party from the Indians.

From early morning until dark, outnumbered twenty to one, under an almost constant fire, and at such short range that they sometimes used their pistols, retaining the last charge to prevent capture and torture, this little party of five defended their lives and the person of their dying comrade, without food, and their only drink the rain-water that collected in a pool mingled with their own blood. There is no doubt but that they killed more than double their number, besides those that were wounded. The Indians abandoned the attack on the 12th.

The exposure and distance from the command which were necessary incidents of their duty, were such that for thirty-six hours from their first attack, their condition could not be known, and not till midnight of the 8th could they receive medical attendance or food, exposed during this time to an incessant cold rain.

Sergt. Woodhall, Private Harrington and Scout Chapman were seriously wounded. Private Smith died of his wounds on the morning of the 13th. Private Rath and Scout Dixon were struck but not disabled.

The simple recital of their deeds, and the mention of the odds against which they fought; how the wounded defended the dying, and the dying aided the wounded by exposure to fresh wounds after the power of action was gone—these alone present a scene of cool courage, heroism and self-sacrifice which duty, as well as inclination, prompts us to recognize, but which we cannot fitly honor.

A Telling Reply.

In a small town but a few miles distant from this city there recently arrived a man, who put up at the hotel, minded his own business, spoke but little, and paid his bills with regularity. The quiet demeanor of the stranger attracted considerable unfavorable comment, which at length grew into a belief that he was a burglar laying plans for a future raid by a well-organized gang of law-breakers. The townspeople at length held a meeting to consider the case, and the landlord of the hotel was appointed a committee of one to wait upon the stranger and ask his business in town. The landlord took occasion to do so at meal-time. The stranger laid down his knife and fork, and said: "You see, landlord, I was unfortunate enough to get into a scrape a short time ago, was caught, and sentenced to be hung and to reside two weeks in this place. I have lived out one week already, but I am doubtful about being able to serve out the other." The landlord withdrew, and the townspeople asked no further questions. —New Haven Palladium.

OTTO OF ROSES.—The crop of roses in the Orient has so fallen off this season that it is thought the whole amount of otto of roses distilled will not exceed 1,600 pounds, whereas the product last year was 2,700 pounds. There are eight provinces in Turkey which together yield ordinarily 3,600 pounds, and occasionally, as in 1866, 6,600 pounds. Again their product will fall to 1,700 pounds, as in 1872. The largest of these provinces gives about 1,900 pounds. The amount is variable, but, on the average, it takes 3,000 pounds of roses to produce a single pound of otto of rose. Great care is necessary in the cultivation of the crop, the business of which is entirely in the hands of the peasantry and farmers, who have their stills and condensation-tubes at work all the season. In consequence of the short crop this year, the price of otto of roses has made a considerable advance in London, Paris, and New York.

Was around about me clung,
And sez was a-calling of me sweet.

A Model Government.

Hon. Joseph Medill writes from Berne, Switzerland, to the Chicago Tribune:

Switzerland is a most unique country in every respect. Surrounded by monarchies, it is a pure republic. While every other European nation has an Emperor or a King for a ruler, or is waging civil war to restore a deposed royalty, Switzerland has no prince or potentate, not even a President. Her executive authority consists of a Council of State, appointed by the Legislature for a limited period of time, and with the power of removal. One of this Council Board is appointed Chairman of the board for one year, with the title of President. But he has no patronage, no power of removal or pardon—nothing except the privilege of presiding at the sittings of the Council of State and countersigning its resolutions and orders. It is the same as if the American Congress elected the Cabinet officers, and also the presiding officer of the board, and, at the same time, abolished the office of President or Chief Magistrate, and absorbed the powers of the office into those of the legislative body. How this system of legislative aggrandizement would operate if adopted in the American republic, is not hard to predict; nevertheless, it works well in this small country of simple-minded and honest mountaineers, where "rings," lobbies, and Credit Mobilier schemes are unknown.

The Swiss government is unique in another respect: Its legislative proceedings are conducted and recorded in three languages—German, French, and Italian—corresponding to the three races which compose the population of the republic; but the Germans constitute the great majority of the inhabitants. In the census returns of 1870, it was ascertained that 384,561 families spoke German as the mother-language, 134,183 French, and 30,293 Italian; but all the educated persons can speak French. When a Frenchman makes a speech in the Swiss Congress, all the Germans and Italians can understand him perfectly, but they generally reply in their own languages, which, the French members not understanding, the official interpreter states the substance of in French. All bills, reports, and resolutions are written in the three tongues, and the journals are kept in the same way, and the laws and proclamations are printed in the three languages.

The Cost of War.

The Republic magazine presents some rather startling statistics concerning the different wars in which the United States has been engaged. In the war of the Revolution (1775 to 1783) 278,021 soldiers were engaged; in the war of 1812 to 1815, 527,654; in the Mexican war, 73,260—making a total of 878,935—while in the war of 1860 no less than 2,757,598 were engaged. During the rebellion 279,689 officers and men were killed or wounded, while 6,749 were missing in action. Since the commencement of the war the government has paid, up to June, 1874, in pensions, over $251,000,000. Deducting $5,000,000 for former pensioners, there is left $246,000,000 growing out of the rebellion. Some idea of the number of pensions, and the amounts paid during these twelve years may be gathered from the following table:

Army invalids	99,804
Army widows and dependent relatives	112,088
Survivors of the war of 1812	18,266
Widows of soldiers of the war of 1812	[illegible]
Navy invalids	1,430
Navy widows and dependent relatives	1,730
Total	238,411

The rebellion entailed a debt of $2,500,000,000 upon the government to be paid by the people, and, aside from the principal of the public debt, and pensions, there was paid during the fiscal year 1873 the sum of $127,992,989.95, on account of expenses growing out of the late war.

Wisdom of the Egyptians.

Philologists, astronomers, chemists, painters, architects and physicians must return to Egypt to learn the origin of writing—a knowledge of the calendar and solar motion—of the art of cutting granite with a copper chisel, and of giving elasticity to a copper sword—of making glass of the variegated hues of the rainbow—of moving single blocks of polished syenite nine hundred tons in weight, for any distance by land or water—of building arches round and pointed, with Masonic precision unsurpassed at the present day, and antecedent by two thousand years to the Cloaca Maxima of Rome—of sculpturing a Doric column one thousand years before the Dorians are known in history—of fresco painting in imperishable colors—and of practical knowledge in masonry. And it is no less clear that every craftsman can behold on Egyptian monuments the progress of his art four thousand years ago, whether it be a wheelwright building his chariot, a shoemaker drawing his twine, a leather-cutter using that selfsame form of knife which is considered the best form now, or a weaver throwing the same hand-shuttle.

Old-Time Divorces in Colorado.

Women were scarce, and if it got about that one was not handsomely treated by her husband a miners' meeting was called and the case considered. If the decree then was granted—it always was—then this was the mode: Two honest miners were detailed to hold the broomstick in a horizontal position, and the parties to the suit required to jump it in token that their divorce was an accomplished fact. The good morals of the camp required that the woman marry immediately, and as one after another of the elect men fell from luck it would often happen to the lady to have had as many husbands as she of the Scriptures; and it might be said of the last as of the first. And he jumped the broomstick also.—Boulder (Col.) News.

SAID that Detroit Justice: "It is my solemn duty to warn you, Jane Welch, that you are on the high road to degradation. This court is going to send you to the House of Correction for sixty days, but only with a feeling of kindness. You will have time to reflect; your nose will lose its rosy hue; you'll have a chance to comb your hair and make yourself a bustle, and I haven't a doubt that, before you come out, you will have such high aims that a policeman can't get within ten rods of you."

A Crumby Convention.

No fictitious characters impress us with a sense of reality like those of Shakespeare. When we read of a Convention of the Fat Men of Ohio and Michigan, which was held at Put-in Bay on the 10th inst., we said to ourselves: "Ah! if only Sir John Falstaff could have been there!" He is the ideal of adipose. He is the refinement of grossness. His wit and his waggery; his mendacity so enormous that it almost seems more respectable than truth; his selfishness so absolute that it has an aspect of generosity; his sensuality so little concealed that it well nigh amounts to the spiritual—all these are qualities which demand large quarters. We cannot picture him as spare; we cannot think of his unctuous sentences coming from a hungry mouth. His great sides give to his chaff and balderdash the gravity of a sermon. Manger many doubts, we respect him as we respect a mountain. He talks, it is true, almost always of himself, but then there is so much to talk about! Hundreds of pounds go to his composition, and there is the wisdom which makes the best of everything in every ounce of them.

But we must not forget our fat friends at Put-in Bay while dwelling affectionately upon their swelling prototype. Such a meeting was of ponderous portent, and may be called the Apotheosis of Avoirdupois. There was, indeed, in the regulation of the convention, a slight suspicion of personal pride and exclusiveness. The standard of qualification was high, or at least broad and heavy. Perfect rotundity alone answered the completeness of the conception, and no light weight could enter there. A constitutional provision (Article I.) rigorously shut the gates of admission upon every candidate weighing less than 200 pounds. Credentials were in the corporation. Nobody concerning whose specific gravity there was the least doubt could take his seat before going to scale, and the lightest monster of a member, John Dulco, Esq., of Monroe, Mich., weighed 200 pounds; the most ponderous being Mr. John Templeton, of Swanton, Ohio, who pulled down 428 pounds, and was accordingly made honorary chairman. Ah! but it must have been a sight to see them all seated in long and billowy rows—ranges of sesquipedality, chains of abdominal Alps and pyramids of the pinguid! Only fancy the King of the Cannibal Islands looking in there with his mouth full of water! Why there were 56 distinct and separate masses of meat, and the aggregate weight thereof, if we have not blundered in addition, was 13,619 pounds! Had they been heaped up, it would have been Pelion upon Ossa. Woman, too, lovely and large, was there, viz.: Mrs. Walter Delerri, Norwalk, Ohio (298 pounds), and Mrs. Sullivan, North Bass Island, Ohio (298 pounds). Hail to you, most equal and most mighty mesdames! Joans of juiciness! noble champions of the equality of the sexes, at least in the matter of ponderous plumpness. Our souls all love largeness, and the tout ensemble must have been imposing in the extreme!—New York Tribune.

A Good Paper.

We do not often give a voluntary puff to any of the many professed family newspapers printed in the country. There is one, however, that possesses so many excellences as a family journal and news paper combined that we cannot refrain from saying a word in its praise. We allude to the Chicago Ledger. Each number is filled with the very choicest reading, including stories, anecdotes, sketches of adventure and travel, poetry, domestic recipes, and other useful information. It is printed by the Ledger Company, Chicago, at $1.50 a year, which is cheap when we consider that the paper contains forty-eight closely-printed columns of good reading. The Ledger is always a welcome visitor to our table. In the language of Rip Van Winkle, "May it live long and prosper."—Western Economist.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THERE'S a boy just over the garden fence,
Who is whistling all through the livelong day;
And his work is not just a mere pretense,
For you see the weeds he has cut away.
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

Not a word of bemoaning his task I hear,
He has scarcely time for a growl, I know,
For his whistle sounds so merry and clear,
He must find some pleasure in every row.
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

But then while you whistle, be sure that you hoe,
For, if you are idle, the briars will spread;
And whistle along to the end of the row
May do for the weeds, but is bad for the bread.
Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know.

COLTS may be taught to eat a little meal or bran, and to be handled freely. The gentlest possible treatment should be given to all young stock this season, and careful attention.

A WRITER in the Northwestern Farmer gives the following hints to those about purchasing milking stock: A crumply horn, full eye, head small and short, dished face, that is sunk between the eyes, skin soft and loose, deep from the loin to the udder, and very slim tail.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Poultry World recommends the administration of sulphur for gapes in chickens. He wets the tip of a feather (the rest being stripped to the quill), and rubs it in the sulphur, and then introduces it into the trachea of the sick chicken. One application is found sufficient.

A SANDY or gravelly soil is usually best adapted to the use of plaster, but it is found beneficial upon any soil abounding in vegetable matter. A clay soil has the power of absorbing ammonia, from the air, which is one of the offices of plaster, and therefore plaster is not as beneficial upon a clayey as a sandy soil.

OLD POTATOES.—An Eastern exchange gives this advice: "Potatoes, to be good, should never be exposed to the light, but be kept in as dark a place as possible. After they begin to sprout in the spring, they should be taken up from the bins or heaps and kept in boxes or barrels. If you have a few barrels saved out for family use, instead of picking them over and spreading them every few weeks, put them into enough barrels so that you can easily turn them from one to another. Have one extra barrel, and once every week turn them all out from barrel to another. This keeps them moving so often that the sprouts cannot grow enough to do much harm. The sprouts which come out from the potato use up the nourishment it contains, and leave it soft, watery and insipid. By treating them as proposed above, they may be kept in condition for the table several weeks longer than by sprouting them, and at the same time save a deal of work."

HEAVY CORN CROP.—The Practical Farmer thus notices the corn-field of Alexander Scott, of Delaware county, Pa. Ninety bushels to the acre of shelled corn is a common crop on this farm, which will no doubt be exceeded this year, as it is variously estimated by different persons at from 100 to 120 bushels per acre. This field of thirteen acres was managed as in other seasons, a tough green grass sod of about ten years' standing being first plowed down to the depth of from six to eight inches. On the upturned surface fifty bushels of lime was spread, and seven hundred pounds of bone to the acre. The soil being naturally of best quality, it is difficult to conceive of a more appropriate pabulum for a heavy corn crop. The corn crop was planted 4x4, and when we saw it was of a rich, dark green color, uniform in size, many stalks having two ears on. When this corn-field is husked and gathered, we shall give the results to our readers.

KEEP A FEW BEES.—Every farmer should at least keep one or two colonies of bees so as to have honey occasionally on the table, and there is no good reason why most farmers should not keep enough to have honey a common article of diet. Millions of pounds of honey go to waste every year, just for want of bees to gather it. It is estimated that one acre of good buckwheat in blossom will yield twenty-five pounds of honey per day. When basswood is in blossom the yield is immense. Wherever white clover abounds, there is a sure crop of honey. Nothing but ignorance can account for the great scarcity of bee-keeping farmers. Now-a-days the women are beginning to take this matter in hand. The good wife who posts herself on the subject need have no great trouble in obtaining honey enough to place upon the table whenever company comes and some for every-day use besides.

CLOVER HAY FOR HORSES.—The New York Herald says: Many farmers are strenuously opposed to red clover as feed for horses of any kind, as they contend the poisonous dust which rises from the dead stalks and dry leaves frequently causes the heaves. For many years we have kept horses almost exclusively on clover hay through our long winters, and if the clover was cut when about one-half the blossoms had turned brown, and the hay mostly cured in the cock in good weather, so as to retain most of its leaves and heads, and green appearance, we have never known it to produce either cough or heaves. We know of no reason why it should produce a cough in horses any more than red top or herd grass. Clover when cut early for hay, as it generally should be, from its succulence, if not well dried before being carried to the barn in large quantities, is very liable to heat in the mow, or on the scaffold; this process produces some injurious chemical changes in the hay. The starch, sugar, gum, etc., first assume the vinous fermentation, producing a saccharine quality in the hay. If the change here be arrested, no bad results would follow, the nutritive and healthy quality of the hay would not be lessened—but generally the vinous runs into the acetous fermentation—this is followed by sourness, moldiness and dust. Such musty hay fed to horses, when made from clover or any other kind of grasses, would be very likely to produce a stubborn cough, frequently ending in the heaves. It is no wonder that some farmers have a prejudice against such clover hay.

Domestic Recipes.

TO SWEETEN SALT PORK.—Cut as many slices as will be required for breakfast the evening previous, and soak till morning in sweet milk and water; then rinse till the water is clear, and fry. The pork will be found very nearly as good as fresh pork.

COCOANUT PIE.—One-half a cup of butter, one cup of powdered white sugar, four well-beaten eggs; beat whites and yelks together; one cup of grated cocoanut, one quart of sweet milk; mix butter and sugar together, then add the eggs and cocoanut, and lastly the milk. Bake in a lower crust. Eat when cold. This quantity makes two pies.

PICKLED PLUMS.—Seven pounds sweet blue plums, four pounds brown sugar, two ounces stick cinnamon, two ounces whole cloves, one quart vinegar. Put a layer of plums and spice alternately. Scald the vinegar and the sugar together; pour it on the plums; repeat for two or three days, the last time scalding plums and sirup together.

TO MAKE APPLE BUTTER.—The best apple butter is made by peeling, coring, and slicing selected sweet apples and stewing them in sweet cider. Very little of this sort of apple butter, however, comes to market. The bulk of that sold is made from second-rate apples, peeled, sliced, and stewed, and sweetened with brown sugar. A large quantity of such butter is made and sold for ship stores for use by sailors.

SHORT NUT CAKES.—Two cups of sweet milk, three cups of sugar, five eggs, three tablespoonfuls of butter, (level, not rounded), one and a half teaspoonfuls of soda, three of cream tartar, one spoonful of salt, a little nutmeg. (Here seems to be a case of unregeneracy in respect to the use of soda, etc.; but the probability is that "one of soda and two of cream tartar" is exactly the same as three of baking powder, and so on.)

A GOOD SALAD.—A correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle says: Here is a salad that will delight those who eat cucumbers with bread and cheese: Take a tomato, not overripe, and cut it into slices, as you would a cucumber; take a small onion, and cut it up as fine as you can, sprinkle it over the tomato slices, add salt, pepper, and vinger at discretion, and you will have a salad which, as a relish, puts the cucumber to shame.

MARBLE CAKE.—White—Two cups white sugar, one cup butter, half a cup sour milk, whites of four eggs, two teaspoons cream tartar, one teaspoon soda, two cups flour. Black—One cup brown sugar, half a cup molasses, one cup butter, quarter of a cup sour milk, half a nutmeg, one spoon cinnamon, half a spoon allspice, six cloves, half a teaspoon soda, and yelks of four eggs. Pour in the pan first the dark and then the light, and so on till all is in the pan; then bake.

PICKLED PEARS.—Twenty pounds peeled fruit, seven pounds sugar, one quart vinegar. Boil the sugar and vinegar together, stick a couple of cloves into each pear, and put them into the sugar and vinegar, with water enough to nearly cover them. When cooked enough, remove pears to stone jar, and after boiling the pickle for fifteen minutes longer pour it over them. Examine in a week, and if the pickle is not sufficiently concentrated, remove and boil down again.

The Rear of Houses.

Take the prettiest and best kept villages of New England, and we doubt if a tenth part of even the most pretentious mansions and the most ornate cottages will bear examination in the rear. Instead of being nicely finished in all their petty domestic details and conveniences, and kept snug and trig, with trim grass plots, with all the subordinate avenues and garden approaches well graveled, clean swept and free of refuse, and everything wholesome and orderly, there is apt to be a look of general untidiness, as if the residual rubbish of years had been dumped therein. Not unfrequently a railroad runs its track in such a manner as to expose the rear of plenty of houses to the eye of the traveler over it, whose sense of neatness is offended by the square rods of back-yard lumbered up with every conceivable variety of second-hand, damaged and invalided articles known to domestic use, from a horse-cart disabled by broken thills and wrecked wheels to the ghost of the baby carriage which survives two generations of children, interspersed with smashed crockery, rusty and condemned tinware, old boots, sardine boxes, disabled junk bottles, hoop-skirts which would have outlived all usefulness if they ever had any, chips, burdock, mullin, ashes, half-burned lumps of wasted coal, and all imaginable litter, trash, debris and dirt. On the other hand, nothing is prettier than a cottage which is thoroughly well kept in the rear as well as its more public portion. It seems inevitably redolent of a purer, sweeter, happier domestic life than one with heaps of festering rubbish crowding hard upon it.

Advice to Settlers.

At a late celebration of Queen Victoria's birthday in Virginia, Mr. St. Andrew is reported to have given his countrymen the following advice, which is equally applicable to Americans intending to migrate. He said:

1. Come in colonies, or go in colonies.
2. Bring money in your purse.
3. Leave your prejudices behind.
4. Don't expect too much.
5. For land or business pay cash.
6. Keep two-thirds at least of your money for working capital.
7. Avoid land-sharks. You can easily find out the reliable land agents.
8. In buying land don't get too much of a good thing.
9. Adhere to the old-fashioned principles of British honor. Don't attempt "smartness." Better-class Americans don't admire it; but they can beat you at the game if you challenge them to it.
10. Remember that success is more in the man than in the country.

The Ireland of America.

It is easy for us of the North, who fear neither the oppression of United States bayonets, the plundering of carpet-baggers, nor a war of races within our borders—who are blest with the possession of self-government, and who find ourselves unmolested in the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness—we say it is easy for us, far removed from the theater of discords, hatreds, corruptions and oppressions of the Southern States, to reply to every tale of wretchedness and ruin which comes to us from that woe-begone region: "Good enough for rebels! We wish them joy of it." The old stock in trade of catch-words—those cries with which, after the war, excited partisans were wont just before every local election to fire the Northern heart—are easily trotted out upon such occasions; and "Rebels!" "Traitors!" "Treason!" and "Disloyalty!" are shouted now with an alacrity and vociferousness altogether too business-like.

Let us of the North take warning in this matter from the sad example of Ireland, which has been before the world for centuries, and yet remains to this day as a warning example of political oppression inaugurated by the ruling power of England after a short-lived rebellion, and in some sense persevered in even to this very hour. In the case of that unhappy island, as in that of the Southern States, the rebellion against the dominant power was effectually stamped out by military force, and, after a contest as bravely fought as that of our late rebellion, Ireland, like the South, lay helpless at the feet of her conquerors. England upon that occasion made the same mistake of regarding the conquered inhabitants of Ireland as insurgents who had forfeited every right to generosity, or even to consideration, and, in the blind, insane, and foolish pursuit of this policy, she so managed to alienate and estrange the affections of a proud and generous nation, that to this day the name of England is a hissing and a by-word in the ears of every Catholic Irishman, and probably into no possible enterprise would the average Celt enter with more vim and enthusiasm, and in none would he pour out his blood more freely, than in a war between his adopted country and Great Britain.

The bone of contention which remained in Ireland when her demand for independent nationality, as in the case of the South, had been negatived by the sharp and stern logic of the sword, was the question of religious supremacy. In the South it is negro equality. Like England, we have sought by force to compel our late enemies to love the novel political system thrust upon them, forgetting as she did that the sentiments of affection and the love of human hearts can only be won by corresponding love and kindliness. Losing sight of the fact that no people can be successfully governed except by their own free will and consent, we have proceeded to coerce them into acquiescence, regardless of the fact that, the war once over, the rights of the people of the South were just as good, just as sacred as our own. As the question of religion became the stumbling-block to England in her efforts to coerce Ireland into loyalty and love for British institutions, so the negro question became an obstacle in the attempted reconstruction of the South. And just as in Ireland the English carpet-baggers of that day sought to cover up and hide all evidence of their own tyranny, oppression, wrong-doing, and mismanagement, by loudly vociferating "Disloyalty!" "Papists!" "Treason!" so in our own time, and in our own Ireland, have corruption, oppression, fraud, and outrage been hitherto hidden and concealed by cries as cheap, as demoralizing, and as unjust.

At the close of the rebellion we had more than gained all we sought for. The question of Federal supremacy was settled forever, and the right of any State to secede at will from the Union had been negatived by the sword. The fetters of the Southern negro were broken. No human being could again breathe the pestilent air of slavery in America! More than this, the right of suffrage was bestowed freely by the nation upon a race who so recently had bent beneath the yoke of bondage. Centuries of inherited thralldom had brutalized the negro, and for this, of course, he was not to blame. We must take facts as we find them, and here we find that ignorance, brutality, and degradation do actually, in many States, lord it over education, refinement and intelligence—with all which that implies. We will not particularize the consequences, inevitable consequences, of such a condition which would make us of the North exceedingly restive if our lives had to be spent in it, and which should bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every demagogue who makes that restiveness the subject of political capital.

The last straw which has broken the back of Southern patience has been the idiotic policy of forcing upon the Southern States a law designed to compel a species of social equality between former master and recent slave. The negro to-day stands invested by the law of the land with every political right which the law can bestow upon him. Beyond this it is senseless to attempt to force a social equality which certainly at the present moment cannot, in the nature of things, exist. This mad attempt has once more unsettled everything in that already distracted region. It has stirred up from the very bottom the venomous element of race prejudice, which nothing but the most delicate and skillful treatment can ever harmonize or allay. This is a question which must be permitted to settle itself. No legislation ever can or ever ought to force it upon a people. No edict can enter the human breast and control its thoughts and prejudices. And, until this can be done, no change except the slow and gradual changes of time and the softening influences of education can ever eradicate the ingrained prejudices of centuries. Engaging in such a mad and hopeless project, we shall only increase tenfold the prejudices we would fain to allay. We shall only estrange from us forever the affection and love of a brave and generous, though misled, people. They are masters of themselves and of their own actions within the law. They are the supreme masters of their own thoughts prejudices within their own hearts and minds, nor can we ever compel them by any human law to change or even modify them. Within the law, as it now stands, they are as good as we are. If, then, we continue longer to enact and enforce upon them odious laws which strike at them alone, but do not in any degree whatever press upon ourselves, or even benefit the negroes, we may yet live to see hopelessly estranged from us a large portion of the entire nation and their posterity, ever standing ready in vindictive hatred to strike us and to aid our enemies. Like England we may live to know what it is to have a foe at our own doors and in our own household. We want no Ireland in America.—Chicago Tribune.

The President and Louisiana.

Here is the New York Third-Term Convention clamoring for the summary suppression of revolts against "a duly organized State government." Here are the friends of the President applauding his promptness in sending troops and gunboats to restore law and order in New Orleans. Here are party organs lying in the most outrageous manner about the duty of the Federal Executive to sustain the decisions of the courts, and the utter inability of Gen. Grant to take the responsibility of deciding between Kellogg on the one side and McEnery and the people on the other. What is the truth about this matter? We purpose to show that Grant himself was the prime mover in the Kellogg usurpation; that he never followed the orders of the courts, but went before them.

At the beginning of December, 1872 (Warmoth being then Governor), the two canvassing boards, known as the Wharton and Lynch Boards, had both been superseded by the promulgation of a law passed at the previous session of the Legislature, under which the De Feriet board was subsequently appointed. This, according to the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee, was thereafter the only body competent to make a legal canvass of the votes. Warmoth had called the Legislature to meet in extra session, Dec. 9. Thus far there had been no canvass of the returns for Governor, and Durell had taken no action. There had been of course no resistance to the courts; there was no reason to believe that there would be any; it does not appear that the Marshal or any other officer had asked for troops; yet on the 3d of December Attorney-General Williams telegraphed the following extraordinary message to Marshal Packard: "You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States Courts, no matter by whom resisted, and Gen. Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose." Mr. Williams evidently knew what was coming. On the night of the 5th of December—still no trouble and no demand for military aid—two batteries of the 1st artillery were moved into New Orleans. On the same night Judge Durell issued his famous midnight order, made illegally, out of court, without even the form of judicial process, commanding the Marshal to take possession of the State House and prevent the assembling of the Legislature,—an order of which Senator Carpenter said, "it is impossible to conceive of a more irregular, illegal, and in every way inexcusable act on the part of a Judge; it had no more legal effect than an order issued by any private citizen." In accordance with this order, the troops furnished in advance took possession of the State House at 2 o'clock in the morning, and remained there under orders of Marshal Packard for more than six weeks. Meanwhile (that is to say on the 4th of December) the De Feriet Board had canvassed the returns, and declared McEnery and the rest of the Fusion ticket elected. But Marshal Packard's soldiers prevented the Legislature from assembling; a second order from Durell, issued like the first in open defiance of law and equity, recognized the Lynch Board, which had been legislated out of existence by the act signed the previous November; and that board, with no returns in its possession, proceeded to count in Mr. Kellogg on the strength of estimates, newspaper reports and forged affidavits. While this travesty upon republican government was enacting, Packard was keeping the Attorney-General advised by telegraph of every step in the outrage, and Collector Casey was telegraphing to the President: "The decree [of Judge Durell], if enforced, will save the Republican majority, and give a Republican Legislature and State government." Of course it was enforced. The troops had not been ordered to New Orleans in advance without a purpose.

The Legislature created by Durell and the Lynch Returning Board now impeached Warmoth, suspended him from office, and installed Lieutenant-Governor Pinchback in his place, all within a few hours, in flagrant disregard of the statute which prescribed the method of impeachment; and Pinchback, Casey, Kellogg, with the rest of the conspirators, began telegraphing madly to Washington for further aid. "Our members are poor," says Casey, in a dispatch to the President, "and adversaries are rich, and offers are made that are difficult for them to withstand. There is danger that they will break our quorum. The delay in placing troops at disposal of Gov. Pinchback, in accordance with joint resolution of Monday, is disheartening our friends and cheering our enemies. If requisition of Legislature is complied with the party will be saved." So on the 13th of December Mr. Williams telegraphed to Pinchback, "Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President;" and on the same day he replied as follows to the respectful request of a committee headed by Gov. McEnery for a hearing: "Your visit with a hundred citizen will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed."

That is the plain history of the Kellogg usurpation. It was not established by the courts; it was set up by the joint action of the President, the Attorney-General, and the United States Marshal. The pretense that Gen. Grant only enforced the decisions of a Federal Judge is a dishonest piece of effrontery. But even if it were the truth instead of a false pretense it would be no excuse for him. The courts had no jurisdiction to determine a question of this kind. They are not empowered to decide between rival State governments. That is the duty of the political branch. It belongs to the President and to Congress. Neither can throw off the grave responsibility which it imposes upon them. Neither can be acquitted of the crime—far greater than the offense of the drunken partisan Durell—which has reduced Louisiana to the abject and hopeless misery in which she lies today.—New York Tribune.

Kitchen Poisoning.

The recent poisoning in New York, caused by the reckless use of vermin exterminator, deserves the earnest attention of housekeepers. Three persons died and several others were seriously prostrated from the effects of this preposterous blunder. The developments at the inquest give a startling exhibition of the ignorance and carelessness of servants, and show how liable families are to fatal accidents in the kitchen, when constant supervision is not exercised by the mistress of the house. The particular exterminator used in this case was Paris-green, one of the deadliest of mineral poisons, and the testimony shows that it was employed in entire ignorance of the danger incurred. Enough of the substance was scattered about the kitchen to kill a regiment, the only excuse for such an invitation to disaster being a desire to rid the premises of roaches. Very likely the roaches were killed by such vigorous treatment, but it is a miracle that the whole family was not as summarily disposed of. As it was, the consequences were sufficiently dreadful. The poison was found scattered everywhere—among the dishes, among the knives and forks, and on window sills, where a breath of air might scatter it into articles under process of cooking. Such foolhardiness is almost incredible, and the carelessness in the head of the family in permitting such practices, equally so. The travail of looking after servants is often a serious one, but experience constantly shows that it cannot, either with safety or comfort, be relaxed.

Insanity in Michigan.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, writing of the Insane Asylum at Kalamazoo, says: It is found that the principal causes of insanity among the class of patients treated here are the unhealthiness of the low-lying sections of Michigan, from miasmatic influences, etc.,—the greatest number of them being found among the farming classes, their whole physical and nervous force being prostrated by the hard and continuous labor to which they are subjected. Generally, it springs from disease, and, however remote it has been, the cause of insanity is generally traced to this fact. Again, there are cases known as family degeneration, where the nervous system becomes worn out and exhausted, leaving the poor, demented inmate of the Insane Asylum as the sole and last representative of a family that has from generation to generation been gradually approaching the unfortunate end. An instance is recalled to my mind in the case of one of the most noted Governors of Iowa, who was, with his family, of the highest educational and professional attainments. Wasting his life-force by continual exertions and attention in the greatest efforts for the accomplishment of the numerous duties devolving upon him, he left to the next generation but a small inheritance of the important and requisite life-force; which was still further worked out and reduced until the third and last generation—the remaining member of which proved a helpless imbecile.

Saving is Wealth.

One great cause of the poverty of the present day is the failure of our common people to appreciate small things. They do not realize how a daily addition, be it ever so small, will soon make a large pile. If the young men and young women of to-day will only begin, and begin now, to save a little from their earnings and plant it in the soil of some good savings bank, and weekly or monthly add their mite, they will wear a happy smile of competence when they reach middle life. Not only the desire but the ability to increase it will also grow.

Let clerk and tradesman, laborer and artisan, make now and at once a beginning. Store up some of your youthful force and vigor for future contingency. Let parents teach their children to begin early to save. Begin at the fountain head to control the stream of extravagance—to choose between poverty and riches. Let our youth go on in habits of extravagance for fifty years to come as they have for fifty years past, and we shall have a nation of beggars, with a moneyed aristocracy. Let a generation of such as save in small sums be reared, and we shall be free from all want. Do not be ambitious for extravagant fortune, but do seek that which is the duty of every one to obtain, independence and a comfortable home. Wealth, and enough of it, is within the reach of all. It is obtained by one process, and by one only—saving.

The Science of Tough Goose.

A good many stories of stammerers are told, but none of recent date better than the following of Platt Evans, of Cincinnati:

It was one of his pleasures to teach his friends how to purchase tender geese, though he could not always get them in the market.

One morning he saw a lot, and inquired of the farmer how many there were.

'About a dozen,' was the reply.

'W-w-well,' said he, 'I k-k-keep b-boarding-house, and my b b-boarders are the biggest e-eaters you ever s-s-saw. P-p-pick out n-n-nine of the t-t-toughest you've g-g-got.'

The farmer complied, and laid aside the other three tender ones. Platt picked them up carefully, and putting them in the basket, said:

'I b-b-believe I'll t-t-take these three.'

THERE are some merchants who think they can "dispense with advertising," because they are so well known. Let such ask why it is that A. T. Stewart & Co. spend half a million every year for advertising. That firm is tolerably well known. We never heard it accused, either, of making bad investments.

AFTER AND OVER.

After the shower,
The tranquil sun
Silver stars when
The day is done

After the snow,
The emerald leaves;
After the harvest,
Golden sheaves.

After the clouds,
The violet sky;
Quiet woods when
The wind goes by

After the tempest,
The lull of waves;
After the battle,
Peaceful graves,

After the knell,
The wedding bells;
Joyful greetings
From sad farewells;

After the bud,
The radiant rose;
After our weeping,
Sweet repose.

After the burden,
The blissful meed;
After the furrow,
The waking seed

After the flight,
The downy nest;
Over the shadowy
River—rest.

HOME STRETCH—The stretch across the maternal knee.

IT is announced that "the faculty of Bowdoin have sent a circular letter to the parents of the suspended students." They sent a circular letter because it was the most likely to go round.

A NEW game, called "Granger seven-up," is announced. Three persons play for a can of oysters. The first man out gets the oysters, the last man out gets the can, and the "middle man" don't get anything.

AN interesting little boy, timid when left alone in a dark room, was overheard recently by his mother to say in his loneliness, "O Lord, don't let any one hurt me, and I'll go to church next Sunday and give you some money."

WIDOW JONES' husband died far away from home, and it took so long to reach her that the relict had quite recovered from her grief, and was giving a large lunch party, when the body finally arrived. A wagon drove up to the door, and a large box was handed out. Curiosity ran high among the ladies at the window, and with one accord they exclaimed, "Why, Mrs. Jones, what can that be?" Up went Mrs. Jones' eye-glasses, and after a glance she coolly said, "Well, it must be old Jones come home. Charley, run down and open the door for your father."

THE FATTED CALF.

Said Jack to Tom, one summer day,
"You're getting in a baddish way,
Your breath is short, your breast is flat;
You used to weigh a dozen stone,
And now you're only skin and bone—
Why, you're as lean as I am fat.

"Come out with me, my farm is near,
I know you'll like our country cheer;
My fruit is ripe, my eggs are new;
I've claret, too, your [illegible];
Come out, now, come; say 'Yes,' off-hand;
I'll kill the fatted calf for you."

"That last remark of yours, dear Jack,
Though meant in kindness, holds me back."
I don't see why, though," Tom replied.
"The fatted calf—to take its life—
Think of your children and your wife,
And you committing suicide!"

Mysteries of Vegetation.

The Opelousas (La.) Journal gives an account of a white-oak tree, in the parish of Calcasieu, which has, in the course of its growth, accomplished a curious feat. The trunk of the tree is 2½ feet in diameter, and rises to the height of about 25 or 30 feet without throwing out a single branch. About 12 or 16 feet above the base of the oak, the limb or stem of a pine tree, 6 or 8 inches in diameter and 12 to 16 feet long, passes directly through the center of its shaft, projecting several feet beyond each side. The oak incloses the pine tightly, and is as perfectly solid at this point as at every other. The question is, How did the pine and the oak get into so strange a position toward each other? The pine is dead, but the turpentine in its cells preserves it from decay, and conjecture helplessly wonders how it ever got through the oak, or the oak ever got around it.

In Mallet woods there is another white-oak that presents a curious feature. The trunk is of considerable size, and divides into two prongs about 1½ feet above the ground, which run up separately perhaps 15 feet, and then unite again into a single, solid stem. The two prongs are each, say, 1½ feet in diameter; but, when they become one again, the single stem is smaller in circumference than the two stems measure taken separately.

Rachel's Avarice.

Mlle. Rachel, the late great French tragic actress, who, nineteen years ago, visited this country on an artistic tour, had a well-deserved reputation for shocking avarice; in fact, she would have cut a cent into four pieces. As she was at supper one night, in a reunion of artists and authors at Alexandre Dumas' father's (whose prodigalities and superb disdain for money afforded a striking contrast with the celebrated Jewess' covetousness), the company indulged in playing cards, and Rachel, taking out of her pocketbook some money for the game, let a silver piece of 50 centimes (10 cents) fall on the floor. Much troubled by the incident, she immediately called for Dumas' servant to bring a candle and fetch the important trifle. "Let me do it," maliciously exclaimed Dumas, sending back his servant. "I'll find it for you, my love." And, taking out of his pocket a bank note of 100 francs ($20), he lighted it at the luster, picked up under the table the half-franc piece, and most graciously tendered it to Rachel, who carefully put it in her portmonnaie as she would have done with a relic coming from her ancestor Moses.

The Meaning of It.

The defeat in Ohio and Indiana is certainly the greatest disaster that the republican party has yet encountered. Amid the bustle and confusion consequent upon the receipt of returns, which takes place in Indiana the second night after election, it is difficult to pause and consider the full meaning of this democratic victory; but a few hasty words on the subject may not be out of place.

The result of the state election in Indiana is due in the first place to the excellent character of the ticket put in the field and to the vigor and enthusiasm with which the candidates threw themselves into the canvass—Their personal efforts deserves and, in a great measure, won success. They equaled their opponents in character and surpassed them in energy.

Another powerful influence at work was the active assistance given by the leaders of the party not directly interested in the contest. Governor Hendrcts, Judge McDonald, the Hon. J. B. Ryan and others flung themselves heartly into the field at a time when the issue doubtful, and did gallant service.

The platform of the democracy, was in some respects, a miserable blunder, and there is no reason now to change that decision. The reputation resolution is not sustained by any respectable polition in the state or country—except the author of it—and even Pendleton himself has set the seal of his condemnation upon the heresy to which he gave popularity. As far as inflation is concerned, the parties made no issue in their declaration of principles, both of them advocating the congressional control of the currency and the manufacture of unlimited amounts of it. But Hendricks, McDonald and Kerr boldly reasserted the time-honored financial principles of the democracy, and fought it out on that line, so that the hard money party may claim a partial success. In state matters the superioritiy of the democratic platform told effectually, and the declaration in favor of economy in state government and in favor of a license law were especially influential. The stand of the party against sumptuary legislation secured the aldance of the Germans, to whom a share of the honor of victory is due.

More effective, however, with all due respect be it spoken, than the sound principles with which the democracy identified itself and the able men who were the champions of these principles, were the crimes of the republicans administration. Their own sons fought against them, and overcome them. This state has not heretofore had an opportunity to speak its reprobation upon the wonderful rascalities which has come to light since the defeat of Horace Greeley in 1874. The Credit Mobilier, the Sanborn contracts, the District of Columbia frauds, the Salary Grab and the plundering of the Southern states—all these villainies have been exposed since then. The people have seen men like Greeley, Sumner, Seward and Chase die in opposition, one after another to the dominant party which they had, as it were created. They have seen like Judge Hoar, Judge Wilson, Dawes and Freeman Clarke withdraw in disgust to private life. They have seen open dishonesty and incompetency assuming control in public affairs. It is not to be wondered at that they have at length resolved to rebuke the administration and turn their faces toward reform.

Above all things the issue of Southern reconstruction must have had something of an influence in bringing victory since it failed to entail defeat The Sentinel labored earnestly to bring this question into the campaign from the beginning, conscious that among all the crimes and blunders of the administration its treatmet of the South stood conspicuous—inter arbusta cypressus. It will be necessary to allude to that tale of folly, malice and usurpation again and it is sufficient to say that no party ever took up its position in a better cause, than the champions of the south against their oppressors The revolution in Louisiana threw this reconstruction question into prominence,and under the leadership of Morton the republican rushed into the flagging canvass with the expectation of carrying everything before them in the cause of tyranny. The democracy of Indiana did not flinch but met them squarely on their favorite issue and triumphed. It is to be hoped that success marks the doom of a new era in which such a reconstruction shall be achieved as shall bring peace. prosperity and reunion. General Brady wanted the partisan press to keep the condition of the south before the public until after the election.

Distance of the Stars.

The star a Centauri, in the southern hemisphere, is found to have a parallax of about one second, but no other star in the celestial vault has been found to have a parallax of more than half a second. In quite a number of stars the parallax ranges from two-tenths to half a second. Let us see now what these measures give us for the distance of the stars. When a star has a parallax of one second, it shows its distance to be a little more than two hundred thousand times the distance of the earth from the sun; with a parallax of half a second, the distance is twice as great: with one of a third of a second, three times as great, and so on, the distance being inversely proportional to the parallax As there are only two stars of which the parallax exceeds half a second, it follows that with the exception of these stars are all more than four hundred thousand times as far as the sun. The sun being nearly a hundred millions of miles, this distance amounts to about forty millions of millions of miles Hence the nearest known star is distanced twenty millions of millions of miles; there about a dozen others of which the distance ranges from two to five times this amount, while all the remaining ones are situated at distances yet farther. You see that bright star, a Lyra, now (Oct. 1) a little west of the zenith? Dr. Brunnow has recently determined the parallax of that star to be almost one-fifth of a second consequently, by the rule we have just given, its distance is more than a times that of the sun, i. e., it is just about one hundred millions of miles.—Prof Simon Newcomb, in Harper's Magazine for November

[From the Ingel Union]

We are leaning over the creek bridge at Olcott, watching Ed Martin as he took his evening fish. Martin keeps the boat house on the west side of the creek, where at any time of day can be found a row boat creek-worthy of lake-worthy! As we stood there right on the landing at the boat house a little fellow knee high to a grasshopper who wanted to know—in a voice worthy of a large man—which boat he shold take As the youngster was just about tall enough to see over the top of an ordinary table, every eye was at once directed with an expression of mingled wonderment and amusement at the speaker. He was burdened with little more than pantaloons, shirt and soldiers cap. The question as to which boat he should take was put to Mr. Martin, his father who directed him to the little Lena, we beleive, a graceful shell, large enough to hold a half a dozen comfortably.

As the little boatman steped into the Lena a series of questions were put to his natural protector, who was playing with his fishing line:

Why does that little fellaw go out on the creek alone?

Oh, yes he goes where ever he pleases.

How old is he?

Five years old.

Do you let him take the boat where ever he chooses?

Yes, he goes on the lake frequently alone with the sale boat. He takes parties out sailling miles away from the land.

Are you not afraid to have him do so?

No, he know what he is about.

It was very evident from the way he was now handling the oars, that he knew what he was about. He sped up the creek like an arrow, and has just the stroke one might imagine the experience man of war's an arrow, man to have. There was some surprise felt by lady witnesses that the father could allow so diminutive a piece of humanity to brave the dangers of the waves alone. But they forgot, perhaps, that he was born a sailor, and, moreover, that a child is no more helpless—in ordinary times just as powerful as a strong man on the fickle waves. It was faith you remember in these old-times did wonders on the deep.

As the party was leaving the place, remarking upon what they had seen and heard a man who stood near trying to catch the attension of some three pounders with a spoon hook, gives his head an expressive shake, and said.

That boy is safer than many men on the water. I have met him miles out on the lake, sailing over the white capes as self possessed and brave as any old tar.

The pleasant little village of Greencastle met with a calamity night before last, which has never been equalled in the history of the State.

The greater part of the town lies a mass of charred and smoking ruins after having been visited by a fire which for the size of the place, worked a greater droportionate damage than any similar conflagration that has occurred in Indiana for years. The fire broke out in Kimball's furniture factory at 10:30 on Thursday night, and is generally believed to have been the work of an incendiary, as it started in some lumber in the factory yard, and Mr. Kimball some time before he had made a thorough examination of the place and found everything secure.—Once started everything seemed to conspire against the unfortunate town. There was no public cistern, save a small affair in the court house yard; the streams were too far off to be available, the private wells and cisterns were almost empty on account of the continued drought, which had made everything combustible as dry as tinder. Worse than all, the wind was blowing a gale at the rate of 22 miles an hour, and there was not a single engine or anything of the kind in the city to combat the advancing flames. As the fire was directly on that part of the city from which the wind came, it can well be imagined what a recapitulation of the entire losses brings a cool decision that the total loss was not more than $275,000, and the insurance policies in total amount to $92,000.

A lady who was urging some friends to dinner, felt disgusted when her 8 year old son came in and said, "Mrs. Jones says she can't spare no bread and Mrs Fox ain't to home, so I didnt get any butter." The friends thought they had better dine elsewhere, and the lady thought so, too, but she had taught that boy the way of the transgressor was hard.

A Ferocious Bull Tackles a Locomotive.

On Saturday, a bull which was being driven along the road near Plane No. 4 of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's gravity railroad, became unmanageable. It climbed up the steep embankment of two railroad on the loaded track. Just then a long train of coal cars came along at a high rate of speed. The bull turned, and lowered his head, and started to meet the train. The collision came, and the bull was thrown high in the air and came down in front of the cars. Fourteen of the cars were thrown down the bank fifty feet, and William Healy, a car runner, was fatally injured. The other men had very narrow escapes, saving themselves by jumping.

Won Her Way.

[Winona (Mich.) Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.]

I found here a widow lady—a Mrs. Geo. Peasly—at work in a marble shop with a number of men. She is cutting gravestones, taking them in rough the same as men, and is getting her three dollars a day, and puts in as much time as the average of men.—She has a number of children. As a short sketch of her history may be an encouragement to other lone women, I give it as follows:

When her husband died she was not able to buy a headstone complete, but bought a marble slab in the rough and finished it, and it can be seen standing at the head of his grave, near the village of Henderson, Minn. She then carved some work, and took it to a marble worker in the city of Minneapolis, and told him she was a widow with a family of children, and wanted work. The dealer examined the work said it was good, and that he would give her work on two conditions:—First she should promise not to work for any other dealer in the city, and, secondly, she should promise not to open business on her own account in the city of Minneapolis. She said she would agree to this if he would keep her in work all the time. But this lord of creation would agree to nothing of the kind. She went to St. Paul and there got work without any special agreements. Finally she came to this city, and is now in the employ of Mr. Ed. V. Bogart.

He Thought He Loved Her, and Then He Wasn't Sure About It

Joe——was a freshman at Cornell. He had long felt a preference for Miss Carrie——of Toledo and when he came home for the summer vacation and they went rowing on the Maumee one evening, while the stillness of the water, the mellowness of the moonlight and the enticing solitude were too much for Joe and after holding Carrie's little hand awhile, and trying to teach her how to row on the same seat with him, which Carrie found quite difficult—especially as the cars were of the spoon fashion—he succumbed to the demoralizing influence of the scene and proposed, and before he could say Tom Collins, he had a pretty girl sobbing in his arms.

"It will be three years before I can graduate. Can you wait until then, darling?"

Carrie was twenty-one Joe nineteen She seemed startled, but said, "Yes love."

Joe had time to think about it now, and there came into his mind a faint suggestion that he might have been just a trifle premature, and he wondered if he really loved Carrie.

Father thinks I had better take a couple of years at the Yale Law school, after I got through the literary course, he faultered.

A piteous expression was on Carrie's face, but it softened into one of calm resignation as she sighed, Yes, love.

But he heard her whisper to herself, "Five Years!" His guilty conscience confirmed the suspicion that he did not adore her as he should.—He commenced with desperate calmness, and ended with a shriek: Uncle says that I must finish off with four or five years to the German Universities, and then I want several years to travel!"

Carrie looked wild and fainted.—She has concluded that she will not wait.

Had Kept Tavern Himself.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, writing from Fort Laramie, says:

I saw a desperado get a nice dose of quiet courage and stern will at this time, 1867. I had occasion to go down the road, and to wait for the train.—My abiding place was one of those dining tents, where I had taken a meal in the meantime. Among the several persons seated around me one evidently was very raw.

His dress was semi-clerical, and as he held forth in no constrained manner about "the terrible sin" and "Babylon on Cheyenne," the old timers within hearing enjoyed, in an uncouth way, poking a little chaff at him. In the midst of one of his tirades against "this sink-hole of perdition" a man came into his tent, walked up to the bar and demanded drink. It seems for some reason he had been refused before. Suddenly throwing his arm under his coat he drew a six-shooter, and half faced the crowd and the bar keeper he said: "By—I'm goin to have a drink right here, or I'll turn loose!" (meaning to shoot.)

To tell the truth most of those terrible old timers broke for the door, the bar-keeper sunk under the counter, and death to some seemed imminent. I confess to a cold sensation down my back, and thought of several debts that different parties owed me, and wondered if I should ever be paid; the green field in which I had sported as a child rose before me vividly: I remember one Saturday, having played off sick, I went down to the foot of Mill stream and went swimming. I felt sorry for the Frogtown boys who licked me once, but what a sight. That parson, his tall slim form seemed to grow tall as in a quiet way he strides up to the teeth darling cuss with the pistol. He wrenches that weapon from this terror, grasps him by the throat, fairely lifted him from his feet, his protruding tongue and blackened face shows the powerful grasp of the person's hand, and, to make the picture more complete, says in ordinary tones

My friend I have observed you before to day trouble the lanlord of this tavern; I am of the opinion you are in the wrong place. The lanlord appears to think you have had sufficiency of intoxicating liquor. Now observe, if you create any further disturbance I will jerk the gullet out of you. And he literally threw him heidlong out of the door. Subsequently the parson held forth on the sins and iniquitice of Cheyenne and was listened to respecfully by the sudduced old sinners. I was constrained to seek a favorable opportunity to ask the parson where he learned that grip?

'Oh,' says he, 'I used to keep a tavern down east; that's where I got my hand in.'

The Tilton case will be a magnificent one for the display of legal talent. Conklin, Evarts and Graham' to say nothing of the able assistance named, constitutes a triumvirate very difficult to match. Evarth is almost without a peer for keeness and accuracy, while John Graham is the greatest lawyer for a desperate case, in the country—bold, unscrupulous, elequent and able Matt Carpenter, Daniel Dougherty and David Dudley Field will prove foemen worthy of their steel. The last is a host in himself, and after seeing him fight a desperate cause for 2 weeks single handed against half dozen of the ablest men in New York.—Stats Sentinel.

A nice young man in Des Moines got married not long ago. He has worked his way to the bottom of the drawer and got reduced to one clean shirt. He thereupon rose earlier than usual one morning, and kindled a fire. When hanging on the kettle he made a noise on purpose to arouse his wife. She peeped over the blanket and exclaimed:

"My dear, what are you doing?"

He deliberately responded:

"I've put on my last clean shirt, and I'm going to wash one for myself."

"Very well," replied she, "you had better wash one for me, too."

Among the mountains of Virginia are found many wild hogs, which do not hesitate to attack the traveller, and without doubt the most dangerous denizens of the mountains. They are usually found in herds of from five to twelve, and the sight of a human being is the only signal for attack that they require. The intruder has then nothing left him but to outrun them, or climb a tree and wait for them to leave.

They further remark that, although much has been said and written upon the subject, the question has not come to him in a form requiring a reply, and therefore any utterances he might make would not only be gratuitous and intrusive, but contrary to usage.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of Oct. 28 states that at a Cabinet meeting the evening previous the third-term question was broached by one of the Ministers. President Grant, in reply, said that the offer of a third-term candidacy had never been made to him in any way which could command his attention, and that in the absence of a formal offer from some authorized body, he considered that it would not be consistent with the dignity of the President of the United States to make any public statement concerning the matter. The President added that he had never thought of becoming a candidate for the third term, and that the whole third-term excitement was the result of an idle or malicious newspaper sensation, and was ridiculous nonsense.

The British Foreign Office is advised that Sir Hercules Robinson has established a provisional government in the Fiji Islands. The annual revenue from the islands is estimated at $ 25,000.

The Warmth of Clothing.

The London Medical Record says that Dr. Von Pettenkofer, in a careful study of this subject recently published, has pointed out that the permeability of stuffs to air is a condition of their warmth. Of equal surfaces of the following materials, he found that they were permeated by the following relative quantities of air, the most porous flannel, such as is used ordinarily for clothing, being taked at 100; flannel, 100; linen of medium fineness, 58; silk, 40; buckskin, 58; tanned leather, 1; chamois leather, 51. Hence, if the warmth of clothing depend upon the degree in which it keeps out the air from our bodies, then glove-kid must be 100 times warmer than flannel, which every one knows is not the fact. The whole question, then, is resolved into that of ventilation. If several layers of the same material be placed together, and the air be allowed to permeate through them, the ventilation through the second layer is not much less than through the first, since the meshes of the two form a system of continuous tubes of uniform diameter, and the rapidity of the movement of the air through these is affected merely by the resulting friction. Through our clothing, then, there passes a stream of air, the amount of which, as in ventilation, depends upon the size of the meshes, upon the difference of temperature between the external and internal atmosphere, and upon the velocity of the surrounding air. Our clothing, then, is required not to prevent the admission of the air, but to regulate the same so that our nervous system shall be sensible of no movement in the air. Further, our clothes, at the same time, regulate the temperature of the contained air, as it passes through them, so that the temperature of the air between the clothing and the surface of our body averages 84 deg. to 86 deg. Fahrenheit. The hygroscopic property of different material used for clothing essentially modifies their functions. This property varies with the different materials; wool, for instance, takes up more water than linen, while the latter takes up and gives off its watery contents more rapidly than the former. The more the air is displaced by water from the clothes, the less will be their power of retaining the heat; in other words, they will conduct the heat more rapidly, and hence we are quickly chilled by wet garments.

The Sczaroch.

The Russians, it is said, have adopted a new shell which, from its formidable character, according to recent experiments, is attracting much attention on the part of military authorities. The following description of the new projectile is going the rounds of the scientific press. It is well known that the ordinary elongated bolt will not permit of a ricochet fire, and as this species of firing is very effective against masses of troops, the loss is a matter of considerable moment. The sczaroch, as the new projectile is called, is either a percussion or a time shell, combined with a shot. The latter ricochets beyond the point of explosion of the bursting charge. The shell portion is a simple iron cylinder, to one end of which is secured by a thin sheet of lead a spherical shot. On leaving the gun the combined projectile acts like an ordinary elongated shell, but as soon as the explosion of the charge takes place the cylinder flies to pieces, while the shot, impelled with the additional velocity ricochets for hundreds of feet ahead. In firing at batteries it is claimed that the double effect of this projectile comes into excellent use, as the shell might be exploded among the guns, while the ball would strike far in the rear among the reserves; or while the shell might burst in the front rank of an advancing column, the ball would continue its course through several succeeding columns.

The Religion of English Royalty.

Queen Victoria is the legal head of the Episcopal Church of England and the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. When she is in England her Presbyterianism is technically called "dissent," and when in Scotland her Episcopalianism there becomes "dissent." She has a morbid hatred of ritualism. The Prince of Wales is inclined to ritualistic ceremonies, while his eldest sister, the Princess of Germany, is a Lutheran; his brother-in-law, Lord Lorne, is a Presbyterian; another brother-in-law, the Prince Imperial of Prussia, is a Protestant Lutheran; a sister-in-law, the Duchess of Edinburgh, is a Greek Catholic; her husband is a Low Church Episcopalian; the other brothers and sisters are Episcopalians and Presbyterians by turn, their particular creed depending upon their residence. The Princess of Wales clings to the faith she was taught in Denmark.

THE Missouri, Kansas and Texas railway is a deservedly popular route to the Southwest. Those who desire to reach points in Missouri, Kansas, the Indian Territory, or Texas, situated on or adjacent to its lines, will find that there are very few transfers, that they will make quick time, and can have all the conveniences and comforts of modern railway travel. The genial general passenger agent of the road, Mr. Thos. Dorwin, at Sedalia, Mo., will cheerfully furnish information in reference to general or excursion rates over this road

A Romance of Portsmouth.

T. B. Aldrich, writing of the Stavers House, Portsmouth, says: "One of the romantic episodes of the place has been turned to very pretty account by Longfellow in the last series of 'The Tales of a Wayside Inn'—the marriage of Gov. Benning Wentworth with Martha Hilton, a sort of second edition of King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid. Martha Hilton was a poor girl, whose bare feet and ankles and scant drapery when she was a child, and even after she was in the bloom of her teens, used to scandalize good Dame Stavers, the innkeeper's wife. Standing one afternoon in the doorway of the Earl of Halifax, Dame Stavers took occasion to remonstrate with the sleek-limbed and lightly draped Martha, who chanced to be passing the tavern, carrying a pail of water, in which, as the poet neatly says, 'the shifting sunbeam danced.' 'You Pat! you Pat!' cried Mrs. Stavers, severely; 'why do you go looking so? You should be ashamed to be seen in the street.' 'Never mind how I look,' says Miss Martha, with a merry laugh, letting slip a saucy brown shoulder out of her dress; 'I shall ride in my chariot yet, ma'am.' Fortunate prophecy! Martha went to live as servant with Gov. Wentworth at his mansion at Little Harbor, looking out to sea. Seven years passed, and the 'thin slip of a girl,' who promised to be no great beauty, had flowered into the loveliest of women, with a lip like a cherry and a cheek like a rose—a lady by instinct, one of nature's own ladies. The Governor, a lonely widower, and not too young, fell in love with his fair handmaid. Without stating his purpose to any one Gov. Wentworth invited a number of friends (among others the Rev. Arthur Brown) to dine with him at Little Harbor on his birthday. After the dinner, which was a very elaborate one, was at an end, and the guests were discussing their tobacco pipes, Martha Hilton glided into the room and stood blushing in front of the chimney place. She was exquisitely dressed, as you may conceive, and wore her hair three stories high. The guests stared at each other, and particularly at her, and wondered. Then the Governor rising from his seat,

'Played slightly with his ruffles, then looked down,
And said unto the Reverend Arthur Brown:
"This is my birthday; it shall likewise be My wedding day, and you shall marry me!"'

"The rector was dumbfounded, knowing the humble footing Martha had held in the house, and could think of nothing cleverer to say than 'To whom, your Excellency?' 'To this lady,' replied the Governor, taking Martha Hilton by the hand. The Rev. Arthur Brown hesitated. 'As the Chief Magistrate of New Hampshire I command you to marry me!' cried the firm old Governor. And so it was done, and so the pretty kitchen maid became Lady Wentworth, and did ride in her own chariot after all. She wasn't a woman if she didn't drive by Stavers Hotel."

BIG HOME-STRETCH.—"I conversed," says a writer, "with a racist to-day. He told me how he won a race in New Haven. For four weeks he mixed soft rubber with the horse's oats, and every day he hitched that horse to a post and opened a blue-cotton umbrella in his face, making him pull pack, stretching his neck awfully. Then when he shut his umbrella the horse would stop pulling, and his neck would resume its original length. He got the horse's neck very elastic, and on the day of the race, as his and other horses were on the home-stretch, side by side, just at the finish, the driver struck this man's horse a blow behind his ears, and his neck shot out almost a rod, winning the race by a neck. It is said to be the biggest home-stretch on record."

THE REMINGTON REVOLVER.—The name of Remington is known the world over as that of the inventor and manufacturer of the famous Remington printing press, the Remington rifle, and the Remington sewing machine. The name has recently acquired fresh fame in connection with the Remington revolver, one of the most effective weapons ever invented—as superior to Colt's as the latter is to the old-fashioned blunderbuss. This pistol, elegantly nickel-plated, and accompanied by 100 cartridges, is being given away to canvassers for THE CHICAGO LEDGER. Send seven names and $10 to the LEDGER Company, Chicago, and procure a Remington revolver for nothing.

AN invention is now on exhibition in Liverpool by which oil or glycerine is made to perform the functions of steam, by the same means—application of heat—which expands the oil placed in small cylinders, from which it is claimed a pressure of 10,000 pounds per square inch may be obtained without the danger of steam explosion, which prevents using a pressure of more than 200 pounds to the square inch generally. In this case an explosion would only crack the cylinder containing the oil, it is claimed. The application of this process has been made to a printing press and a punching and riveting machine, which are on exhibition.

THE ruins of an ancient city, supposed to have been a mile square, have recently been discovered on the banks of the Rio Grande, near the boundary line between Colorado and New Mexico. The buildings appear to have been chiefly of adobe. In a cave was found a large earthen vessel containing pieces of a human skeleton.

JONES is always finding out queer fellows. He found out a man the other day who was always unfair in all his remarks. The only way Jones could account for it was, that when the man was young he fell down on the sidewalk and knocked all his brains into one side of his head. Therefore he can't help being one-sided in his ideas.

GLUE FOR WOUNDS.—Glue of best quality on a cloth placed over a flesh wound is said to be not only a speedy curative but a formidable protection against further injury. When dry it shrinks, holding the wound tight and firm. Every two or three days the wound should be dressed and fresh application of glue be made.

Politeness Extraordinary.

When the "Te Deum" for the victory was celebrated, Thiers and MacMahon both attended the solemn ceremony in the church at Versailles. Two arm-chairs had been placed near the high altar, one for Madame the wife of the Marshal, the other for Mme. Thiers, wife of the President of the Republic. Mme. MacMahon, born Duchess of Castres, understood her position, and, knowing that the right is the place of honor, modestly seated herself on the left. While the Duchess was still kneeling, Mme. Thiers arrived.

"Dear Madame, your chair is on the other side!"

"You are too good, Madame! Really I cannot consent."

"Take it, I beg!"

"Since you desire it; but really you embarrass me!" And Mme. MacMahon rose from her knees and betook herself to the right and continued her prayers, while Mme. President Thiers knelt ostentatiously at the left. The ceremony over Mme. MacMahon expressed her acknowledgments for the courtesy of Mme. Thiers.

"You have nothing to thank me for," the latter replied. "You did not know, of course, that when I came in you were occupying my place!"

"Your place! On the left, Mme. Presidente?"

"Certainly, Mme. Marshale. The Queens of France always placed themselves at the left of the altar. It was the only place, indeed, where the Queen did not seat herself on the right; it is so in order that the Queen might be first under the hand of the Bishop as he turns to give the benediction."

The gratitude of Mme. MacMahon, born a Castres, for this lesson in royal etiquette which the daughter of M. Dosne had condescended to give her, may be imagined.—Galaxy.

Recollections of a Dentist's Shop.

Mark Twain, in his new book about England, tells how he had the toothache one night in London, and gives some pleasing recollections of the dentist's shop which he was wont to patronize when he lived in Elmira. He says: "One night that tooth did jump, and every time it jumped it raised my head right off the pillow. How I did lie awake and think about that dentist's shop in Elmira, where I had been under torture so many times—of those pretty dental instruments, so polished and so cold! How I did long to lay my cheek against one—one of those short, thick, heavy, twisted chaps, with the bow-legged, fluted, and curved handles and short hawk-bill jaws! How I reveled in delight at the thought of having such a thing clutch my refractory tooth, and 'yank it!' With what pleasurable emotions came crowding into my mind the recollections of that dentist and his room and its fixtures—his big easy chair, with the pretty, white-curtained window before it, and the nice, big, red glass spitton to the left, with the hole in the bottom, and the bits of wet cotton and the bright pieces of gold and streams of blood-stained saliva on the sides. And then the pretty little bureau with the bottles on the top, and the little yellow drawers which he jerks out so gently when seeking for some new and more delicate instrument of torture. And then the beautiful little round, velvet-covered stand on the gas fixture, covered with the nice drills and pretty files, and the lovely little crowbars with the stained ivory handles, and the long steel crochet needle with which he hunts for new cavities, and the little round pasteboard box full of gold 'plugs,' and the dirty little napkin and the rubber ball syringe, and the singular smell of his thumb, and all that! Oh, how nice!"

A GEORGIA planter drained his rice swamp last year, and planted the ground with corn last spring. A hybrid crop is his reward, the stalk, blades and cob being that of corn, while the kernels on the cob are rice.

FOUR times as many patents were issued in this country last year as were granted in England during the same time.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MARK YOUR TOOLS.

You can easily mark your name upon steel by a process called etching. Coat over the tools with a thin layer of wax or hard tallow, by first warming the steel and rubbing on the wax, warm until it flows, and let it cool. When hard mark your name through the wax with a graver and apply some aquafortis (nitric acid); after a few moments wash off the acid thoroughly with water, warm the metal enough to melt the wax, and wipe it off with a soft rag. The letters will be found etched into the steel.

HENS' TEETH.

"Scarce as hens' teeth." This is an old saw. Yet you should see to it that your fowls are possessed of good teeth. Not natural ones, exactly, neither artifical ones, but natural artifical ones, in the shape of gravel stones, with which they my triturate the food in their gizzards. Hens' teeth comprise no incisors, no canines, but are all grinders. The flatish, or scaly gravel is not suitable, but a form approaching the spherical is to be preferred. If your neighborhood is not gravelly, blocks of granite or quartz may be reduced to irregular, angular fragments, which are excellent. Shells of the quahog or round clam pounded serve the double purpose of grinding and affording a supply of lime for the formation of egg shells, and on this account are better than oyster shells.—Canada Farmer.

FINE AND COARSE HAY.

Producers are sometimes puzzled to know why city buyers generally ask for coarse, well-matured hay in preference to the more tender and in reality more nutritious kinds. The Live Stock Journal thus enlightens them: "City men feed hay for a different purpose than the farmer. The farmer feeds it for its nutriment and as a principal food, while the city man regards grain as the cheapest food, and only gives sufficient hay to make bulk in the stomach, and for the purpose of health. Coarse, well-matured timothy serves this purpose better than the early cut and fine grass. They do not desire such hay as will tempt the horses to eat too much of it. Straw would answer this purpose, if cut and mixed with the grain, about as well. But farmers should be contented with this practice of the city customer, for it enables them to sell their poorest hay for the best price, and to retain the best quality for home consumption."

MULCHING APPLE TREES.

If mulching was not attended to in the spring the following is a good time to have it done. Then, strawey manure and such material could be obtained for the purpose; now, it will be a good plan to cut some swale hay, or trim up the coarse grass and brakes growing in the pastures or along the road-sides to be used as a mulch. One of the best orchardists in Kennebec county informs us that he has noticed the most excellent results from mulching bearing fruit trees in August, and some of the heaviest crops of apples he ever obtained he attributes to the use of mulching at this season. If the material used does not decay sufficiently before winter sets in, it may be a good plan to throw it away from the trees a little, that it may not afford lodgment for the mice, as they are very liable to injure young trees in winter by gnawing the bark, and the mulch, if it is not pretty thoroughly decayed furnishes them just the house they like. Hence the advantage of putting on the mulch early in spring—but it is better to be put on now than not at all. And, considering its great advantages, it is not a little surprising that orchardists do not practice mulching to a greater extent than they do. It is the very best means for promoting the life and growth of young trees, and the orchardist who neglects it ought never to eat of the fruit thereof.—Maine Farmer.

DON'T FEED TOO MUCH CORN.

It is evident that much of the disease that affects swine in this country comes from feverish food. While we do not agree with the theory that heavy corn feeding produces cholera, and that it is the chief cause of this troublesome epidemic, nearly every feeder of hogs will admit that constant and excessive corn feeding to hogs is dangerous and should be avoided. The following from the Western Farmer is good advice, and should be followed, as much for the purpose of preventing disease as for economy:

The indications are decidedly in favor of a good price for corn during the summer and next fall and winter. In view of this, it is especially important that farmers should take provision to secure as much growth and flesh for their stock during the summer as practicable, and to provide food that will take the place of corn to some extent. If there is a good field of clover for the hogs, this will save the corn during the summer. We wish there was more attention paid to root growing for stock feeding. Some farmers have found peas a profitable crop for feeding from the field, sown either alone or with oats. A great growth of pumpkins can be secured and they are well worth their cost. Corn thickly sown in drills is not only valuable for cattle, but for hogs in the early fall.

We would substitute artichokes for pumpkins, and plant them in a field by themselves.

TREATMENT OF HORSES.

Mere hard work does not break down horses, unless it is carried to that extent which becomes cruelty, when it deserves some rebuke. Good feed, with good care, will sustain ordinary or extraordinary horses through the most severe requirements that ever ought to be put upon them. If a man abuses his own strength and endurance it forms no justification for excessive strain put upon his animals. He takes extra burdens in the hope of gaining a reward thereby, which becomes his personal possession and serves him, if he chooses so to regard it, as compensation for his abuse of personal strength. But there is no such hope for the poor patient animals which contribute of their very life to aid his desires. A horse at twenty should be in his prime. Any well kept farm or road team is really much better for all performances during the years from twelve to twenty, than from four to twelve; and yet it is a notorious fact that a twelve year old horse among our people is regarded as far down the decline, and if put in the market is viewed with suspicion, because it is supposed he can not last long, having done so much service. The truth is that his debility comes of shameless abuse. The horse does not reach full maturity until with good care and kind treatment he has attained eight or nine years of age, and it is equally true that a large portion of our horses, probably much more than half of all the number, never develop their full power because of early abuse upon them.—Husbandman.

HEALTH OF FARMERS.

Massachusetts is winning an honorable reputation for the excellence of her statistical reports. Among the most valuable of these is that of the Board of Health, which devotes a number of pages to the health of the agricultural population. The facts, it is said, are gathered from the reports of leading physicians in the State. The diseases to which farmers are most subject are, in the order of their frequency, rheumatism, dyspepsia, fever, ague, lung diseases and consumption. These, and other diseases not named, are produced by overwork, improper diet, exposure, and defective dwellings. The remedy for the evil effects of overwork is simple and obvious, namely, don't. Easier said than done, of course, especially in Massachusetts; but if one's whole mind is given to solving the problem, something may be effected. In regard to diet, the report says: Bad bread is common; much of it made with unwholesome substitutes for yeast; meat is almost always fried; too much pork and beans are used; pies and cakes are too plenty; the diet is not sufficiently varied; coffee, tea and water are too freely used; (the element last named, we suppose, being used in excess internally rather than externally), too much fat used in cooking and baking. The advice which follows is a natural deduction from the foregoing: Use more fresh and less salt meat; substitute broiling and roasting for frying; eat more fruits and vegetables, and fewer pies, cakes and sweetmeats; make better bread, and, finally, abjure feather beds and ventilate sleeping apartments better. For some of these evils we can see no cure but co-operation. Fresh meat, for instance, can hardly be obtained in some parts of the country, and if obtained would probably be cut up and cooked in such inartistic fashion as would not develop its most nutritious qualities. This and the other faults of farmers' diet would find a natural solution in co-operation. If the farmers will confine their attention more to such practical questions as are suggested by the report, there will be less dyspepsia. It has been noted, too, by intelligent observers, that farmers are more subject to the attacks of disease in the fall than at any other time. This is doubtless due to the overtaxing of the system during the busy season. A change of scene and associations, even if only for a few hours, will often do much to counteract the effects of this exhaustion. Go fishing or hunting, if you cannot take more elaborate recreation; but try at all events to secure for all hands a short recess when the harvest is over—Christian Union.

Household Helps.

Wild Crab Apple Jelly.—Cover the fruit with water and boil until soft, then strain; add one pound of sugar to each pint of juice; boil from fifteen to twenty minutes.

All plants require to be potted tightly, for if the soil is left loosely about their roots the plants often die. When the roses have been well trimmed and potted, soak the pots in water for a few moments, letting the soil become thoroughly wet; then place them in a cool, shady location, and let them remain there until there is danger of a hard frost.

Ham Dressed in Claret.—Take a glass of claret, a teaspoonful of sugar, and one of chopped onion; place in a frying-pan; when the claret boils place in the rashers of ham, not cut very thick; cool well, and serve with the sauce. This is a most appetizing dish.

Measure or Fourth Cake.—One cup of butter, two of sugar, three of flour, and four eggs, with a very little carbonate of potash, dissolved in four tablespoonfuls of milk, or two of wine, and a little nutmeg. To have the cake light and fine, the eggs should be well-beaten, yelks and whites separately, and stirred in lightly after having rubbed the butter and sugar to a cream.

The very common use of soda for washing linen is very injurious to the tissue, and imparts to it a yellow color. In Germany and Belgium the following mixture is now extensively and beneficially used: Two pounds of soap are dissolved in about five gallons of water as hot as the hand can bear it; then next is added to this fluid three large sized tablespoonfuls of liquid ammonia and one spoonful of best oil of turpentine. These fluids are incorporated rapidly by means of beating them together by a small birch broom. The linen is then soaked in this liquid for three hours, care being taken to cover the washing-tub by a closely-fitting woolen cover. By this means the linen is thoroughly cleansed, saving much rubbing, time and fuel.

Sheep's Hearts Roasted.—Having washed the hearts, stuff each with an onion parboiled and then minced fine, two tablespoonfuls of bread-crumbs, half a teaspoonful of chopped or dried sage, and sufficient black pepper and salt to season highly. Press the stuffing well into the hearts, and, if necessary, fasten a little muslin over the top to keep it in. Whilst roasting baste frequently. They may also be baked, but care must be taken not to let them get dry. Any heart that may be left is excellent hashed.

A Nice Pudding Sauce.—Mix one cup sugar, four teaspoonfuls of corn starch and just cold water enough to dissolve thoroughly, then pour on a cup of boiling water and let it boil twenty minutes or half an hour. Then add two tablespoonfuls of good cream. Flavor with currant, strawberry or raspberry juice. In making sauce if the flour and sugar water boil a good while the sauce looks clearer and nicer; common white flour is just as good as corn starch. Use a little more water than the recipe, so as to allow for boiling away.

The Bartlett Pear Tree.

The Suffolk County Journal, published at Boston Highlands, says: Two weeks ago we acknowledged the receipt of some pears taken from the original Bartlett pear tree, which stands on land owned by Joseph H. Chadwick, Esq., between Magazine street and Woodward avenue, said land being part of the old Bartlett estate, and we promised to say something more about the tree. We are indebted to Allen Putnam, Esq., whose wife is a daughter of the late Enoch Bartlett, for whom the pear was named, for the following interesting particulars:

A Capt. Brewer built the house in which Mr. Bartlett spent the last forty years of his life. Brewer built in 1806, and report, or rather tradition, says that soon after having built the house he ordered from Europe fruit trees of various kinds, apples, pears, cherries, peaches, plums, etc., in sufficient quantity to stock five acres of land. Subsequently the Brewer family parted with the estate, and in 1821 Mr. Bartlett moved on to it, and before that year closed had purchased it. Among pears which he had sent to market and exhibited to pomologists, were some very fine ones not previously known; soon they were called by his name, Bartlett. There were two trees of this kind in the original planting, both of which are now living, and are productive of fruit of good size and quality. Those two may properly be called the parents of the mass of Bartlett pear trees in America, though doubtless many have been imported since, for the pear is of English origin, though it is said not to develop well on European soil.

The larger of the two original trees stands upon Mr. Chadwick's land, as stated above. Ten years ago, more or less, many of its branches had become much decayed, and nearly the whole top was cut off from the trunk, which seemed sound and healthy. Since then a new top has grown, which promises to live and bear fruit for fifty years to come, if properly cared for. It is probably at least sixty-five years since the tree was imported, and, if so, its age can hardly be less than seventy years.

A Matrimonial Sensation.

A singular story comes to us from Westmoreland, and I feel that no injustice will be done the parties by giving the facts as they have thus far occurred. There are two residents of that town (whom we will consider Jones and Smith), whose land "joins." Jones is a farmer and has a daughter who will be sixteen years of age in a few weeks. His neighbor Smith (who is in the employ of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroad Company) has among his children a boy who will be sixteen years of age next January, and to whom it was his intention to give a trade and educate till he should attain his majority. Last April Mr. Smith indentured his son to farmer Jones for a period of six or seven months, and at the expiration of that time the boy was to go to school. An attachment sprang up between the young people, and a few days ago young Smith asked his father's consent to the union, saying that Farmer Jones favored it. Smith called on Jones a few days subsequently, who denied giving his consent to the matrimonial arrangement, and told Smith in straight English that his son had lied. After Smith left the house, Jones is said to have told young Smith that his father proposed locking him up the next morning. What particularly followed is not known, save that these two children were packed off to the church in Lowell and legally married, young Smith wearing a suit of clothes belonging to Jones' oldest boy. As soon as Mr. Smith was informed of the marriage he saw his boy and made this proposition: To stay at the home of Farmer Jones three nights in the week, and at his (Smith's) the remaining four nights, which would insure going to school and a trade, as a start down the matrimonial stream. Up to yesterday, young Smith had not reported, and "All's quiet along the lines."—Correspondence Utica Herald,

A dog show was the principal feature to-day, and I am extravagantly fond of dogs. The afternoon I came into the city I found two mastiffs in the depot. In the confusion I thought they were two freight cars that had by some inscrutable means got off the track. I was glad to find they were dogs. The larger of the two was called the champion of England, and added other laurels by carrying off the prize at the show. This was the largest dog I ever saw; it was the largest dog any two people ever saw. I thought at first I would buy him, but partly hesitated on learning the price—$1,000—and completely gave up the idea before I saw him out of the depot. He was secured by a chain in the hands of an attendant, a man who appeared to be in a chronic state of perspiration and protestation. And he was an erratic dog. He made violent and entirely unexpected dashes at various objects or openings, and wherever he went the perspiring and protesting individual was sure to go. He snapped him off his feet every other minute, and in the intervals hauled him oversquare-cornered trunks, bumped him against other people with luggage in their hands, or shoved him over highly indignant but utterly helpless little boys, whose unrestrained curiosity had led them too close to the performance. The last I saw of the keeper (?) he was passing through the door in charge of the mastiff, a boy was running after with his hat, and people on the sidewalk were appropriating elevated places with spotless alacrity.—Manchester Letter.

Northern Property-Holders in an Alabama County Protest Against Williams' Slanders.

An Eating-House "Outrage" in Mississippi—How the Negroes Abuse Themselves.

"OUTRAGES" IN ALABAMA.

The following document has been forwarded to the Attorney-General at Washington:

Huntsville, Ala., Oct. 5, 1874.

To the Hon. George H. Williams, Attorney-General of the United States:

We, the undersigned, Northern men, now citizens of Madison county, State of Alabama, belonging some of us to the Republican and some to the Democratic parties, earnestly protest against the truthfulness of the reports recently forwarded to you by Z. E. Thomas, United States Marshal for the Northern District of Alabama. We are constrained to believe that they were made solely for political purposes, and to injure this community abroad. We live in various parts of the county, and this statement contains the individual knowledge of each of us. We know that no disturbance of the kind mentioned by Mr. Thomas could have transpired without that fact being known to some of us. We state that no such disturbances are within our knowledge, and we are sure that none such have occurred. We know that Republican meetings, both day and night, have been held all over the county during the pending political canvass, and no disturbance nor attempt at disturbance has occurred at any one of them. We are property-holders, and feel deeply interested in the welfare of the county. Some of us take an active interest in politics, and we feel as safe in doing so, both in our person and property, as if we lived in Massachusetts or New York. We have no objections to the presence of Federal troops in our midst—they are generally well-behaved and orderly, and always bring money into the country—but the impression sought to be conveyed by Mr. Thomas, that their presence is necessary to protect Republicans from insult or danger, in the expression of their opinion or the exercise of their privileges, is a libel upon the community, and Mr. Thomas should either be required to support it by proof, or he should be removed from office as unworthy of trust.

NEGROES AND LADIES.

[Cor. of the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

Holly Springs, Miss., Oct. 12.—This morning at Sixty-two Mile Siding, an eating stand on the New Orleans and St. Louis and Chicago railroad, two miles north of Canton, Miss., an outrageous and unlawful trespass upon individual rights was perpetrated. Quite a number of prominent Radicals of this State and Louisiana, mostly colored, were passengers on the north-bound train that breakfasts at Sixty-two Mile Siding, on their way to the Radical Convention which is assembling at Chattanooga. Among the number may be mentioned Shadd, the negro Speaker of the Mississippi House of Representatives; Lynch, a negro Congressman; Pease, a United States Senator; Avery, a member of the Legislature; Gibbs, the State School Superintendent; Ireland, the negro President of Alcorn University; Compton, Superintendent of the State Asylum; Hill, the negro Secretary of the State of Mississippi. As the passengers filed into breakfast, they were assigned to their seats by Maj. Raphael, the proprietor. One or two gentlemen, in the hurry attendant upon such occasions, happened to take seats at the ladies' tables, but, as soon as informed of it, arose and went to their alloted seats. Hardly had these left the ladies' table, when the above-named crowd of radical disciples gathered around it and sat down.

Instantly Maj. Raphael approached them and told them they were at the ladies' table, asking them in polite terms to exchange for one equally as good provided near by.

Ireland (colored) threw his clenched fists violently upon the table and said: "We will eat it upon this table or fight, just as you please. No give away in this party." Maj. Raphael, seeing that they were determined to hold their places and carry their point, told them that his waiters should not serve them. Amid noisy behavior and much boasting, they made their breakfast from what was on the table, offering the usual price for their meal as they departed, which Maj. Raphael declined to receive.

Dr. Wm. M. Compton encouraged these fellows by sitting at the same table with them, and thereby participating in their indecent conduct. He was once a distinguished and respected citizen of this place.

Pinchback was aboard of the train, but did not come out.

These lawless men made a boast before they reached the eating stand here that they intended to repeat at dinner what they had done at breakfast; but, as many of our citizens happened to be at the depot when the train arrived, they very wisely stood in the background.

HOW THE NEGROES ABUSE THEMSELVES.

[From the Nation.]

The theory on which most Northern men refuse their sympathy, and on which the Conklings and Mortons use the Southern disturbances as capital for the Republican party, and as reasons why, whatever it does or leaves undone, it should be kept in office, is that the whites of the South will not let the negroes alone, but keep murdering and harassing them, and, if it were not for the interference of the Federal troops, would reduce them to "practical slavery." Now, if this theory were correct, the negroes ought to be worse off in the States in which the whites are most numerous and powerful and happiest, and most secure in those States in which they are themselves the largest proportion of the population. We have been for some time, however, struck by the fact that the complaints of turbulence, and the call for infantry, cavalry and artillery, and the thanks to God that we "had a soldier in the White House," come from those States in which there are most negroes, or, in other words, in which the whites ought to be most cowed and submissive. Impelled by this suggestion, we examined the census of 1870, in connection with as honest reports as we can get, both public and private, of the condition of the various Southern States. Those we have used here are, however, those of the Republican press, most eager to magnify Southern disorders.

States	Population.		Political condition.
	White.	Colored.
Ala...	521,384	475,510	"Reign of terror;" "Midnight assassins;" "No safety for the colored men;" "Thousands begging to be taken back to slavery."
Ga....	638,926	545,142	Perfect peace and great material prosperity.
La....	362,065	364,210	Great oppression of the colored man; constant attempts to rob and murder him; "Reign of terror."
N. C..	678,470	391,650	Tolerably and increasingly peaceful.
Va....	712,089	512,842	Peaceful and prosperous.
Miss.	382,896	444,201	No safety for the blacks; "Need of more troops."
Md...	605,497	175,391	No talk of colored wrongs whatever.
Fla...	96,057	91,689	Peaceful, but white men very designing and dangerous. Need great vigilance from the colored man's friends.
Mo...	1,603,146	118,071	Great prosperity; more or less brigandage, but white men the objects of it; no colored oppression whatever.
Tenn.	936,119	322,331	More or less disorder, but colored men not specially the victims of it.
Ky...	1,098,692	222,210	A great deal of impartial brigandage; no colored problem whatever.
Ark...	362,115	122,169	No oppression of the colored man whatever; no disturbance between races.
S. C..	289,667	415,814	Terrible oppression of the colored man; "Masked robbers and assassins;" need of troops everywhere; whites untameable and bloodthirsty.

Now, the conclusion we draw from the foregoing is that in those States in which the whites, in virtue of their numbers, take and hold the State government beyond all paradventure, there is as much order and security for blacks as for whites, and there is financial purity and considerable prosperity; while in these States in which the blacks have the majority, or the two races are equal in numbers, there is constant disorder and violence and great material depression. The meaning of this is that the whites are restive under the rule of poor ignorant negroes led by Northern thieves, defaulters, and adventurers, and try in wild and lawless ways to get rid of their oppressors. It furnishes a complete answer to those who say the negroes cannot trust the whites to govern them. Where they are forced to trust them, all goes well.

Montana, Louisiana and Alabama.

Virginia City and Helena are both anxious to be the capital of Montana Territory. Hitherto, they have had the honor turn and turn about. An obliging Legislature has several times submitted the question to the popular vote, and the vote has generally been in favor of the city which did not happen, at that moment, to be the seat of the law-making power. A few weeks ago the final vote (for the time being) was taken. It was very close. The first report showed a small majority for one city. There is no doubt that this report was correct. We believe that neither city denies this. When the official returns were made, however, it was discovered that the vote of one county was exactly transposed. Instead of 300 to 25 for one city, it was returned as 300 to 25 for the other. The letter of the law forbade going behind the official figures. Yet they were manifestly wrong. The transposition of this county vote transposed the majority from one city to the other. In this dilemma, Attorney-General Williams was appealed to. He was asked to use the powers of the general government to authorize a recount. After due consideration the Attorney-General replied that the government possessed no power whatever in the case, and that nothing could be done. Mr. Williams' failure in the Credit Mobilier suit has not inspired anybody with a high degree of confidence in his legal acumen, but it is nevertheless strange that he should have forgotten in this case precedents which, as he helped to create them himself, should have been fresh in his memory. We will mention two. The Attorney-General, upon recalling them, will doubtless hasten to change his Montana decision.

In Louisiana, a Federal Judge, backed by Federal bayonets and Attorney-General Williams, went behind the legal, official returns and kicked them into outer darkness. Not satisfied with this achievement, he then manufactured imaginary returns, which made William Pitt Kellogg Governor of Louisiana. This rejection of official returns has since been sustained by the whole power of the Federal administration, under the advice of Attorney-General Williams.
